"What has thus been discovered is an assurance that more will follow. It was antecedently improbable that any reference at all would have been met with on the monuments of Egypt to the descendants of Jacob. When the Israelites escaped from their house of bondage they were merely a body of runaway serfs, of whom the Egyptian scribe was likely to take little notice. Nor were the disasters which accompanied their flight likely to be chronicled by the Egyptians; it was the victories and glory of the Pharaoh that were recorded on stone and papyrus, not the plagues which fell upon his subjects or the destruction of his troops in the waters of the sea."

The Sunday School

Christ, the Good Shepherd

S. S. Lesson for March 10. John 10 : 1-16 ; Golden Text, John 10 : 11

THE Pharisees had excommunicated the blind man because he had become a disciple of the Lord Jesus. It was to them he spoke the parable with which the chapter begins. "Verily, verily I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." You who cast out of your synagogue a man who has followed him of whose Messiahship he has the standing proof in the miracle wrought in his own body. Such a shepherd robs "the Chief Shepherd" (I. Peter 5: 4), of his sheep, and he robs the sheep of their portion.

The primary necessity, in order to be a true shepherd, is that the teacher himself must first be saved. If he knows the Door, because he has entered in and found pasture, he knows how to direct the sheep to enter in. If he has not entered in, he persecutes those who do enter: "Ye shut the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in (Matt. 23: 13), said our Lord to the scribes and Pharisees, who had entered into the sheepfold through the schools of theology which had become laden with man's traditions (Matt. 15: 1-9).

Poor sheep whose shepherd has never trodden the mountain path on which he is leading them! It is essential for a shepherd that he should know and prove the way himself before he ventures to lead the sheep thither. Theology has its place, but it can never be a substitute for personal experience of the way of salvation, and if theology is put in the place of a sound conversion to God by any minister of the Gospel, the people under his charge are to be pitied. If a minister is not born again and has not become a new creature in Christ Jesus, his theological training and his ordination are a climbing up some other way. Both are valuable, and are in God's order in the case of one who has first come into the fold with the sheep by the door. It is a man's acquaintance with God which qualifies him to teach others of God, and this is the case not only with ministers of the Gospel, but with Sunday School teachers, district visitors, etc., also. We cannot lead others farther than we have ourselves gone.

Did the Lord Jesus himself then pass through the door? Verses 3 and 4 seem to refer to him. Yes, indeed: "Christ having come a High Priest of the good things to come . . . through his own blood entered in once for all into the holy place having obtained eternal redemption for us" (Heb. 9 : 11, 12, R.V.). "He that entereth in by the door is shepherd of the sheep. To him the porter openeth and the sheep hear his voice, and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. And when he putteth forth his own sheep he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice." He entered in by his own blood as Sheep and Shepherd, Sacrifice and Priest, that we sheep may also enter in.

"When he putteth forth his own sheep he goeth before them." He has never called his own sheep to take a step which he has not first himself taken in our nature upon earth. He has taught us, "Let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay," because in his lips there was found no guile. He has taught us to resist not evil because in all his life on earth under the trying criticism of the scribes and Pharisees, their insults, their mockery, their bloodthirsty persecution he never retaliated. He has taught us to love our enemies, for he has loved us even unto death when we were at enmity with him. He has taught us to deny ourselves, to take up our cross and follow him. Has he not gone before us in all these things?

A stranger will they not follow for they know not the voice of strangers. The mark of true sheep is twice in this chapter said to be that they know and hear his voice. It is the policy of the enemy of souls to substitute anything else for this indispensable characteristic of Christ's true sheep. He can tolerate any amount of religious services and forms, any amount of prayers, so long as nothing happens on God's side, and that man has no real contact with him. Satan knows that from the time any soul hears the voice of the good Shepherd he cannot maintain his new life without continued intercourse with him: he must hear, and hear again, ever anew that voice, and "they that hear shall live" (John 5 : 25). It is a dead loss to Satan's kingdom as soon as anyone really begins to listen to God and recognize his voice. No voice of man, however holy, or however high and honorable his position may be in the world, or in the church, can be a substitute for the Master's voice.

Another mark of the true sheep is, "They follow me." The tendency of human nature is to follow other men. People hate to be peculiar. The Jews wanted a king that they might be in the fashion, that they might be "like the nations." Women will wear the most hideous and grotesque things if they are in the fashion; no regard to common sense will hinder women from adopting the fashion, or being like the world. The habits of people in general are formed from what everybody does, not what is right, not what will please God. How strong then is the new principle in one of Christ's sheep which will influence and enable him to go right against the stream, and do, and speak, and dress simply with the view of following Jesus.

"I AM THE GOOD SHEPHERD AND KNOW MY SHEEP"

LESSON POINTS

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

THE excommunication of the blind man to whom Jesus had given sight, probably suggested this parable. It was a terrible punishment. An excommunicated person might not go near a place of worship; his wife and family must have nothing to do with him: he must not approach nearer to another person than six feet: and, after a time, if he did not make submission, traders were forbidden to sell him food. This punishment had been meted out by the spiritual guides of the people, to the man whose eyes had been opened. It is not surprising that Jesus was indignant. He uttered the parable in reproof and to present his idea of the true spiritual leader. The image of a sheep-fold was one familiar to the people. It was a space enclosed by a wall, and containing hovels in which the sheep might take refuge in winter and could be in safety in the uncovered space in summer. A shepherd might lead his flock in there in the evening and leaving them there in charge of the porter, who slept outside the door, might go to his home and call for them again in the morning. Christ made a double application of the picture. He saw himself typified by the door and by the Shepherd. As the door he is the way by which the sheep and the shepherd enter the fold. No one has any right to enter his church but through him. As the shepherd he is the guide and leader of his people, trying them as well that he devotes his life to them.

Entereth not by the door. Any person found in the sheepfold at night would naturally and properly be suspected of a dishonest purpose. If he had a right to be there, he would have gone to the door and the porter would have admitted him. His secret, sneaking way of getting in, implied felonious intent. "He is an honest man," says one of Shakespeare's characters, a housekeeper, who gives this certificate of character to a man whom her master found in his private room. "What does the honest man do in my closet?" is the master's pertinent question. When a man who knows nothing experimentally of Christ, is in a pulpit, the same question may properly be asked. No one is entitled to teach Christ's people who has not himself entered by the door through which the sheep are to go. He may be learned or eloquent, but unless he has given himself to Christ and learned of him he has no right in a pulpit.

The sheep follow him, for they know his voice. Travelers in Palestine have repeatedly made the experiment. The shepherd does not drive the sheep. He gives a peculiar call, something like "menah," and the sheep follow. A recent traveler listened to a shepherd and tried to imitate the call, but the sheep detected the difference and paid him no attention. The Lord's sheep are not always so wise. They hear men who boast of scholarship or have oratorical power, and they follow them into regions of doctrine where there is no spiritual food.

All that ever came before me. This does not apply to time, for, if it did, it would condemn David and Isaiah and all the Old Testament prophets. The words, in the original, describe men who presented themselves before or above Christ. A lecturer had on the platform the famous picture of the pilgrims of the Mayflower gathered on the shore while Robinson offered prayer. His lecture was on the scene depicted in the picture, and he stood in front of it with a rod pointing to the different figures. At last a rough man in the audience called to him: "Stand aside: we've seen enough of your back—let us see the picture." An old Scotchwoman, being asked her opinion of their new minister, replied: "Na good, na good. He tellit us his opinion o' this and his opinion o' that and what Ewald believed, but there was na Christ in the sermon. He is trying to steal the hearts of the people by his learning."

The Good Shepherd giveth his life. This did not refer to the death on the Cross, though that was the crown and culmination of the whole: but to the consecration of the life—the laying it down in the cause. It is like the life that some mothers lead, giving up society and pride in dress and love of pleasure and devoting themselves entirely to their children. It is a life laid down. One of our own missionaries, not long dead, left in his journal a record of the struggle he had before he gave himself to the missionary work. His parents were so proud of his success at college: the professors predicted for him a brilliant career: one of his own brothers had a large and wealthy church. What might he not hope for? But the voice of the heathen appealed to him. Finally the thought of the Good Shepherd who laid down his life for the sheep filled his heart, and he went out from country, home and friends to sink his life in the service.

He that is a hireling. Not every man who receives a salary, but the man who is attracted to the work by the salary and careth not for the sheep—the man with the hireling's spirit. It is he who flees. The story is told of the nuns in the convent of Roberval in Canada, that two years ago they were awakened from sleep by the cry of "Fire!" They could easily make their way out, but how about the children who were asleep on the upper floors? Must they be left to perish? The brave women ran upstairs from floor to floor, from room to room, dragging the children out of bed. The last child was finally brought out, but seven of the devoted women found themselves on an upper floor and their escape cut off. They had given their lives for the children and they perished in the flames.

A Mid-Winter Trip to Lapland

By SHELDON JACKSON, D.D., LL.D.

THE ANCIENT CITY OF TRONDHJEM

II.

Among the Northern Wilds

ON January 7th I arose at 6 o'clock, in order to get breakfast before taking the train at 7:27 for Trondhjem. At Hamar, where a warm breakfast was served, we changed from broad to narrow-gauge cars. Part of the way I had a compartment exclusively to myself, afterwards a white haired gentleman of commanding appearance, occupied the compartment with me. Upon changing cars, I found that my companion was Stiftsproost Chr. Hall, Hofpraedikant, Munkedamsveien 68 Christiania, a Lutheran clergyman and court preacher at Christiania. As he could talk a little English it made it very pleasant for me, after having been traveling a week among people of foreign speech, with whom I could only communicate by signs. Dr. Hall was on his way to Tonseat, to make an address before a literary society.

Our route, that day, was one of the wildest and most characteristic of Norway mountain scenery attainable by rail. In the morning we skirted Lake Majosen, which is the largest lake in Norway, being 62 miles long, 9 1-2 miles wide, and, in some portions, 1,575 feet deep. At Eidsbold, we passed near to a farm house, where, in 1814, the Norwegian Constitution was adopted. At Hamar, is a long bridge which dates back from 1152, when the bishopric was founded at that place by the papal Nuncio, Nicholas Breakspeare, an Englishman, afterwards known as Pope Adrian IV. After leaving Hamar, the train crosses over from the valley of Lake Majosen to the valley of the celebrated river Glommen, along whose winding valley it gradually ascends until the high mountain levels are reached in the neighborhood of Roros, on the dreary and inclement plateau 2,060 feet above tide water. This plateau is celebrated for the abundance of reindeer moss. As the ascent is made, the valley grows narrower and the mountains higher and more precipitous. Evergreen forests skirt the road out of which rises high mountains, in summer carpeted with yellow moss, now white with drifting snow. During the day we passed through several snow-storms, and the snow grew deeper as we advanced northward. As the night was clear and the moon full, the ride through the mountains was altogether too attractive to admit of sleep.

At midnight I reached Trondhjem, and, taking an omnibus, was soon comfortably settled at the Grand Hotel. On January 8th, as soon as the banks were opened, I made a deposit of one thousand dollars for Mr. Kjellmann, which was telegraphed to Alten, Lapland, to his credit. I also visited the Den Nordenfjeldske Kredit Bank and deposited $150 to the credit of each of the three Norwegians, who remained with the reindeer herds in Alaska; this being a portion of their salary for 1896-7. At the request of the Lapps in Alaska, I had, year by year, deposited the larger portion of their salary in this institution, so that four families that had returned a few weeks before to Lapland found $1,000 each to their credit, which made them wealthy in the eyes of their neighbors. This represents their savings for three years in the United States.

Owing to its nearness and accessibility by rail with the mountain plateaus, Trondhjem is one of the best markets in Norway for procuring reindeer moss. A few weeks previous, Mr. William Kjellmann, while enroute to Lapland, visited the traders and farmers in the neighborhood and arranged for several hundred tons of moss to be delivered at Trondhjem. I now completed that purchase of moss and arranged with Mr. E. A. Tonseth's commission house for its reception and shipment upon the steamer that was to be chartered to carry the reindeer, and which would call at that harbor to carry the moss.

Having completed all business arrangements, and a few hours remaining before the sailing of the steamer North, I took the opportunity of seeing the city. Trondhjem is a city of 30,000 inhabitants, dating back to the tenth century and is the northernmost of the European cities, being in corresponding latitude of St. Michael, Behring Sea. As early as 996, Olaf Tryggvason founded a palace and a church which he dedicated to Saint Clement. From this church grew the Cathedral, which still stands. His plans were greatly enlarged by Saint Olaf, who is regarded as the founder and patron of the city (1016). Having been killed in battle (1030), his remains were placed in a silver coffin, which weighed 225 pounds, and put on the high altar of St. Clement's Church, where it remained for 500 years, when it was removed to Copenhagen. It now attracts hosts of pilgrims. In 1151 St. Clement's Church was considerably enlarged. In 1161 additions were made to the building, among them being the Octagon Apse, which covered the relics of Saint Olaf, and during the period from 1248 to 1300 there was added the grand Nave, creating the grandest church in Scandinavia. In 1531 a terrible fire destroyed both the Cathedral and the whole town.

The adoption of the revolution, a few years later, stopped the work of restoration until 1869. About the time of the reformation a portion of the Cathedral was burned, leaving the massive stones still standing. After remaining three or four hundred years without a roof, the Norwegian government commenced repairs on the Cathedral. At that time most of the numerous churches and monasteries in Norway were swept away. In one portion of the Cathedral is a "Holy Hill," the curb-stones being worn with the rubbing of the ropes or chains in raising water for the hosts of pilgrims that centuries ago visited the place.

Trondhjem is the cradle of the kingdom of Norway—all the Norwegian kings having been crowned in the Cathedral; and formerly the Orething or Parliament, held its meetings here. In the eleventh and twelfth centuries, it was the burial place of the kings. The city has also an Academy of Science founded in 1760, which possesses a library of 70,000 volumes and a large collection of natural history antiquities. To the south of the city is the Lerfos, one of the largest waterfalls in Norway.

After dining, I went on board the steamer Vesteraalen, for Tromsoe; two or three important telegrams reaching me, I returned on shore to the telegraph office, where I was detained until after eleven o'clock. At midnight, upon the arrival of the train and mail from Christiania, the steamer Vesteraalen sailed for Tromsoe. Sunday, the 9th, was a day of squalls, of alternate rain, sleet and snow, notwithstanding which I spent much of the time on deck. During the day the steamer passed the island of Torgen (Market-Hat), a prominent hill resembling a hat floating on the sea. This island is noted for a large natural tunnel 407 feet above the sea, which passes entirely through the hill 535 feet long, with a width of thirty-six to fifty-six feet, and a height from sixty-five to 246 feet.

Towards the evening we crossed the Arctic Circle at the island of Hestmando, which bears a strong resemblance to a horseman with a long cloak falling over his horse. During the night we passed the celebrated Maelstrom, which was the wonderful natural phenomenon on the Norwegian coast that most attracted my imagination during school-boy days.

The morning of January 10th found us steaming amidst the lofty and rugged peaks of the Lofoden Islands. It was the great fishing season and fishermen were gathering to these islands from all portions of Norway and Sweden, and even from Denmark and Scotland. The season, which opens early in January, lasts until the middle of March, when 20,000 men are engaged in the trade, with an average catch of 32,000,000 of fish.

A peculiarity of the Norwegian coast is the great number of lighthouses provided by the government; the steamer no sooner passed and lost sight of one behind it than another loomed up ahead. I am informed that some of the lights are only lighted about the time the mail steamer is expected, and after it passes are extinguished. The abundance of lighthouses enables the steamer to navigate the narrow and dangerous channels between the islands with safety during the darkest nights. The greatest trouble encountered by our steamer was the thick blinding snow-storms which prevented the lighthouses from being seen.

Another peculiarity of the Norwegian government in its care for the people, which impresses a stranger, is the extent of postal and telegraphic facilities. Every important village to the northernmost bounds of the country, five degrees north of the Arctic Circle, has mail facilities and also either telegraphic or telephonic communication with the rest of the world. There are many telegraphic stations north of the Arctic Circle, and when the lines stop, communication is continued by the means of the telephone, even up to North Cape—the northernmost limit of Europe. A fast steamer carries the mail from the end of the railway at Trondhjem semi-weekly to the northernmost limit of settlements. Small steamers connect with the main mail steamers and carry the semi-weekly mail into all the villages and settlements along the many fjords, and from the end of the fjords swift reindeer teams carry the mail inland, hundreds of miles in every direction, across Norway and Sweden to the bounds of Russia. Very few of the places along the sea-coast have wharves; a large row-boat comes out to meet the steamer, exchanging mails, freight and passengers.

At 5 A.M., on January 11th, I reached Tromsoe, a city of 6,000 inhabitants, possessing a valuable museum of natural history. At Tromsoe we were transferred from the steamer Vesteraalen, to the Sigurd Jarl; at 7 A.M. were on our way to Hammerfest, which place we expected to reach that same evening, but the sea was so rough and the snow squalls so blinding that we did not reach there until 2 o'clock the following day. Hammerfest is the most northern city in the world. At this season of the year, the sun is not visible from November 18th, to January 23d. The city is lighted with electric lights. It carries on a busy trade with Russia and Spitzbergen.

As soon as the ship dropped anchor, I was transferred by row-boat directly to the steamer Nor. This is one of the small steamers which make side trips up the fjords; the special route of the Nor being the Alten fjord, at the head of which lies the village Bosekop, which was my destination.

As the steamer did not start until the following morning, I went ashore to see the town under electric light. As the school hours are from ten to two, in that city, I found the schools closed for the day, and the children thronged the streets riding down hill on sleds. The houses are built irregularly along crowded streets and are without door yards, or, at least I did not discover them in the darkness. Having business with a merchant, and going to the store, found that he went home at two o'clock to dinner and after dinner took a nap, but would return to the store at 4 P.M. I met with the same experience in calling on the highest Norwegian officials in the city, and also the British vice-Consul.

January 13th, our little steamer got under way at 7 A.M., and although in mid-winter and the whole land was covered with ice and snow, there was not a particle of ice in the ocean. The day, however, proved to be one of wind and snow-storms which added greatly to the attractiveness of the scenery as we steamed up the narrow fjord. At Bosekop, the captain gave orders to the boatmen in a row-boat, to take me up to the hotel. I was leaving the last man who could speak English; I knew scarcely a word of Norwegian, and had no interpreter. I was motioned to follow as the sled pushed out into the inky darkness. The hotel was on the first table-land above the sea, about a quarter of a mile distant from the landing, but as I floundered and stumbled over the snow-banks, it was a long quarter of a mile and I was very glad when I was at length shown into the well-lighted and well-warmed little parlor, with a good bedroom adjoining, which were my quarters for the next three weeks.

The hotel was a very good two-story log building, overlooking the sea. The man of the house came in and sat down a few minutes, but as neither of us understood the other, he soon went out, and I was left alone to make my wants known by signs.

Bosekop is the Lappish for "whale-bay," and is a small village of a few hundred people. It is of scientific interest because of the old coast lines, some of which are 200 feet above the present level of the sea. In 1882 and 1883, it was one of the stations of the International Polar Commission. It is of commercial importance, as the market of great fairs which are held annually on the first of December and third of March, to which the Lapps flock in crowds from all over Swedish and Norwegian Lapland—even from Finland. They bring reindeer flesh, butter and game (sometimes as many as ten thousand ptarmigan), which they exchange for fish, flour and groceries. It is the seat of a landsman, clergyman and physician. The clergymen, physicians and teachers through this section of Norway are provided and paid for by the government. In the immediate vicinity of the place there are a number of sacred stones and sacred mountains, and about twenty five miles away are the Vriolla-Njunnes—the famous places of sacrifice before the introduction of Christianity into Lapland.

Soon after my arrival at the hotel, I was handed a number of telegrams with reference to the work in hand. But for telegrams nearly every other day from Washington, and telegrams from Mr. Kjellmann and others in Norway in connection with the work, life at the hotel would have been exceedingly dull. The day after my arrival, the Rev. Askan Zucco-Cuccagna, an Italian Roman Catholic Priest, called to pay his respects. As I could converse in neither Norwegian, French or Italian, he attempted to carry on a conversation in Latin, which was certainly amusing if not edifying. Under the circumstances, the conversation was not very free or exciting.

On Sunday morning, January 16th, Mr. Kjellmann arrived from the interior, having been delayed two days on the mountains where he was lost in a blizzard, riding nearly all Friday and Saturday nights of the intervening day without sleep. He reported the welcome information that 500 trained deer that were ordered, together with sleds, harness and fifty drivers, had been secured.

The Interdependence of Nations

NATIONS have become neighbors, within hailing distance. This redistributes populations, products, manufactures, institutions. A half century has seen the sea-borne commerce of the world go up from twenty-seven to two hundred million tons, and steamships from a horse-power of two, to a horse-power of sixty millions; while the tonnage has about doubled, and the speed quite so. To correspond to this increase of number, size and power, Liverpool, London, New York, Boston and Philadelphia are enlarging their dock accommodations and facilities.

"In that day," says the prophet Ezekiel, "shall messengers go forth from me in ships." The commerce of the world means society in traffic, why not society in evangelization? Chaplaincies of some sort, Bible-readers, evangelists, temperance-workers or something of the kind ought to be associated with all the commercial enterprises of the Christian world. Chaplaincies not merely to bury the dead, but to save the living. It would cost very little to fit out every vessel that sails from American, English or German ports with a young man who wants to contribute some of his years of enthusiasm to the kingdom of the Lord. It would save money in life and limb, in good temper and cheer. Ought not this new attention to great international commercial enterprises to be accompanied by ministerial or lay evangelists? We think so.

Despondency

IT is noticeable that many Christian workers are in perpetual discouragement, and disheartened Christian workers are always inefficient. When a man believes that everything is going to smash, his gloom only helps moral precipitation. While we are to battle against wrong-doing, whether it be according to the law or against the law, we are to recognize that honesty and righteousness are dominant. If there be one case of domestic infelicity in a city, that one unhappy home attracts more attention and remark than a hundred thousand homes where all the inmates behave themselves as they ought. If one banker abstract public funds for his private use, that case of malfeasance calls for more remark than all the banks and insurance companies of the city, where all the affairs [illegible]

An Interesting Contest

We are making a special effort to largely increase the subscription list of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and as an extra inducement to our friends to co-operate with us in this great effort we offer for each NEW subscription sent in during the month of March, whether with or without premium, the following exceptionally liberal rewards:

For One new subscription we will give free, all charges prepaid, any one of the following books:

"Onward to Fame and Fortune," by Wm. M. Thayer, 446 pages, beautifully illustrated, bound in cloth, red and gilt;

"Home Life Made Beautiful," by Margaret E. Sangster, 448 pages, with nearly 200 illustrations; nearly 50,000 copies of this book already sold, and only a few more left;

"Stepping-Stones to Happiness," Harriet Prescott Spofford's latest and greatest work, over 35,000 sold; 496 pages, about 175 illustrations.

For Two new subscriptions, the one sending them may select any one of the following premiums:

"Around the World with Eyes Wide Open," by Dr. H. Allen Tupper, Jr. The greatest Book of Travel ever published for the price, 400 pages, nearly 300 beautiful illustrations, very handsomely bound;

"The Art of Home-Making," Margaret E. Sangster's great book for Mothers and Daughters—not a book on housekeeping, but on Home-Making; 448 pages, very generously illustrated; a magnificent specimen of modern book-making;

The Christian Herald Library No. 1, consisting of ten superb volumes. Their titles and authors are as follows:

Around the Tea Table, by T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.
Book of Golden Deeds, by Charlotte M. Yonge.
How to Get on in the World, by Major A. R. Calhoun.
The Golden Treasury, by C. H. von Bogatzky.
The Children's Portion, by Robert W. Shoppell.
A Budget of Christmas Tales [illegible]
Capital Stories [illegible]
The Citizen's Handbook, by Henry Mann.
Readings and Recitations, by B. J. Fernie, Ph.D.
Entertainment and Etiquette, by G. H. Sandison, A.M., Ph.D.

These ten books aggregate 3,200 pages, and are beautifully bound in Turkey Red and Gilt. We especially recommend lovers of good literature and those who desire to help their Sunday School Library to make an effort to get two new subscribers, either in the Sunday School, the Church, or among their friends, and then to present to their Sunday School Library the ten volumes constituting this Library.

For Three new subscribers we will send, all charges prepaid, a superb Long-Primse, Leather Bound and Leather Lined, Divinity Circuit, Red-under-Gold and Overlapping Edges, Illustrated Bible, with patent thumb index, in either the Authorized Version, or the Revised Version. Our Revised Version Bibles are the only ones in verse form conforming exactly to the Authorized Version.

For Five new subscribers we will send, all charges prepaid, one of our Superb, Genuine London Art Bibles, 1,334 pages and 852 illustrations. Elegantly Bound in Leather, Divinity Circuit, Red-under-Gold and Overlapping Edges.

This Bible is set in extra large type, and is as serviceable for home reading as for Sunday School work. The 852 beautiful pictures which it contains elucidate the text more than references and an extensive commentary could do, and they invest the Holy Scriptures with new life to old and young. The pictures illustrate scenes and explain orientalisms which heretofore were but imperfectly understood. It is the greatest of illustrated Bibles, and will prove a prize indeed to every one fortunate enough to secure it.

For Ten new subscribers we will send, freight charges to be paid by the person receiving it, one set of 15 volumes of The World-Wide Encyclopedia, containing nearly 7,000 pages and 96 maps. The regular price of this Encyclopedia is $26.00 for the 15 volumes; we sold it for $13.00, and we make this great offer now because the sets which we are to send, while absolutely new and apparently undamaged, were slightly rubbed in the handling—a blemish perceptible only to the experienced eye of a publisher.

We are in receipt of numerous letters asking us to send free, either to the writers or to some Library, or to some poor friend in whom they are interested, one or the other of the books offered above. Occasionally the case warrants compliance, but in most instances it is an effort to shift from other shoulders the burden onto ours. Now here is the opportunity, by the putting forth of a little effort, to secure any book of your choice absolutely free, and to dispose of it in any manner you may choose.

The offers made above are more liberal, in most cases, than anything we have ever before attempted in this line, and these offers will positively be withdrawn on March 31st. They are made, as before stated, with a view to largely increasing our subscription list, and we feel confident that the liberal propositions here submitted will result in large accessions.

$100 Given Away

In addition to the above rewards, we will give $100 as follows to the persons sending in the largest number of subscribers during the month of March:

For the largest list of all,	$25.00
For the next largest list,	20.00
For the next largest list,	15.00
For the next largest list,	10.00
For the Six next largest lists, each $5.00,	30.00

MAKING A TOTAL OF TEN EXTRA REWARDS, AGGREGATING $100.

SPECIAL ATTENTION!

Letters postmarked after March 31, 1899, cannot be counted to apply to this contest. Unless requested not to do so, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will publish in its second number in April the names of those to whom the rewards were paid. Now, then, let us be up and doing!

In eight weeks she has fed 35,000 hungry ones of Chicago's poor.

Regarding the growth of the Presbyterian denomination, The Interior says: "Between 1858 and 1892 the population of the United States multiplied itself seventeen times, while the Presbyterian Church, notwithstanding its offshoots and secessions, was multiplied forty-one times. During the decade between the tenth and eleventh census the population increased 24.86 per cent., while the Presbyterian Church (North) increased 39 per cent.

The Yale Missionary Band will visit New York next week to address the Young People's Societies in the interest of foreign missions. They are five graduates of Yale, who agreed to give one year to a tour through the country in an endeavor to [illegible] ary effort. The meetings commence with a service in Harlem Presbyterian Church, Madison Avenue and 125th Street, on March 11th, and will continue in various churches until March 19th.

In anticipation of the approaching fiftieth anniversary of Hiram College, Ohio, of the Disciples of Christ, an effort is making to secure its endowment by the people, through the subscriptions of one dollar and upward of 50,000 persons. The institution has brought education within reach of young people of moderate means, and has about 400 students, is well equipped with buildings, laboratories, apparatus, libraries, etc., and is out of debt. It is most widely known through the late President Garfield's former connection with it.

An appeal for prayers comes from Chinese Christians. They ask that Christians in other lands will pray for their country, for its Emperor [illegible] their present troubles a better nation. The Funeral of M. Faure

PARIS witnessed a solemn and imposing pageant on February 23d, when the remains of the late President of the French Republic were borne from the Palace of the Elysee to the historic cathedral of Notre Dame and thence to the cemetery of Pere Lachaise. The whole city appeared to take part in the national mourning, and large numbers of people came from the country districts to see the spectacle. All the stores were closed, business was suspended, and the city clothed itself in mourning garb. In the public squares a sombre effect was produced by lighting the gas lamps, which were covered with crape. The funeral procession comprised the most distinguished men in France and representatives of all the European governments. Members of both houses of the Legislature, the heads of all the Government Departments and many provincial magnates joined in the procession. President Loubet, M. Faure's successor, was a conspicuous figure, as he walked bareheaded after the hearse. The coffin had been placed in the porch of the palace on the morning of the funeral. It was put on a hearse drawn by six horses, each led by a footman. The crowd of spectators maintained respectful silence as the procession wended its way to the great metropolitan cathedral, which stands in stately majesty on an island of the Seine. An enormous catafalque seventy feet high, had been erected under the cathedral's Gothic roof. There, while mass was performed, the coffin was placed, surrounded by the floral wreaths which had been sent by European sovereigns and distinguished French citizens. At the conclusion of the ceremony, the procession re-formed and proceeded to the cemetery, where eulogies on the dead President were pronounced by the Premier and other statesmen. Contrary to the fears which had been entertained, the day passed without revolutionary outbreak. The only serious disturbance occurred after the return from the cemetery, when M. Deroulede, a deputy who is rabidly opposed to a revision of the Dreyfus case, attempted to persuade a brigade of infantry to attack the Palace of the Elysee. The General in command ordered the troops to their barracks and Deroulede accompanying them, he was locked up and prevented doing further mischief. It is such men as he who make government so difficult in France and who render the task of the President one of ceaseless anxiety. Proud as is the position of chief executive in that land, we can imagine that the words of the ancient philosopher might apply to him whom the country laid to rest in this magnificent manner:

He shall be borne to the grave and shall keep watch over the tomb; the clods of the valley shall be sweet unto him and all men shall draw after him as there were innumerable before him (Job 21:22, 23).

Progress in the Philippines

The reports received from Gen. Otis indicate that the work of establishing American authority in the Philippine Islands is steadily progressing, in spite of the desperate efforts of Aguinaldo and his gang of adventurers to make trouble. The inhabitants of the Island of Negros, one of the most important of the group, have voluntarily raised the American flag, and have sent commissioners to the American commander to offer their allegiance, and to ask protection from the insurgents. They also reported that the people of Cebu, a large island of the Visayan group, having a population of 504,076 were ready to acknowledge American authority. The navy has already taken possession of it, and a small land force of occupation was on its way when Gen. Otis reported. The character of Aguinaldo's resistance was proved on February 22, when a determined attempt was made by his agents to burn the city of Manila. Fires were set simultaneously at three widely-separated places, apparently in the hope that the American troops might not be able to extinguish so widespread a conflagration. Insurgents were posted near each fire to shoot the soldiers who were fighting the flames. For some time it looked as if the whole city was doomed, but eventually the fire was brought under control. The loss of property, however, will reach half a million dollars. Mobs were discovered massed in the outskirts of the city ready to begin the work of pillage if, as they hoped, the Americans were unable to subdue the flames. Gen. Otis has been busy dislodging them, and has driven them from their places of hiding. He believes that, with thirty thousand men, he will be able to complete the acquisition of the islands and to maintain peace. It is evident that the work of governing the islands will not be an easy one; but it will be worth doing, if we can so improve the condition of the people that they will become capable eventually of self-government. It will be well if the President, in dealing with them, follows the advice of the sage counsellor of the greatest of lawgivers:

Thou shall teach them ordinances and laws, and shalt show them the way wherein they must walk and the work that they must do. And thou shalt provide able men such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness, to be rulers . . . . Then, thou shalt be able to endure, and all this people shall go to their place in peace (Ex. 18: 20-23.)

Dead in Victory

Australian journals report the tragic result of a great bicycle race, at Sydney. There was a carnival in that city which attracted people from all parts of the colony. It is estimated that not less than ten thousand persons were on the ground when the bicycle races, which were the most important feature of the entertainment, commenced. There were fifty competitors, among whom were the fastest riders in that part of the world. When the signal to start was given, two shot ahead and they maintained their lead. The struggle for the prize lay between these two. Intense interest was manifested by the spectators when it was noticed that the two men approached the tape, side by side. One of them made a spurt, which carried him past the tape, half a wheel ahead of his antagonist. But that spurt was fatal. In the moment of victory he plunged head foremost from his wheel and was taken up dead. He had won the prize, but it was at the cost of his life. Every one sees that he was foolish; but how few recognize that there is still greater folly in the mad race for wealth in which the life and the soul itself are often sacrificed!

What is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away? (Luke 9: 25).

A Robbers' Den Under a Schoolhouse

An extraordinary discovery has been made at Mount Hope, a small frontier town in Minnesota. It was known that, somewhere in the vicinity, there was a daring robber, who had committed a series of thefts. Citizens were losing their valuables and there was no trace of the thief. At last, after many efforts, one night the man was captured red-handed. In the hope of gaining some mitigation of punishment, he agreed to disclose the hiding-place of his booty. To the surprise of the police, he led them to the schoolhouse. He opened a trap-door behind the platform and right under the teacher's desk. Descending through the opening, the police found a large subterranean room, elegantly furnished. A thick carpet was on the floor, valuable pictures were on the walls, and, on his bed, was a fifty-dollar robe. Large stores of valuables, stolen from the people of the neighborhood were concealed at one end of the room. The thief said that he spent his days sleeping while the school was in session. At night, he had gone abroad on his marauding expeditions, always taking care to get back before the school commenced in the morning. A Sunday School was organized in the building by a missionary of the American Sunday School Union, and the children met there every Sunday, oblivious of the fact that underneath them only a few feet away, a notorious criminal was lying asleep among his booty. Unhappily this is not the only instance of a bad man making a good institution a cover for his evil deeds. Christ foresaw that even his church would be so used.

It shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air lodge under the shadow of it (Mark 4: 32).

CATHEDRAL OF NOTRE DAME, THE SCENE OF M. FAURE'S OBSEQUIES

An Unexplained Catastrophe

The Wreck Commissioner's Court has just rendered a verdict in the inquiry as to the cause of the loss of the steamer Mohegan in October last, when over a hundred lives were lost. The inquiry leaves the cause as much a mystery as ever. The only cause assigned is that a wrong course was steered, which was known from the first. The Court declares that the compasses were in good condition and sufficient for the safe navigation of the vessel; that, morever, the captain was in good health and gave his personal attention to the management of the vessel; that a proper lookout was set, and that the master and chief officer observed the course of the vessel, the chief officer looking into the binnacle continually on the afternoon of the disaster. "It would seem that the loss of the vessel was due to their failure and the failure of the seaman on the lookout to see what was before their eyes and what they ought to have perceived." When inquisition is made into the loss of souls in Bible lands, there will be a like verdict:

What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? Wherefore when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes? (Isa 5: 4).

A Rhythmic Heart

A remarkable instance of a rare malady is puzzling the physicians of Cincinnati, O. The Inquirer of that city says that a violinist of national reputation has been ordered by his doctors to discontinue the practice of music, because of a painful affection of the heart. It is an affection, known to the medical profession as a "rhythmic heart." Instead of beating evenly and regularly as the heart of a healthy person does, it gives four or five quick pulsations and then makes a pause, in which a humming sound can be heard through the stethoscope. A most interesting feature in connection with the case is the accelerated action and seemingly sympathetic movement of the heart while the musician is deeply absorbed in rendering his favorite selections, the harmony and rhythm of the heart being more pronounced. As the doctors have forbidden him to play, we may infer that they think this condition of the heart dangerous. But there is one kind of musical heart from which no danger is to be apprehended, but rather the highest blessing:

Be filled with the Spirit, speaking one to another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing, and making melody in your heart to the Lord (Eph. 5: 19)

Over-reached Himself

The captain of a tug boat in New York harbor is blaming himself for a mortifying blunder. A few days ago he was out, looking for some vessel that needed a tow. He found a bark off Fire Island to which he offered his services. After some bargaining he agreed to tow the bark to port for $150. The bark furled her sails, the lines were attached and the tug boat proceeded with her charge. After an hour's towing the captain of the tug boat sighted far off on the horizon a four-masted ship. He knew, that if he could have the job of towing it to port, he would receive several hundred dollars for the service. He accordingly threw off the lines and leaving the bark to drift, hurried off to the more profitable job. But when he reached the big ship, he found to his vexation that she was already in tow of a tug boat on the off-shore side of the ship. He immediately put about, and started back at full speed for the bark he had deserted. But on overhauling her, he learned that, seeing the bark drifting during his absence, a tug boat had gone to her assistance, and had agreed to tow her into port. In dropping one prize to secure a better he had lost both. The captain of the tugboat is not the first or the only man to find that a dereliction of duty is foolish as well as wicked. Many a man in business has learned to his cost that the prophet was right in his warning:

As the partridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at the end shall be a fool (Jer. 17: 11)

How New York Cares for its Sick Poor and its Foundlings

CHARACTERISTIC SCENES IN THE LEADING HOSPITALS AND THE FOUNDLING ASYLUM: PHOTOGRAPHED SPECIALLY FOR "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD"

CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, FOUNDLING ASYLUM

CRIB ASLEEP

AIRY HALL OF FOUNDLINGS

NEW YORK has made wonderful advance within the last quarter of a century as a great philanthropic and benevolent centre. Its public benefactions have kept pace with its commercial growth, and in almost every section of the city one now finds evidence of the interest the metropolis and its influential citizens feel in the condition of the poorer classes and its vast population. Hospitals, kindergartens, libraries, art galleries, free schools, baths, and institutions of a hundred different descriptions continue to multiply and afford substantial evidence that the city is not unmindful of its paternal responsibilities, nor its wealthy people of the opportunities they enjoy for a beneficent use of their riches.

Our photographer has given us in these illustrations glimpses of some of the most interesting of the city's public institutions. There is no flower-garden or conservatory in all the world prettier than the wards and kindergartens of the New York Foundling Asylum, with its hundreds of small inmates of all sorts and sizes, with blue eyes and brown eyes, black curls and golden, in pink dresses and blue dresses. Lilliputian chairs, tables, dining-rooms, cups, mugs, saucers and cutlery are the rule throughout the great buildings, which cover a block, with principal entrance on East Sixty-eighth street. Effort is made to induce each mother, leaving a child, to remain with it for the child's sake and in her own best interests.

The larger number of mothers do not, and some can not avail themselves of this opportunity. While THE CHRISTIAN HERALD representative was walking through the building, six infant foundlings were left in the basket or creche, those who brought them giving them up definitely and permanently. In one case it was a grandmother who laid the baby in the basket, her daughter being dead, and herself unable to provide for this and other children. The instant when the foundlings are deposited is in the vestibule of the entrance. A woman bearing a child enters: her address, name, and any particulars she will give are recorded: she then lays the baby in the cradle and by that act renounces all claim on it. The Foundling Asylum accommodates [illegible] children and 300 adults. About 1,300 infants are cared for yearly by nurses outside of the institution. Many of the children are sent West. To these homes the vigilance of the institution follows and watches over them.

IN THE BIG BOYS' KINDERGARTEN

The Foundling Asylum is partly supported by [illegible]. Its benefits are irrespective of creed, nationality or color. The two resident physicians are Protestant: the Medical Board [illegible] New York's most prominent physicians [illegible] tions. The nurses are Sisters of Charity.

From every corner of the United States—from every corner as well of the American continent and in some measure [illegible]—the lame, the maimed, and the blind flock to New York City in the hope of obtaining relief through the skill of its doctors and surgeons, and through the facilities for comfort and treatment afforded in the institutions for the sick. Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, San Francisco, Atlanta, New Orleans and other cities, North, South, East and West, like the Metropolis, are Meccas for the afflicted. A first class New York hospital, therefore, is representative of all that is best in hospital service throughout the Union. A glance through the Presbyterian Hospital on Madison avenue and Seventieth street—all too cursory, though it be for the interest and importance of the subject—will give our readers some idea of how medicine and surgery have pressed into service every other art and science of the century for the benefit of the sick and the injured.

MEALS-WAITING, FOR SURE

LEAVING HER BABY

IN THE "BABIES' WARD"—FOUNDLING ASYLUM

The building occupies an entire block between Madison and Park avenues and 70th and 71st streets, with principal and dispensary entrance on 71st street. The representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, through the courtesy of Mr. Robert H. Sillman, Acting-Assistant Superintendant, was shown over the entire building, wards, private rooms, laboratories, drying-rooms, store-rooms, laundry, pantries, dining-rooms, consultation rooms, dispensaries, the X-ray room, the neat chapel and the fine operating pavilion. This pavilion is the gem of the whole establishment. The light falls on the patient from a great sky-light and three side lights. Spectators in the amphitheatre have a much clearer view of what the surgeons are doing, than in operating-rooms not so thoroughly up-to-date, where only side-lights from windows are provided. The amphitheatre seats 100 persons, and here nurses, medical students and numerous physicians visiting the city for improvement, have the advantage of witnessing operations as performed by the best surgeons of the day. Floor and walls are of white marble, except a square just under the table, and a wainscoting of eight or ten feet of dark marble,—an important innovation designed to save the doctor's eyes from the glow of a too strong reflection. Operating-table, instrument-tables, everything is of glass and iron. On all sides, little rooms, glittering with marble and glass, and a wonderful array of shining instruments have connection with the theatre; they are known as the sterilizing-room, the electrical room, the instrument-room. By a device, as simple as touching a button, the temperature of the rooms can be graduated at will, thermostats registering exact degree.

CONVALESCENTS IN "SUN ROOM" ON ROOF, PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL

AN OPERATION IN THE HOSPITAL THEATRE

MOUNT SINAI HOSPITAL, NEW YORK

FOUNDLING ASYLUM, NEW YORK

There are three ways of reaching the operating theatre. By one, spectators find their seats, by another, come the operating surgeons, assistants and nurses. The surgeons,—every one of them,—must pass through the disrobing rooms, where each divests himself of street garments, and dons spotless, sterilized pajamas and felt slippers. Also, each must pass through a room where bowls, disinfectants, running sterilized water and scrubbing-brushes denote the ordeal his hands must undergo before they can be brought into the same room with the person of the patient. Now, there is one other entrance—the elevator—and up this comes the patient lying on a stretcher on wheels, and is landed in the anæsthetizing-room. She sees nothing of the instruments, nor of the array of white-robed doctors waiting, their every thought centered upon getting her safely through her trial. Her nurse is beside her, and the physician who is to give her the ether, with kind and cheerful words, puts the cone over her face, saying gently: "Take long, deep breaths,"—and in a little while she is asleep. The big marble door swings open; the doctors transfer her to the glass and iron table, sterilized blankets, hot water bottles, everything to insure comfort and safety is at hand. The swift work of scissors, ligature, needles and dressing goes on quietly; the patient, still asleep and cosily wrapped in blankets, is wheeled back by way of the elevator and the corridors. It is all over, and she did not know it.

On the ground floor is the emergency hall, where cases are received directly from the ambulance; and where many hurts are attended to without sending the patient up to the pavilion. On the same level is a room, in special request in summer. It is equipped for giving ice-packs and baths; and sun-stroke patients are brought here. There are three ambulances with snap harness; and the stable is ever ready for quick calls. Some one is hurt; a policeman rings up from his box; and in a trice, ambulance, driver and doctor, heralded by clanging bell, are off to the scene of trouble.

The children's ward is very attractive with its sunny beds, its flowers and Scripture texts. Over the door are the words: "He took them up in His arms and put His hands upon them and blessed them." The chapel, in addition to its office as a place of devotion, sometimes serves as a lecture hall for the Nurses' Training School. A patient dying in the hospital can be buried from this chapel—a great convenience to impoverished relatives; and an unusual privilege, as for the sake of the living, hospitals must avoid calling marked attention to the dead. The Presbyterian Hospital is so built that patients in medical and surgical wards would be unaware that a funeral was going on.

The Nurses' Training School is one of the most valuable adjuncts of the hospital; while giving patients the advantages of skilled care, but places an increasing number of educated and efficient nurses at the service of the public. This is essentially a Christian institution. The Chaplain is Dr. Thomas G. Wall. Business meetings are opened with prayer. While it is supported by the Presbyterian or Reformed Church, its benefits are irrespective of creed, nationality or color. Fifty per cent. of the patients are Catholics. Of the average 3,300 patients cared for yearly, over 3,200 are treated gratuitously. There are 22 wards with about 450 beds and 22 private rooms for pay patients. During 1898, the ambulance answered 2,177 calls; in the Emergency ward 2,757 persons were treated; and in the dispensary 17,368; of patients whose average time in the hospital was 23 days there were 3,048; altogether 6,009 people received attention.

Dr. C. Irving Fisher is Superintendent. There are eight resident physicians on the staff of house officers. The President of the Medical Board is Dr. Chas. K. Briddon; and the large corps of officers, lecturers and visiting physicians is composed of able and distinguished physicians and surgeons.

Spring On the Way

Flowers Awakening Little Observers—"The Christian Herald's" Charges

THE city child, who has no acquaintance with cows and calves and sheep and horses, with birds and bees and butterflies and daisied fields, has missed a lot of fun that it really seems every child ought to have. In many parts of the Union, even now,

The bare, pink feet of children press
The greening fields.

Little heads bend wonderingly to watch the lovely miracle where the birth of the crocus breaks the brown crust of mother earth with a flash of gold. Small noses sniff delightedly the scent of violets em purpling a sunny border in the old-fash ioned garden, with its southern exposure, its hot-beds and its multitude of wonders happening under glass. At one minute, the Southern children pity brothers and sisters living farther north where there is yet snow on the ground; the next minute they would love to be up there and help in the snow-balling. But there is not much snow anywhere now; and a robin or two has been seen in Central and Prospect Park. Moreover, there will be a little later such glory of crocuses and hyacinths as never was in these charmed spots! And little folks—even though city born—living in their neighborhood, will feast their eyes and noses, enlarge their comprehension of nature's ways, and, "Keep off the grass," according to sign-board directions. Perhaps, when an indulgent policeman ostentatiously turns his back, a little lass or laddie will snip off a flower, "that wasn't goin' to last long, anyway." Of course, this is all wrong, but it does seem as if every child in the world who wants a flower should have one—that is, it seems so to little country boys and girls who never knew any stint in this direction, and who cannot understand the necessity which forces the city to protect its parks.

Some little girls and boys in New York and other big towns, too, whose mammas have conservatories, did missionary work last winter by carrying the blossoms their mammas gave them, to children at the mission Sunday Schools, or at the day nurseries, or in the hospitals; or, better still, by going to little friends in the tenements and giving kind words with the flowers.

According to power and numbers we believe no charitable community has ever dispensed richer blessings, temporal and spiritual, than have our readers in their fresh-air work, co-operative with us at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home. That that work is abundantly remembered, is evidenced by the fact that we are already receiving marvelous letters from last year's guests, wanting to know, even at this early date, if "the country will open?" and if they will be permitted to repeat last summer's visit to a place where cows and calves, grass and daisies, birds, bees and flowers, good clothes and "plenty to eat" were actual and abundant facts. They had motherly care and Christian training; and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD hopes to say to old and new friends among children of the slums: "The country will open. Come every one, and have a good time."

A Quaint Dutch Village

Vlaardingen is a quaint little village built on each side of a single long street, the long street divided by a canal. The Vlaardinger crosses from one side of the town to another by skipping from deck to deck of herring-boats which jam the canal. The stranger who cannot accomplish this feat must cross over a bridge that he finds at either end of the long street. A recent visitor to Vlaardingen writes:

Down this street we looked into windows of the one-and-a-half story houses, and each house displayed a kettle, a doofpot (fire extinguisher), a comfortje (small stand with lamp to keep tea and coffee warm), a couple of dust pans, a coal-scuttle, two pails, a water-spout and a catch-all, all of brass and polished to a looking-glass brightness. They put them when clean in the windows, that neighbors may see that their week's scouring is done, and, being done (these are the finishing touches after the house is scrubbed), the housewife may go out for a little pleasure without fear of the scandalizing tongues of her neighbors, for woe to her who shows not that her house is in order before she dons her big cap for Saturday visiting. These quaint, old-fashioned working folk consider it slothful not to be through with the work by two o'clock in the afternoon, at which time, when the week is considered to have ended, they array themselves in their "Sunday clothes" and are ready for company, visiting, and various social amenities.

The Czar's Boyhood

A book just issued in Paris deals with the home-life of Nicholas, Czar of Russia, from childhood till now. The daily routine at present is as follows: He rises at 8, breakfasts with the Czarina at 9; at 9.30 retires to his study to look over the principal European papers (Nicholas is a good linguist—speaks English fluently), takes a short walk; at 11, receives his ministers; attends to correspondence; after luncheon, drives out with his wife; on his return, shuts himself into his study and is hard at work till 8 p.m., the Imperial dinner hour. It takes 200 people to prepare and serve dinner at the Russian court. When Nicholas was a boy, he, with his brothers and sisters, entertained small boy and girl friends at dinner once a week. These functions were very lively. "There was no end to the tricks the hosts and their small guests played on one another. From end to end of the table there used to be continuous firing of bread pellets, which or landing in royal mouths. Another [illegible] elbow while he was drinking or to baptize him with a glass of water."

Wilhelmina's Wedding

It is whispered that Wilhelmina's public betrothal—or perhaps even her wedding—to her cousin, Prince William, of Weid, will take place at Easter-time or soon thereafter, when Haarlem, "the floral capital of Europe," will be all in blossom for the joyful occasion. The Prince is twenty-two, a ruddy, wholesome youth, of good character and reputation—just the nice sort of Prince the Hollanders want their Queen to wed; which is saying a great deal for Prince William, as the Hollanders are very particular about their beloved Wilhelmina.

Mrs. McKinley and the Mothers

A feature of the Congress of Mothers, just held in Washington, was the reception at the White House by Mrs. McKinley. Our President's wife is very fond of children, deeply interested in every movement that looks to their welfare, and the work of the Mothers' Congress has her hearty sympathy. She is not very robust, so the customary hand-shaking—which is the American ceremonial for "presentation at court"—was spared her by the delegates, who did not claim such exhaustive courtesy. But many of the mothers brought their children along, and these our gentle First Lady of the Land would not suffer to pass her without a caressing word and touch. Every little boy and girl had a word with the President's wife—an event each will long remember.

A Helpful Dog

Sarah Nelson Carter tells some very interesting stories about animals in For Pity's Sake, a book published by the American Humane Education, with offices at 19 Milk St., Boston. Here is one about a distinguished dog, named Jake, whose education had been carefully attended to by his master:

Jake was sent to a farm in the country (for his health) the next fall, where he had a good home and a chance to run in the woods often enough to keep him in good spirits. The woman of the house, a hard worker like most country women, was washing one Monday morning, Jake, her only companion, lying in a warm corner on the floor. As she put the last stick of wood into the stove she said to the dog, "Jake, I should think you might go out and bring me in some more wood." To her amazement he started for the wood-pile, and brought in one stick at a time until the box was full. When the good woman told the story she said she was about as much frightened as surprised.

THE CHILDREN'S PETS ON THE FARM

O BOSSY is our friend, we know.
She gives us sweet, rich milk to drink.
We've called her little white calf "Snow."
He'll like that name, now don't you think?

Jetty just came on yesterday:
She's not got 'quainted with us yet.
Now, don't you think she'll like us, say?
We've named her spotted calf, our "Pet."

And knowing that the way we went
Was God's own way,
Will under-stand his wise intent

Mamma's "True Lover"

Mamma was sewing and dropped her spool of thread. "Bring it to me, please, Harry," she said. Harry wasn't four years old—just a medley of petticoats, gold curls and alphabet blocks on the floor, near where the spool rolled. He did not notice the request, being engaged with serious matters. Mamma repeated it a number of times and in different ways, before it pierced his consciousness and appealed to him as a matter of more importance than a new combination in alphabet blocks. She could have picked it up herself fifty times before he gave it his attention: she was delayed in her work. At last, with much puffing and blowing, and as the result of laborious stoopings, the fat baby presented her with a spool of thread, the ends of which were grimy and tangled. But mamma smiled graciously, saying, "Thank you Harry, you are mamma's true lover." He smiled back, and gave a grunt of satisfaction as he went back to his blocks. A friend laughed: "do you think the result is worth all your time and trouble?" "A thousand times more," was the answer. "I am teaching him daily in just such little ways, that love expresses itself in service." "Does he understand what 'mamma's true lover' means?" "Harry, what does 'true lover' mean?" asked mamma. "Do fings for anybody," said Harry promptly—"an' be dood," he added dreamily, intent on the introduction of a tin donkey-cart into the combination of alphabet blocks. "These lessons will be worth a good deal to Harry's wife," said mamma, with a far, kind and wise glance into the future, "and I hope Harry's wife's mamma is giving her similar instructions to these."

The Love That Makes Happiness

Self-Love and Heavenly Love Contrasted—A Secret Worth Knowing

THERE is a condition called Happiness, and it is nothing nobler than gratified Self-love. The man or woman has secured, at any cost, the thing they wanted; and they imagine themselves happy in its possession. This kind of Happiness, has often for its chief ingredient, the triumph of gaining what it caused some one else sorrow to lose; or it is the climax of that primitive love of the chase, which pursues as a natural instinct, what others are pursuing, and finds a certain joy in outstripping and appropriating. Riches, honors, admiration, yea, even love, if sought in this spirit, ends in ennui and disappointment. For those who labor for Self, labor for a house of clay, whose foundations are in the dust.

To make Self the centre, 'round which our love, and hopes, and fear revolve, is the essence of all sin; and to be delivered from this constant question, as to how everything in life will affect our personality, is the turning point in moral progress, and spiritual renewal. It is that first chill awakening, that dim feeling after God, if haply we may find him, that makes the nobler happiness possible.

Now, this selfish idea of Happiness puts on very clever disguises, and calls itself by many excellent names. Thus, two young people meet and persuade themselves that they were made specially in order to marry each other. They may—each of them—have duties to parents and kindred, that no one else can perform; but they sentimentally reflect that "the course of true love never did run smooth"; and are rather elated over the natural opposition they evoke. Their self-pity, and self-love quite blind them to the fact that God places every soul in the circumstances he thinks best for its development; and that if Love violates Duty, it is not a true love; though they may call it by that name. It is Self-love; and its destiny is not Happiness, but disappointment.

PLEASANT, satisfactory names, for most unsatisfactory things, have been found in all ages. It was not the honor of the great goddess Diana that the craftsmen of Ephesus clamored about; though they pretended it was. It was their own selfish covetousness that moved them to such a passion of religious enthusiasm. When the devil seduced our first parents he called it the pursuit of knowledge; and when he was found among the Sons of God, and asked what he had been doing, instead of acknowledging that he had been about murder, and theft, and malicious cruelty he said, with impudent meekness, that he had simply been taking a walk—going to-and-fro in the earth. How much of our charity is true coin? How much of our evangelism is busybodism? Alas! how much that we call "Happiness" is nothing at all but our gratified Self-love?

True Happiness seeketh not its own. Like the quality of Mercy it blesses others, as well as itself. It comes from God, and is of the very nature of heaven; because it has its root in that sacred, secret Love of God, which makes all earthly loves pure and self-denying. If we have ever known that thrill of joy—that momentary influx of God's love granted to the pure, in their purest hour, then we have tasted of the unselfish happiness of heaven; and are henceforward willing to do all, and be all, and deny all, and give all, that we may make—not ourselves—but others, happy; even as our Father in Heaven delights to wipe away all tears from our eyes, and give to us the blessedness of his kingdom.

BLESSED ARE the Happiness Makers! For in making others happy, they achieve for themselves the only happiness worthy of the name. God's great and gracious plan to his sons and daughters of earth is to give them good things, with their own hands. He could have made us all wise, but he has given us the far greater joy of seeking after knowledge. He could have made Happiness grow on the tree at our door steps, but he has trusted us with honor and delight of making it for ourselves, and others. For Happiness has to be made. It is not a condition, like hunger or thirst, heat or cold; it is a result; a reward; a culture continued day by day, as long as we live. Let us consider that its foundation is piety, and that piety is neither a theology, nor a theosophy: but a daily discipline, a law, an indissoluble engagement between a soul and its Maker. For God is the Lover of Souls. He made them; and there is an attraction which carries the soul that desires God, to God; yea—and I say it reverently—there is an attraction which carries God to the desiring soul. He, and he only, has put into man the love of himself, and the love of others; a love so wide that he wishes us to love even our enemies.

And if we desire to be truly happy, then let us understand that Love is everything—the end—the beginning—and the means. All the wells of happiness we dig for ourselves must have their spring from the Love of God in the heart; then they will always be clear and running over; and we shall drink by the way, and thirst not. All the streams of life that have not their source in this fountain of eternal love will, in the end, dry up, and leave the years arid as a Valley of Baca.

THIS HEAVENLY Love is not a bare gift; it brings its reward with it. Those who have once loved unselfishly know that they are the better for it, even if they meet with an ungrateful return. So, then, let us love for Love's sake! This is the true Happiness which enriches and blesses and perfects the lover unto the end of his or her life. At any rate, one thing is certain, that those who seek the heavenly spark of joy in earthly pleasure will always and surely be disappointed. Earth has no condition of wealth or honor that can of itself satisfy. Haman was unhappy in a court; Ahab on a throne; Adam in Paradise; the angels in heaven; for their love and their hopes were fixed on their own honor, or desire, or ambitions.

To Love! and to Serve! This is the secret of Happiness; a secret so unselfish that it will declare itself even in death; as in the case of the good and great Charles Kingsley, who chose but three words for his tomb: three words, however, which boldly asserted not only that he had loved, but that he did then love, and that he trusted to go on loving to all eternity. And, as if further to mark the unselfishness of his God-loving nature, he did not use the selfish pronoun "I," but included all mankind in his glorious belief:

AMAVIMUS—We have loved.
AMAMUS—We do love.
AMABIMUS—We shall love.

And with all his lapses into sinful folly, the simple-hearted, loving Robert Burns knew the same grand secret, and with a pen dipped in the warm treasure of his heart-blood wrote the same great truth:

If happiness have not her seat
And centre in the breast;
We may be wise, or rich, or great,
We never can be blest.

A Typical Case

Experience has taught me (writes Mr. Moody), that most of the men that talk against the Bible never read it. There is no book in the world so misjudged. A modern book comes out, and people say:

"Have you read such a book?"

And you say, "Yes, I have just read it."

"Well, what is your opinion about it?"

"Well, I wouldn't like to give my opinion without reading it more carefully."

And yet men are very free to give their opinion about God's Book without reading it. A friend of mine was in Montreal some time ago, and he talked with a man upon the subject of Christ and Christianity.

"Well," he said, "the fact is we have got to have a new Bible. That old Book," he said, "was good enough for the dark ages, but we have outgrown it. It is of no use to this enlightened age."

My friend said, "Before we give up the old Book let us see how much we know about it. Can you tell me which is the first book in the Bible, Genesis or Revelation?"

Well, he said he couldn't just tell that. He didn't quite know, but he knew they had got to have another Bible.

That man is typical of all the men that I have ever heard howling and writing against the Bible. I never met one in my life—yes, I will make one exception, I did meet one man that claimed he had read it through; but I doubted him, because when I pressed him to quote something out of it all he could remember was "Jesus wept."

The Tapestry Weavers

LET us take to our hearts a lesson—no lesson can braver be—
From the ways of the tapestry weavers on the other side of the sea.
Above their heads the pattern hangs, they study it with care,
The while their fingers deftly move, their eyes are fastened there.
They tell this curious thing, besides, of the patient, plodding weaver,
He works on the wrong side evermore, but works for the right side ever.
It is only when the weaving stops, and the web is loosed and turned,
That he sees his real handiwork—that his marvelous skill is learned.
Ah, the sight of its delicate beauty—how it pays him for all his cost!
No rarer, daintier work than his was ever done by the frost.
Then the master bringeth him golden hire, and giveth him praise as well,
And how happy the heart of the weaver is, no tongue but his own can tell.

The years of man are the looms of God, let down from the place of the sun,
Wherein we are weaving ever, till the mystic web is done.
Weaving blindly, but weaving surely, each for himself his fate;
We may not see how the right side looks, we can only weave and wait.
But, looking above for the pattern, no weaver hath need to fear,
Only let him look clear into heaven—the Perfect Pattern is there.
If he keeps the face of the Saviour forever and alway in sight,
His toil shall be sweeter than honey, his weaving is sure to be right.
And when the work is ended, and the web is turned and shown,
He shall hear the voice of the Master, it shall say to him, "Well done!"
And the white-winged angels of heaven, to bear him thence, shall come down;
And God shall give him gold for his hire—not coin, but a glowing crown!

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

CHAPTER XXI

A Presence Dreaded or Desired

LONG as Judge Hildreth and his wife had been members of a church, neither of them had ever heard such an avowal made, outside of the pulpit, as Evadne had uttered. In sermons, of course, they had heard the idea of the brotherhood with Christ explained; but it startled both when Evadne declared it was her hope and purpose to be a sister of Jesus Christ. Was this the explanation of her going to the colored people's church this evening?

"I don't know what to make of the child," said Mrs. Hildreth discontentedly, as the door closed behind her. "I believe she would rather associate with such people than with those of her own class. She has a bowing acquaintance with the most outre looking individuals I ever saw. I hope she won't come to any harm down among those crazy blacks, they always seem to get possessed the moment they touch religion."

"I do not think Evadne will ever come to any harm," the Judge said slowly. "The Lord takes pretty good care of his own."

His wife looked at him with a puzzled expression.

A little later Judge Hildreth entered his library with a heavy sigh. He had attained the ends he had striven for, he was respected alike in the church and the world, he held a high and lucrative position, he had a well-appointed home over which his handsome wife presided with dignity and grace, and yet, as he took his seat before his desk in the lofty room whose shelves were lined with gems of thought in fragrant costly bindings, life seemed to have missed its sweetness to Lawrence Hildreth.

Evadne's words haunted him, and like an accusing angel, the letter, which still lay hidden under the mass of papers in the drawer which he never opened, seemed to look at him reproachfully.

"A sister of Jesus Christ." Sisters and brothers lived together. Was it possible that Jesus Christ could be in this house—this very room? The idea was appalling. He was familiar with the truism that God was everywhere, but he had never really believed it: and as the years passed, he had found it convenient to remove him to a shadowy distance in space less likely to interfere with modern business methods. Jesus Christ enshrined in a far-off glory among his angels appealed to the decorum of his religious sentiment, but Jesus Christ face to face—to be reckoned with in the practical details of honesty and fair dealing—that was a different matter.

And he was conscious that he was guilty of the violation of the trust of a dead man, who had put everything in his power because he had faith in him. He saw again the young brother, handsome, easy-going, careless to a fault, but with a sense of honor so fine as to shrink in indignation from the slightest breath of shame. He remembered the closing words of the farewell letter which he he had read for the first time on the day now so long ago, which he would have given worlds to recall, and which from out the shadowy recesses of eternity laughed at his futile wish.

"So my dear brother," the letter ran, "I am giving you this responsibility, as only a brother can. I have left Evadne absolutely untrammelled. I have no fear that my little girl will abuse the trust. She is wise beyond her years with a sense of honor as keen as your own."

The Judge's head sank upon his hands. It was for Evadne's good, he had persuaded himself. She was too much of a child—and now, the letter could not be delivered. It meant disgrace and shame. It was his duty as a father to shield his family from that. How well he could picture Evadne's look of bewildered, incredulous surprise, and then the pain, tinged with scorn, which would creep into the clear eyes. And Jesus Christ! The Judge's head sank lower, as he heard the voice which had rung down through the ages in scathing denunciation of all subterfuge and lies:

"Woe unto you, hypocrites! for ye tithe mint and anise and cummin and have left undone the weightier matters of the law, judgment and mercy and faith."

Lower and lower sank the Judge's head, until at last it rested upon the desk with a groan.

Meantime Evadne was drinking in new draughts of that water of life, which she was learning to desire above all earthly joys. They were singing when she reached the humble church, which Dyce and Pompey called their spiritual home. The walls were whitewashed, and the seats were hard, for the people who worshiped there possessed but little of this world's goods. Two prayers followed, full of rich imagery and fervid passion, and then a young girl with a deep contralto voice began to sing,—

"Steal away,
Steal away to Jesus!
Steal away,
Steal away home.
We aint got long to stay here."

The soft, deep notes of the weird melody ended in a burst of triumph, and Evadne bent her head while her tired heart thrilled with joy. When she looked up again, Dyce was speaking.

"I've been thinkin', friens," she said, "that we don't get the sweetness of them words into our hearts as we should. We'se too much taken up with the thought of the heavenly manshuns to remember that the King's chillen has an inheritance on the earth. We'se not poor, lonesome people widout a home!

"I know we always tinks of a home as a place where dare is good times—an' there don't seem much good times goin' fer some of us in dis worl': but dere ain't no call fer us ter 'spect ter be better off dan our Lord, an ef we'se feedin' on de Lord Jesus all de time we won't mind ef de worl's bread is scarce—de soul ain't dependen' on dem tings fer nourishmen', an' de Lord Jesus makes de hard bed easy an' de coarse food taste good.

"Tain't good management fer us ter be always groanin' in dis worl', while we 'spect ter be singin' de glory song up yonder. De best singers is 'dem dat's longes' trainin', and I'se feared some of us'll find it dretful hard ter get up to de proper concert pitch in heaven ef we sings nuthin' but lamentashuns on earth. De dear Lord don't seem ter hev made any sort of pervishun fer fault-findin'. He 'lowe dere'll be trouble, but he tells us ter be of good cheer on account of hevin' him ter get the victory fer us, an' ef we keep singin' all de time dere ain't no time fer sighs. We'se not payin' much complimen' to Jesus' friens, when we allow dat de good tings of dis worl' kin make people happier dan he kin, an' 'pears like we ought ter be 'shamed of ourselves. We'se don't begin ter understan' how ter live up ter our privileges, frien's, and I'se bowed in shame as I tink how de dear Lord's heart must ache as he sees how little we'se appresheatin' his lovin' kindness."

The tender, pleading voice ceased, and Dyce suddenly lifted her clasped hands. "O Lord Jesus, help us ter glorify Thee before de worl'. Help us ter understan' an' 'preciate de wonderful honor thou hez put upon us. Make us used ter dwellin' wid thee on de earth so as we won't feel like strangers in heaven. Lord, make us abide in de secret place ob de Almighty, an' hol' us close forever under de shadow ot thy wing."

The sweet rich voices swelled again into song, then the minister pronounced the Benediction and the congregation dispersed to the humble homes, glorified now by the possibility of being made the dwelling-place of the King of kings.

CHAPTER XXII

Diligent in business, fervent in spirit

It was intensely warm in the Marlborough Steel Works. Outdoors the sun beat fiercely upon the heads of toiling men and horses, while the heat waves danced with a dazzling shimmer along the brick pavements; indoors there was the steady thud of the engine, and the great hammers clanked and the belts swept through the air with a deafening whirr, while the workmen drew blackened hands across their grimy foreheads, and John Randolph gave a sigh of longing for the cool forest chambers of Hollywood, as he leaned over to exchange a cheery word with Richard Trueman, beside whom he had worked for over a year and for whom he had come to entertain a strong feeling of affection.

Varied experiences had come to him since he had said good-by to his kind Quaker friends and started on his search for work. Monotonous days of wood piling in a lumber yard, long weeks of isolation among the giant trees of the forest; then had come days when even odd jobs had been hailed with delight, and he had sat at the feet of the grim schoolmistress Necessity and learned how little man really needs to live. And then the steel works had opened again and he had forged his way up through the different departments to the responsible position he now held. His promotion had been rapid. The foreman had been quick to note the keen intelligent interest and deft handedness of this strangely alert new employee.

When evening came he would stride cheerily along the dingy street to the house where he and his fellow-workman lodged, refresh himself with a hot bath, don what he called his dress suit, and after their simple meal and a frolic with little Dick, the motherless boy who was the joy of Richard Trueman's heart, he would settle down for a long evening of hard study among his cherished books. John Randolph never lost sight of the fact that he was to be a physician by-and-by.

The long stifling day was drawing near its close. Half an hour more and the workmen would be free to rest. Only half an hour! Suddenly there was a sharp clicking noise, then a cry, and in an instant all was bustle and confusion at the Marlborough Steel Works—the great hammers hung suspended in mid-air, the whirling wheels were still, while the workmen, with faces showing pale beneath the grime, gathered hastily around a fallen comrade. Summoned by telephone, the Company's surgeon was driving rapidly towards the works.

An accident. No one knew just how it had happened. There must have been a flaw—a defect in some part of the machinery. These things do happen. Somewhere there had been carelessness, dishonesty, and the price of it was—a life!

The dying man opened his eyes suddenly and looked full at John Randolph, who knelt beside him, supporting his head on his arm.

"Little Dick," he murmured.

"All right, Trueman, "I'll take care of him."

"God bless you, John!" And with the fervid benediction, the breath ceased and the spirit flew away.

The body was prepared for the inquest, and through the gathering dusk, John, strangely white and silent, entered the dingy house he called home, and gathered the fatherless boy into his arms and let him sob out his grief upon his shoulder.

Some days after the funeral, the manager sent for John to come to his private office. He was a pleasant man, and had taken a kindly interest in the capable young workman from the start.

"Well, Randolph, this is a terrible business of poor Trueman's," he said, as he pointed him to a chair. "Terrible! I can't get over it! He was such a nice fellow and one of our best workmen, too. Well, we can't do anything for him now, poor fellow, but he left a boy, I think. Something ought to be done for him."

"Yes, sir," said John simply, "I have taken him to live with me."

The manager leaned forward in his chair. "Shake hands. We talk about what ought be done and you do it."

John laughed. "There was nothing else to do," he said.

"H'm! Most fellows in your position would have thought it was the last thing possible. Have you any idea what it means to saddle yourself with a child like this? Whatever put such an idea in your head?"

"The life of Jesus Christ," answered John quietly.

"Well! Well! You're a queer fellow, Randolph. But how are you going to make the wages spin out?"

"His father managed—so can I." John's voice shook a little.

"His father! But he was his father, you see. That makes a tall difference. Well, Randolph, I give you up. You are beyond me."

John felt no prompting to explain further. Supposing the interview ended, he rose to leave.

"Stay," said Mr. Branford, "I have something else to say. The Company has some responsibilty in this matter. You have constituted yourself this little orphan's guardian, and it is no mere compliment to say that a better guardian could not be found; but you ought not to bear both the trouble and the expense. The Company must undertake the cost of his education, and I think we can help you in another way. We have decided to promote you. We want someone in the office who has a practical knowledge of the work. It has been difficult to find the right kind of man. I have been watching for some time, and I have fixed on you, because you seem to have intelligence, as well as mechanical skill. I did not know then about your adopting Trueman's boy, but that is an additional reason for giving you the appointment, because the pay will be better. This is rather a surprise to you, is it not?"

"It is," John acknowledged, "but it ought not to have been. It is Christ's way to provide the means for his work."

"Umph! it seems to me," said the manager, "that the Company is providing the means."

"The Lord has many agents," said John, "and this time he has honored the Company with an appointment."

A Wonderful Remedy Discovered For the Cure of

CATARRH AND DEAFNESS

Deaf Ears Unstopped — Headache Banished, Eyes, Nose, Throat, Lungs and Stomach Freed From Disease.

"After being deaf for five years, one box of your Catarrh Cure cured me."

The above was written to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son by Mr. Paul Rupert, of Saltillo, Pa., and is only one out of hundreds of similar letters. The remedy is applied in the form of a medicated smoke-vapor inhaled from a pipe. By a simple process, which we explain in the directions accompanying the remedy, the medicine is made to enter the middle ear and every passage and cavity in the head, removing the disease from every affected part.

If you wish a sample and full particulars, testimonials, etc., write at once to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

Reunited by the Bowery Mission

IN a letter in the New York Observer, Helen H. Holcomb, a missionary at Jhansi, India, gives a very touching account of a providential reunion of father and son, which was brought about through the influence of the Bowery Mission. She writes:

Two years ago, while on an evangelistic tour in a native state in the heart of India, we spent several days in an "inspection bungalow," provided by the English government for the use of its officers when on duty. This bungalow was a short distance outside the walled city of Dalia. The place did not contain a single European inhabitant, but one day we noticed two European gentlemen in the vicinity of the bungalow. One of the gentlemen learned that the two occupants of the bungalow were the traveling agents of a large jewelry establishment in Madras. They were waiting for a command to visit the palace and display their wares.

One day, one of the gentlemen walked over to our bungalow, and asking to see the gentleman whose acquaintance he had made, communicated to him the contents of a letter which he held in his hand, and which had been forwarded to him from Madras. The letter was from the "Bowery Mission," and told him that his son, who had been a prodigal, and had sorely grieved the hearts of those who loved him, had "come to himself," was ready to acknowledge his wrong-doing and longed to return to his father's house. "His repentance seems sincere," continued the writer of the letter. "He feels that his Heavenly Father has forgiven him, and he hopes that in the heart of his earthly father, there is also a place for the repentant wanderer." The letter bore the signature of "the Mother of the Bowery Boys," Mrs. Sarah I. Bird.

"I should like to communicate with my son," said the stranger, "but this seems impossible, for I do not know where to forward my reply. The envelope bears a United States stamp, but the postmark is indistinct, and the letter contains only this, 'Bowery Mission,' without either the name of the city or state. Where is the Bowery Mission? Can you help me?" he asked in an eager way.

When he had received the desired information he turned back to his lodging house with a light heart. He had heard the best of news of one who had gone from home leaving no clue by which his anxious friends might trace him. He could now tell the penitent prodigal that a father's heart and a father's house were open to receive him.

It was a kind Providence that had brought together in this wild spot in the heart of India two strangers from far distant parts of this great empire, at the time when one could give to the other just the help that he so greatly desired.

An Awful Awakening

In a town of Switzerland a few years ago, some workingmen going early to work, walking along the street, saw a white figure on the top of a high house. What was it? A lady in her night-dress; and she was sitting looking down, quite happy, smiling in perfect security. She was a somnambulist. She had risen in her sleep without anyone in the house knowing it. They did not know what they could do to save her. Just as they were talking together, the sun rose. A bright beam fell upon her eyes. She waked and saw where she was; gazed one moment around, and then fell headlong—killed on the spot. An awful awakening!

If you are out of Christ, and the day of his coming overtakes you—oh, what if the first beam of that bright day be the first moment of your awakening, and it is too late!

WYANDOTTE
BAKING SODA

THE value of every baking soda depends upon two things—the quantity of the gas it makes and its absolute purity.

It is what chemists call highly carbonated.

Wyandotte Baking Soda is entirely free from all impurities. There is nothing but soda and gas.

The soda holds the gas in readiness. As soon as it is mixed with sour milk or butter milk, the gas is liberated and rises freely through the dough. This is the operation known as rising, and makes the bread, cake or biscuits light.

The more gas there is the more easily it is liberated, and the more quickly this is done the lighter the baking, and therefore the better. The lightest, fluffiest, daintiest soda biscuits, Johnny cakes and griddle cakes are made with Wyandotte Baking Soda.

Wyandotte Baking Soda is so rich in gas that it takes less of it to make the baking as light as it should be. This is a great saving to you.

There is more in a package of Wyandotte Baking Soda for the same money than in any other package of good baking soda.

This is also a great saving to you—in other words, Wyandotte Baking Soda costs less and goes further than any other soda.

A baking soda wich is absolutely pure, which contains a higher percentage of carbonic-acid gas, which gives more for the money than any other kind of soda certainly must be the best soda.

A package of Wyandotte Soda weighs 12 onces and costs 5 cents.

Your grocer perhaps does not keep it, and we are very anxious that he should.

We want his name and address so that we can tell him about it.

If you will send [illegible] and address to us we will send you by return mail, a free coupon which will entitle you to a free package of Wyandotte Baking Soda.

One package will teach you that you can do better baking at less expense with Wyandotte Baking Soda than with any other soda you have known.

THE J. B. FORD COMPANY,
Box F, Wyandotte, Mich.

WYANDOTTE
WASHING SODA

WYANDOTTE Washing Soda is ten times as effective as sal-soda and [illegible] all other washing soda.

It is the best thing known for loosening the dirt from the clothes and makes it easy to wash them.

Unequaled [illegible] satisfaction on account of the alkalis they contain.

Wyandotte Washing Soda contains no caustic alkali.

It is absolutely pure.

Bulk soda is a risky thing for you to use. You know nothing about it and you can find out nothing about it.

Wyandotte Washing Soda is always put up by us with our name upon the box and our guarantee behind our name.

It is the biggest and best package of washing soda you can buy for five cents.

It goes farther and costs less than other washing compounds.

It is better than any other package at any price.

It is a new soda and your grocer may not have it.

We want the name of your grocer so that hereafter he will always carry it.

Three Things Free

Send us the name of your grocer and we will send you, free, three coupons—one coupon good for one package of Wyandotte Washing Soda: one coupon good for one package of Bell Starch, and one coupon good for one package of Wyandotte Baking Soda.

BELL STARCH

Bell Starch is the best laundering starch made. It is easily prepared, gives a rich gloss and does not stick to the iron.

It saves time, money and bother—your's and the laundress's.

Bell Starch may not be sold by your grocer, but it ought to be. If it is not, send us his name and address, and we will send you a coupon which is good for one package of Bell Starch.

This coupon is entirely free.

It means that we think Bell Starch is so good that all you need is an introduction to it.

A Strange Sunday School

MR. J. M. Hartley, a missionary of the American Sunday School Union, in Southern Illinois, in a recent letter gives a very entertaining account of the founding of a Sunday School. He says: "My work began here last April, and though there are many privations and hardships, it has been full of joy. The people are poor and unlearned, and on account of ignorance are often opposed to Sunday Schools. There is an amazing indifference, concerning the proper training and education of the children. I have been in scores of homes where the children (fourteen years of age) have never been in Sunday School, and do not know what one is. I organized a school at W——— where there had been none in or near the village since any of the children in the public school were born. Most of the parents had been brought up better than that, but they had become indifferent. At D———, the directors refused the use of the school house for religious purposes so we fixed up an old blacksmith shop, and had a school in it averaging fifty-two in attendance for the summer. We are keeping up the interest, through the Home Department, till Spring shall open.

BLACKSMITH SHOP WHERE A SUNDAY SCHOOL STARTED

"At another place, we held a Sunday School in a saw-mill, for lack of any other place, having an enrollment of eighty-four. The interest here has been so great, we hope to build a chapel next season. Just received word from M——— that the school there has greatly increased in attendance this winter, and one man has been converted. This was a very needy field where none of the families were attending church or Sunday School. Most of my schools are doing well."

The Discovery of America

A NORWEGIAN reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (Mr. N. Sater, of Brooklyn, N. Y.), who is apparently a close student of the history of his native country, sends this letter, which is peculiarly appropriate at the present time, when the last vestige of Spanish sovereignty in the Western world has been swept away. He writes:

America, or "Vinland," was visited repeatedly by the Norwegians between the years 986 and 1007. The last expedition consisted of 151 men and seven women, and was well supplied with farming utensils and cattle. The Norse and Icelandic Sagas, written in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, give very minute descriptions of the expeditions.

These colonists arrived in the year 1007, and went home again in 1010 on account of continual troubles with the natives and quarrels among themselves. This is according to Norwegian history, and the reliable history of Norway dates back to the middle of the ninth century, when Harald Haarfager gathered the whole country under his rule. Later, other colonists went over, and in the year 1112 Pope Paschal II. ordained Erik Upsi as Bishop of Iceland, Greenland and Vinland, and in 1121 this Bishop himself went over to Vinland.

The Norwegians have always had a separate Cabinet and their own tariff and customs houses since their union in 1814. The present bone of contention with Sweden is only the diplomatic and consular services.

According to the Constitution of the two peoples of Norway and Sweden and the Act of Union between them, both are on equal terms. No one has any superiority or precedence over the other. Notwithstanding, Sweden, as the stronger power, has arrogated to herself the sole control over the diplomatic and consular service. As the Swedish nobility is the power behind the throne, the king, if he is a weakling, as a rule sides with the Swedes against any measure the Norwegian Government may recommend concerning the diplomatic and consular service.

The shipping of Norway is more than three times as large as that of Sweden, and still Sweden fills the consular service with her own nobility, who make things as undesirable as can be imagined for Norwegian shipping interests.

Suffering in Barbados

Rev. S. Antoinette Esterbrooks, founder of the Seamen's Anchor Mission and Tropical Training School in Barbados, has received from her people there many letters of grateful acknowledgment of money, food, literature and clothing sent them from this country. A large proportion of these gifts have come through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, and were carried free by the Quebec S.S. Co. Rev. J. M. Perkins, Missionary in charge at Bridgetown, writes:

"The clothes and provisions sent have arrived all safe by the S. S. Fontabelle. Many, many thanks to the friends who have remembered us so kindly. They have relieved much suffering and made many hearts happy. The money reached us in time to be a seasonable gift, and a blessed one it was. Rev. Mr. Smith holds six or seven meetings in the country every Sunday, besides many during the week. Some of our young converts are very bright and help us very much."

A FAMOUS

Japanese Chemist.

The medical papers of the country have been giving much space of late to a remarkable discovery by Mr. Jokichi Takamine, a Japanese scientist. It seems, to borrow the expression of the New York Medical Times, that "the profession has long desired" a digestive principle that will act on starchy foods (i. e., a diastase). Pepsin and pancreatin are most efficient with meats and albumen, but fail on starch. Medicine had no treatment for starchy indigestion until a far-away chemist discovered Taka-Diastase.

The Therapeutic Gazette for October contains an article by Dr. Hugh S. Cummings, of Norfolk, Va., which ends thus; "In every case in which I have used Taka-Diastase, the result has been markedly good. I have been able to note a gradual gain in flesh and a rapid change in the general mental condition of the patient. I have welcomed the addition of Taka-Diastase to our list of modern remedies, for certainly no trouble is more common than intestinal digestion, nor has any disease come under my observation which has been so troublesome to treat or so difficult to overcome.'

Now the commonest form of indigestion, indeed a phase of practically every case, is trouble in assimilating starchy foods. These foods form a great part of our diet—bread, vegetables, fruit, cereals. Such is the enormous field of usefulness open to this new digestive. It is offered to the general public in the form of Kaskola Tablets. Of course, the pure diastase would not be a good general remedy. In the Kaskola Tablets they are combined with the good old standard medical elements which tone up the stomach, and, with Taka Diastase, form a treatment that will cure the vast majority of cases of dyspepsia. So unfailing has been its success that the manufacturers, the P. L. Abbey Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., offer to send any one free a fifty-cent box on condition that if benefit is derived from its use, the price be mailed to the company within two weeks. If no benefit is found, no charge will be made.

Self Mastery

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for March 19. 1 Cor. 9: 24-27

MEN of all times have recognized in themselves, in theory at least, the duality of being implied in the idea of self-mastery. There is something in man which causes him to differ from the brute, something which involves responsibility, and this fact is palpable even to the most ignorant. The savage understands that there are some restraints that he must recognize on the gratification of his physical appetites. It may be only the customs and conventions of his tribe, but there is something which requires him to exercise self-control. The physical body must not follow its impulses unrestrained, but must be governed, held in check and subordinated. When the plea of insanity, which among us is so much abused, is set up in murder cases, or of kleptomania in cases of dishonesty, it is simply a contention that a certain invisible power, which ought to control, is unable to perform its normal functions. We excuse the wrongdoer from punishment in such cases, because of his disability. It is so with the child. He has to be taught that his impulses must be restrained, and that he must exercise for himself the restraints that, at first, his parents exercise for him. So there is general recognition of the fact that man has two natures, one of which should govern, control and hold in check the other.

Every one is more or less conscious that his desirable condition is not always maintained. There is a rebellion, and sometimes a successful rebellion in a man's being. The man under the power of the drink habit, is firmly resolved that he will quit drinking; but in spite of the edict, mentally registered, he yields to his habit and does that which he was determined he would not do. There are mental as well as physical rebels. The love of money, of fame and power will assert itself, and the man will do that which he is reluctant to do, and knows he ought not to do, in order that he may attain his ends, and gratify desires which ought to be subordinate. So we come to the point, that the place a man occupies in the scale of being, depends in large measure on the force of his higher nature, which is set for government within him. It ought to be educated, so that it shall know what is right, and be capable of giving wise and righteous decisions, and it ought to have such vigor that it can enforce its will on the lower nature, and maintain its authority.

Now the question arises whether there is within our reach any aid which will strengthen this supreme power, and enable it to govern propensities and appetites which are disposed to resist its rule. The need of such aid every man who knows himself is sadly conscious of. Even the apostle acknowledged that it was necessary. In that pathetic description he gives in the seventh chapter of his letter to the Romans, of the struggle through which he passed, he shows that he was made of the same clay with ourselves. But he learned the secret of conquest. In the verses associated with this week's topic, he records his success. Now he keeps under his body and has brought it into subjection. It has evidently been a hard struggle, but the battle has been won. Like the contestant in the Olympian games, he has disciplined himself and has gained a victory. He tries to stimulate the ambition of his converts to win in the same struggle. The prize is better worth winning than that which crowned the athelete. It is an incorruptible crown. It is the height of attainment for the true man. To be master of himself, to have his mental being in order, well-balanced and under control—that is a prize worth winning. And it is within the reach of all. Omnipotent help will be given to any who enter that race. Faith in Christ, confidence in his power, dependence on his strength, bring into the arena invincible might. Human weakness is supported by divine power. That is the secret of overcoming. He who would be master of himself must lay hold on omnipotence, and then victory is assured.

For Rheumatism and Sleeplessness

We Offer the Best and Simplest Treatment Free.

Some doubt that so simple a device as SLAYTON'S ELECTRIC SWITCH GLASS CASTERS on the bed of an invalid can bring relief. To such we only reply that of the thousands of sets sold, every one has been paid for only after trial. The principle of their working is insulation from the earth. DR. BROWN SEQUARD, the most famous of French physicians, taught that rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, pains in muscles and bones, sleeplessness and kindred nervous diseases, were due to an exhausting flow of electricity from the body to the earth. To stop this flow—beneficial in health, but harmful when vitality is low—is the work of SLAYTON'S ELECTRIC SWITCH GLASS CASTERS. They insulate the patient completely. The curative results are wonderful. Great benefit results in the vast majority of cases.

We promise no cure. We simply direct your attention to what they have done for others, and ask if it is not worth while to make a careful trial of a treatment which has been so powerful for good with others, and which cannot possibly harm you.

The Marriageable Age—Are the Rich Hard-Hearted?—Staying Out After Dark

THE question is asked: "Why is the prejudice so universal against a woman marrying her junior? A man may marry his junior by ten or fifteen or twenty years and the fact occasions no comment; but if the case is reversed and the woman is some years the older, the incident at once becomes gossip for town and city, and sometimes causes comment in the newspapers. I find from observation," adds the lady, "that men grow old as rapidly as women, and that a woman may be very companionable to a man some years her junior. I have seen uncongenial marriages between couples of the same or about the same age. I would like to know your opinion." So far as my observation goes, there is much happiness in marriages where the wife is by some years the older of the two, for the reason, perhaps, that John is very fond of petting and consideration, and Jane is very ready to give it when she is somewhat older than he. The maternal element in a wife, if exercised toward her husband, often adds very much to his comfort and ease in life. I do not know that women grow old faster than men. It depends a good deal on health, on circumstances or the conditions of life. Women grow old terribly fast where their lives are a round of unceasing drudgery. Where they have luxury and may spare themselves, there is no reason why they should age very fast. Still, by common consent, it is regarded as wiser that people who marry should be somewhere on the same plane of age.

A FRIEND writes complainingly of the hardheartedness of the rich. She forgets that people who have large means have also very many demands upon them. The mail, for instance, of Miss Helen Gould is filled with requests from strangers and from all sorts of people seeking her financial aid, and we are now told that it reaches between two and three hundred letters a day. It is necessary for Miss Gould to employ two or three secretaries, who go over her mail every day and select that which is necessary to be brought to her personal attention. Her very kindness of heart and magnificent liberality have laid her open to a sort of attack from strangers who fancy that they have only to state their case to have it relieved, which, should she attempt to answer in person, would wear her out. Not long ago a rich man approached by a solicitor for a most deserving charity said: "If I should give what I am asked to toward interests which I would love to help, I would exhaust three times my yearly income in one year." One should have some sympathy with the rich.

ALICE S. Your letter has given me a great deal of solicitude, but after reflection I am convinced that you were entirely wrong in taking the view you do of your father and mother. They may have anxieties to bear, of which you know nothing. There may be many reasons for what seems to you their impatience and unkindness. Indeed, in years to come, you may look back on what now seems to you as injustice and unkindness, and see that it was prompted by the truest love. My dear child, when you tell me that you can never stay out a half hour after dark without having your mother come to meet you, and that you find this a grievance, I hardly know what to say. It seems to me so sweet a thing to have a mother watching at the gate for her child and go out to meet her, that looking back over the years that have gone since I myself knew what that sweetness was, I cannot comprehend a daughter's growing angry at such a mark of affection. In my old-fashioned creed, all children and young people not yet grown up should be in the house after dark, and a daughter of mine who should be detained from home after the twilight shades had fallen would certainly find me on the alert to give her company over the shadowy way. I believe there should be deference on the part of daughters to mothers and fathers, and I think the happier homes are those in which there is loving attention to the wishes of the heads of the house.

There's a Difference!

There is a difference between BURPEE'S SEEDS and seeds as usually sold. Experience, the best of teachers (although her terms are sometimes high), has taught thousands of planters to appreciate the difference. The difference is one of quality rather than of price; the highest-priced seeds are not necessarily the best, while the lowest-priced seeds are seldom, if ever, the cheapest.

Seeds That Grow.—The "Farm Annual" issued by Messrs. W. ATLEE BURPEE & Co., of Philadelphia, bears this year a second and most fitting title, "The Plain Truth about Seeds." Of the accuracy of this description of the book nobody who has ever dealt with the house will entertain the smallest doubt, for no establishment of any nature in the United States has built up an older or better reputation for absolute fair dealing. We have been familiar with their operations for a pretty big fraction of a century now, and know whereof we affirm. The Annual is a pamphlet of 176 octavo pages, closely but very clearly printed, and profusely illustrated with fine engravings and brilliant colored plates. It is mailed free to any address, and is decidedly worth sending for.—From "THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN," Albany, N. Y., January 19, 1899.

Christendom's New Creed

A Statement of Doctrine Unanimously Adopted by Theologians Representing Churches Containing Over 60,000,000 Christians

EVERY Christian who has cherished the longing which filled our Lord's heart when he breathed that pathetic prayer for his followers, "That they all may be one," will rejoice to see the new creed, which has been prepared by representatives of the evangelical churches of Great Britain. While it does not indicate that these churches were antagonistic was probably due to the emphasis which their pastors and members have been accustomed to lay on the points of difference and the prominence they have given to the distinctive principles which separated each church from the others. The system has been reversed, and the representatives of the churches have met, not to discuss their differences, but to find out how much they hold in common. No spectacle more significant and encouraging to the religious world has been afforded by the closing years of this century than this of divines of the Baptist, Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian churches meeting together, as Luke phrases it, to "set forth in order, a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us." Their success is as remarkable as the spirit that led to the effort. They have produced a creed in which they all agree, and this without the surrender of any doctrine or principle. The creed does not express all that any church believes, but it shows that on fundamental doctrines these churches are agreed, and that they have been able to express their agreement in terms acceptable to them all. The significance of such an agreement is increased by the fact that the churches represented by the men who made it, include a large majority of the Christians of the English speaking world. Not less than sixty million persons are ranged under the banners of the denominations represented in this movement. It had its origin in the Federation of the Free Churches—an organization designed to unite Christians in aggressive work. There were grave doubts whether such an organization, composed of men whose fathers had preached and written against one another, could work together, but it was found practicable and its advantages were realized from the outset. But to prepare a creed in which all could agree, was a more difficult matter. It went deeper and touched the very souls of men. Still there was hope in the fact that the intercourse, involved by comradeship in a union of those churches, it does imply a closer fellowship between them than formerly existed. It shows, too, that they have more in common than was generally supposed, and that a basis for united action can be reached. The idea

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

M. M., Rockfield, Ind. Is it probable that the heathen who have never heard of Christ will be saved?

We have nothing to do with that matter. It is in the hands of God, who assuredly will act justly. Christ said (Luke 12: 48), "He that knew not and did commit things worthy of stripes shall be beaten with few stripes." Meantime, our duty is plain. We ought to do all in our power to send the Gospel to the heathen and so obey our Lord's command to preach the Gospel to every creature.

A. L. M., Elgin, Ill. Does not the statement (I. Tim. 2: 6), that Christ gave himself a ransom for all, and other statements of like purport, imply that all will eventually be saved in the next world, if not in this?

It would be very rash to depend on such an interpretation. It would be an awful thing for a person who did so to find that it was wrong. If a king were to offer amnesty to all rebels who laid down their arms within a given time, the offer would be made to all, but only those who complied with the conditions would be benefited. Salvation is offered to all who accept Christ and there is no limit. If the whole world would accept him, his sacrifice would avail for all. Thus it is universal. But what is to be said of those who neglect it or reject it? There is no further sacrifice. It is not for us to limit God's mercy, but he gives us in his Word no ground for hope that another opportunity of accepting Christ will be afforded after death.

McK. R., Winchester, Ont., and others. I am told that I am doing [illegible] Sabbath, and that I ought to keep Saturday. Why do we ob-[illegible]

We observe it in celebration of Christ's resurrection. As the Jewish Sabbath commemorated the completion of creation, the Lord's Day commemorates the completion of the new creation, when by rising from the dead he set the seal to his redemptive work. The Jewish Sabbath was so weighed down with the restrictions of the Pharisees that, as Christ said in another case, they made the command of none effect through their traditions. A man might not carry a handkerchief on that day, because it would be bearing a burden, and there were a host of such ridiculous restrictions. Therefore the church avoided the day, and observed a day fraught with joyful associations. But there were Judaizing Christians in that day who murmured at the change. Some of them wanted to force the new converts to keep the whole Jewish law. But Paul resisted and a council was called, which set them free. The proceedings are recorded in the fifteenth chapter of Acts. Three commands were temporarily retained, but the Sabbath was not one of the three. Still, the seventh day people continued to harass the church, as they are harassing American churches to-day. Some of them went to Colosse. Paul, however, wrote to the church (Col. 3: 16): "Let no man judge you in respect of the Sabbath." We give you the same advice.

Weekly Reader, Columbia, Mo. What corresponding rank in the army is given a hospital steward? What salary and other provision is made by the government for the stewards stationed at garrison posts, such as Forts Riley, Kan., Sheridan, Ill., and Wayne, Mich.? Is it necessary that he must be a pharmacist or a graduate of medicine?

Through the courtesy of the Surgeon General's Office of the War Department, Washington, D. C., we are enabled to answer as [illegible]

"The Surgeon General directs me to inform you that hospital stewards rank with ordnance and commissary sergeants, the only non-commissioned officers who rank them being the regimental sergeant, major and quartermaster sergeant. They receive $45.00 per month with quarters, rations, light and fuel, and a clothing allowance of $142.53 for three years' enlistment. Pay and allowances are the same at all posts. Hospital stewards are appointed after an examination in pharmacy, private and one year as acting hospital steward (obtaining this grade also after examination) before he is eligible for examination for [illegible] macy."

A large number of letters come to THE MAIL BAG relative to the case of Roberts, the Mormon Congressman-elect. Almost all are in hearty sympathy with the attitude of this journal in opposing his admission to Congress. [illegible]

I have very little sympathy with that lukewarm Christianity which says, "It is none of our business!" Just as sure as the church declines the nation will in equal relation decline. It is the imperative duty of our religion to reverence and obey the word of inspiration with unflinching firmness.

Many old Bible letters continue to come: Sidney B. Stewart, Portland, Me., has a Bible printed in England in 1767, which has been in the same family ever since.

Henry L. Fleming, Baltimore, Md., writes: I have an old Bible, printed in 1554, illustrated with wood-cuts and a genealogical tree on the first page. This Bible is printed in three languages, Greek, Latin, and Hebrew. The illustrations are very unique and interesting.

Mr. E. O. White, Toronto, Can., has probably as fine a collection of old Bibles as can be found on this continent. He sends this surprising list:

1490—Bible in Latin; oak covers; bound in pig skin.
1507—Four evangelists' glosses by Lyra; printed at Basle.

L. J. P., Middletown, Conn. Why did our Lord commend a man who defrauded his master [illegible]

It was not our Lord who commended him, but the servant's lord, and he simply praised his smartness. It was a clever trick, but it [illegible] it so as to benefit them in heaven. If they helped the poor and [illegible] so helped would welcome them to heaven when it failed, as it must do when they died. You may see in Matthew 25: 34-40 how they were rewarded who used their money in this way.

The rule of interpretation is that when two writers [illegible] same speech and one [illegible] than the other, the one who gives the fullest report is to be deemed the more accurate. It is more likely that the one writer omitted a sentence than that the other inserted something that never was uttered. Following this rule, Matthew's report is more likely to be accurate than Mark's. If you will turn to Matthew 5: 32 you will see that Christ made an exception in the case of a person who had been false to the marriage vow. He did not require one partner to live with another who had been unfaithful.

work, had inspired mutual respect and the affection that comes from the association of sincere and consecrated souls. It was decided to make the effort. Dr. Oswald Dykes, an eminent Presbyterian theologian who had extensively studied the ancient and modern creeds of the world, was requested to draft a creed. As soon as his work was finished it was submitted to a committee, which carefully examined it and discussed it, clause by clause. The final revision was then examined by a committee of twenty representative men. The finished product received the approval of these twenty theologians and each clause was adopted without a dissentient voice. That this agreement was not reached without difficulty may well be believed. As is admitted by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who was chairman of both committees, and took part in every meeting, there were several occasions during the two years that the work occupied, when there seemed to be an impassable mountain of difficulty in the way of achievement, but by mutual good-will and prayerful patience, each difficulty was surmounted. The result is, it is true, not binding on any denomination; the creed must stand on its own merits, but each denomination represented will necessarily be influenced by the fact that its leaders of this day had a part in the work.

The creed is in the form of a catechism containing fifty-two questions and answers. That number was adopted so that it might be possible to learn the whole catechism, one question and answer per week, in the course of one year. In examining it in detail, the reader is impressed by the skill with which supporters of views apparently irreconcileable, have stated the points on which they agree. Thus, Question 8, brings up the bitter controversy between Arminians and Calvinists; but the Arminian admits that "no one has been able, in his own strength, to keep God's law," and that conviction is set down as the point of harmony. Again, in Question 10, both the opponents, widely as they appeared to have differed, could agree in the statement that, "we are unable either to cleanse our own hearts, or to make amends for our offences." The subject of baptism was, of course, a crucial one, but here again, a form of expression was found in which both parties agreed. Baptism, the catechism states, "signifies the washing away of sin." Another difficult question was as to the resurrection of the body. The form finally adopted was, that "we shall be clothed with glorified bodies," leaving it an open question whether the bodies referred to are new ones, or those laid in the grave. There was a desire on the part of many members of the committee to give detailed explanations of the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer, but the decision to limit the questions to fifty-two, precluded this. Detailed explanations, however, were agreed upon, and they have been given in a series of subquestions in small print. These we omit for lack of space, in the creed we publish on this page.

Our readers will be glad to have the portraits we publish on the first page of the two most prominent workers in this great movement. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, the chairman of the committees which have produced the catechism, is a minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and was recently elected President of the General Conference—the highest honor in the gift of his church. The Rev. J. Oswald Dykes, D.D., who made the first draft of the catechism and who labored indefatigably and with "sweet reasonableness" to reach an agreement with his brethren, is Principal of the Presbyterian College, Cambridge, and an ex-Moderator of the English Presbyterian Synod. The other members of the Committee were: Baptists: Drs. Clifford and Tymms and Rev. G. P. Gould. Congregationalists: Drs. Berry, Mackennal, Guinness Rogers, Rev. J. S. Barrett and Prof. J. V. The New Catechism

1 Q. What is the Christian religion?
A. It is the religion founded by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, Who has brought to us the full knowledge of God and of Eternal Life.

2 Q. How must we think of God?
A. God is the one Eternal Spirit, Creator and Sustainer of all things; He is Love, boundless in wisdom and power, perfect in holiness and justice, in mercy and truth.

3 Q. By what name has Jesus taught us to call God?
A. Our Father in Heaven.

4 Q. What do we learn from this name of Father?
A. We learn that God made us in his own image, that He cares for us by his wise providence, and that He loves us far better than any earthly parent can.

5 Q. What does Jesus say about Himself?
A. That He is the Son of God, Whom the Father in His great love sent into the world to be our Saviour from sin.

6 Q. What is sin?
A. Sin is any thought or feeling, word or act, which either is contrary to God's holy law, or falls short of what it requires?

7 Q. Say in brief what God's law requires.
A. That we should love God with our whole heart and our neighbor as ourselves.

8 Q. Are we able of ourselves to do this?
A. No; for, although man was made innocent at the first, yet he fell into disobedience, and since then no one has been able, in his own strength, to keep God's law.

9 Q. What are the consequences of sin?
A. Sin separates man from God, corrupts his nature, exposes him to manifold pains and griefs, and, unless he repents, must issue in death eternal.

10 Q. Can we deliver ourselves from sin and its consequences?
A. By no means; for we are unable either to cleanse our own hearts or to make amends for our offences.

11 Q. How did the Son of God save His people from their sins?
A. For our salvation He came down from Heaven, and was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, and was made man and was crucified also for us under Pontius Pilate. He suffered and was buried, and the third day He rose again according to the Scriptures, and ascended into Heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of the Father.

12 Q. What benefit have we from the Son of God becoming Man?
A. We have a Mediator between God and men; one who as God reveals to us what God is; and, as perfect Man, represents our race before God.

13 Q. What further benefits have we from our Lord's life on earth?
A. We have in Him a brother man who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, as well as a perfect example of what we ought to be.

14 Q. What did He accomplish for us by His death on the Cross?
A. By offering Himself a sacrifice without blemish unto God, He fulfilled the requirements of Divine Holiness, atoned for all our sins, and broke the power of sin.

15 Q. What does the resurrection of Jesus teach us?
A. It assures us that he has finished the work of our redemption; that the dominion of death is ended; and that, because He lives, we shall live also.

16 Q. What do we learn from His ascension into Heaven?
A. That we have in Him an Advocate with the Father, Who ever liveth to make intercession for us.

17 Q. What do we learn from His session at the right hand of God?
A. That He is exalted as our Head and King, to Whom has been given all authority in Heaven and on earth.

18 Q. How does Jesus Christ still carry on His work of salvation?
A. By the third person in the blessed Trinity, the Holy Spirit, who was sent forth at Pentecost.

19 Q. What is the mystery of the blessed Trinity?
A. That the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, into Whose Name we are baptized, are one God.

20 Q. What must we do in order to be saved?
A. We must repent of our sin and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ.

21 Q. What is it to repent?
A. He who truly repents of his sin not only confesses it with shame and sorrow, but above all he turns from it to God with sincere desire to be forgiven and steadfast purpose to sin no more.

22 Q. What is it to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?
A. It means that we rely on Him as our Teacher, Saviour and Lord, putting our whole trust in the grace of God through Him.

23 Q. How are we enabled to repent and believe?
A. By the secret power of the Holy Spirit working graciously in our hearts, and using for this end providential discipline and the message of the Gospel.

24 Q. What benefits do we receive when we repent and believe?
A. Being united to Christ by faith, our sins are freely forgiven for His sake, our hearts are renewed, and we become children of God and joint-heirs with Christ.

25 Q. In what way are we to show ourselves thankful for such great benefits?
A. By striving to follow the example of Jesus in doing and bearing the will of our Heavenly Father.

26 Q. Where do we find God's will briefly expressed?
A. In the Decalogue or Law of the Ten Commandments as explained by Jesus Christ.

27 Q. Repeat the Ten Commandments.
(Here the Commandments are set out in full).

28 Q. How has our Lord taught us to understand this Law?
A. He taught that the law reaches to the desires, motives and intentions of the heart, so that we cannot keep it unless we love God with our whole heart and our neighbor as ourselves.
(Here follows a detailed interpretation and explanations of the Ten Commandments).

29 Q. What special means has God provided to assist us in leading a life of obedience?
A. His Word, Prayer, the Sacraments, and the Fellowship of the Church.

30 Q. Where do we find God's Word written?
A. In the Holy Bible, which is the inspired record of God's revelation given to be our rule of faith and duty.

31 Q. What is Prayer?
A. In prayer we commune with our Father in Heaven, confess our sins, give Him thanks for all His benefits, and ask, in the name of Jesus, for such things as he has promised.

32 Q. Repeat the Lord's Prayer.
(Here follows the Lord's Prayer and detailed explanations of its clauses).

33 Q. What is the Holy Catholic Church?
A. It is that Holy Society of believers in Christ Jesus which He founded, of which He is the only Head, and in which He dwells by His Spirit; so that, though made up of many communions, organized in various modes, and scattered throughout the world, it is yet One in Him.

34 Q. For what ends did our Lord found His Church?
A. He united His people into this visible brotherhood for the worship of God and the ministry of the Word and the Sacraments; for mutual edification, the administration of discipline, and the advancement of His Kingdom.

35 Q. What is the essential mark of a true branch of the Catholic Church?
A. The essential mark of a true branch of the Catholic Church is the presence of Christ, through His indwelling Spirit, manifested in holy life and fellowship.

36 Q. What is a Free Church?
A. A Church which acknowledges none but Jesus Christ as Head, and, therefore, exercises its right to interpret and administer His laws without restraint or control by the State.

37 Q. What is the duty of the Church to the State?
A. To observe all the laws of the State unless contrary to the teaching of Christ; to make intercession for the people, and particularly for those in authority; to teach both rulers and people the eternal principles of righteousness, and to imbue the nation with the spirit of Christ.

38 Q. What is the duty of the State to the Church?
A. To protect all branches of the Church and their individual members in the enjoyment of liberty to worship God, and in efforts to promote the Religion of Christ, which do not interfere with the civil rights of others.

39 Q. What is a Christian minister?
A. A Christian minister is one who is called of God and the Church to be a teacher of the Word and a pastor of the flock of Christ.

40 Q. How may the validity of such a Ministry be proved?
A. The decisive proof of a valid Ministry is the sanction of the Divine Head of the Church manifested in the conversion of sinners and the edification of the body of Christ.

41 Q. What are the Sacraments of the Church?
A. Sacred rites instituted by our Lord Jesus to make more plain by visible signs the inward benefits of the Gospel, to assure us of His promised grace, and, when rightly used, to become a means to convey it to our hearts.

42 Q. How many Sacraments are there?
A. Two only. Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

43 Q. What is the visible sign in the sacrament of baptism?
A. Water: wherein the person is baptized into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.

44 Q. What inward benefits does this signify?
A. The washing away of sin and the new birth wrought by the Holy Spirit in all who repent and believe.

45 Q. What are the outward signs in the Lord's Supper?
A. Bread and wine: which the Lord has commanded to be given and received for a perpetual memorial of His death.

46 Q. What is signified by the Bread and Wine?
A. By the Bread is signified the Body of our Lord Jesus Christ in which he lived and died; by the Wine is signified His Blood, shed once for all upon the Cross for the remission of sins.

47 Q. What do they receive who in penitence and faith partake of this sacrament?
A. They feed spiritually upon Christ as the nourishment of the soul, by which they are strengthened and refreshed for the duties and trials of life.

48 Q. Why do Christians partake in common of the Lord's Supper?
A. To show their oneness in Christ, to confess openly their faith in Him, and to give one another a pledge of brotherly love.

49 Q. What is a Christian's chief comfort in this life?
A. That in Christ he belongs to God, Who makes all things work together for good to them that love Him.

50 Q. What hope have we in the prospect of death?
A. We are well assured that all who fall asleep in Christ are with Him in rest and peace; and that even as He rose from the dead, so shall we also rise and be clothed with glorified bodies.

51 Q. What has Jesus told us of His Second Advent?
A. That, at a time known only to God, He shall appear again with power, to be glorified in His saints and to be the judge of all mankind; and that for His Appearing we should be always ready, 52 Q. What is the Christian's hope concerning the future state?

A. We look for the life everlasting, where in all who are saved through Christ shall see God and inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world.

Fidelia Fisk's Birthplace

A reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (B. F. Severance, of East Shelburne, Mass.,) writes: "I have noticed in Dr. Talmage's sermons mention made several times of Fidelia Fisk. The house where she was born—which must be over a hundred years old—stands high up on the Shelburne hills. It has been deserted for nearly a dozen years, and is fast going to decay. The old elm in the yard, under which Miss Fisk played in her childhood days, is still alive and flourishing. A fine view of the Connecticut valley is enjoyed from this point. It seems sad to see the old house going to ruin."

Fidelia Fisk, one of the noble band of American women who, early in the present century, exerted such an influence by their spiritual teaching, and the sweet example of their holy lives, was born at Shelburne on March 1st, 1816. She was graduated at the famous Mount Holyoke Seminary, in 1839, and subsequently became a teacher there. In 1843, feeling a call to carry the Gospel to foreign fields, she resigned her position and went as a missionary to Persia.

There she labored fifteen years, much of the time as a teacher of young Persian women. She became the first principal of a seminary at Oroomiah, and worked faithfully there until 1858, when she returned to the United States in broken health. Besides her spiritual work as teacher, she found time to write much. She published a memorial of Mount Holyoke, and Woman and her Saviour in Persia, besides other works. At the time of her death, which took place on Aug. 9, 1864, she was engaged in the preparation of a volume of recollections of Mary Lyon, the founder of Holyoke.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

The Star Wormwood

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Rev. 8: 10, 11.

There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood.

Albert Barnes, Thomas Scott, Matthew Henry, Albert Barnes, and some other commentators say that the star Wormwood of my text was a type of Attila, King of the Huns. He was so called because he was brilliant as a star, and, like wormwood, he embittered everything he touched. We have studied the Star of Bethlehem, and the Morning Star of Revelation, and the Star of Peace, but my subject calls us to gaze at the star Wormwood, and my theme might be called Brilliant Bitterness.

A more extraordinary character history does not furnish than this man Attila, the King of the Huns. The story goes that one day a wounded heifer came limping along through the fields, and a herdsman followed its bloody track on the grass to see where the heifer was wounded, and went on back, further and further, until he came to a sword fast in the earth, the point downward as though it had dropped from the heavens, and against the edges of this sword the heifer had been cut. The herdsman pulled up that sword and presented it to Attila. Attila said that sword must have dropped from the heavens from the grasp of the god Mars, and its being given to him meant that Attila should conquer and govern the whole earth. Other mighty men have been delighted at being called Liberators, or the Merciful, or the Good, but Attila called himself, and demanded that others call him, "The Scourge of God."

It was a common saying that the grass never grew where the hoot of Attila's horse had trod. His armies reddened the waters of the Seine and the Moselle and the Rhine with carnage, and fought on the Catalonian plains the fiercest battle since the world stood—300,000 dead left on the field. On and on until all those who could not oppose him with arms lay prostrate on their faces in prayer; then a cloud of dust was seen in the distance, and a bishop cried, "It is the aid of God;" and all the people took up the cry, "It is the aid of God." As the cloud of dust was blown aside, the banners of reinforcing armies marched in to help against Attila, "the Scourge of God."

Because of his brilliancy and bitterness, the commentators might well have supposed him to be the star Wormwood of the text. As the regions he devastated were parts most opulent with fountains and streams and rivers, you see how graphic my text is: "There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood."

Have you ever thought how many embittered lives there are all about us, misanthropic, morbid, acrid, saturnine? The European plant from which wormwood is extracted, Artemisia absinthium, is a perennial plant, and all the year round it is ready to exude its oil. And in many human lives there is a perennial distillation of acrid experiences. Yea, there are some whose whole work is to shed a baleful influence on others. There are Attilas of the home, Attilas of the social circle, Attilas of the Church, Attilas of the State, and one-third of the waters of all the world, if not two-thirds the waters are poisoned by the falling of the star Wormwood. It is not complimentary to human nature that most men, as soon as they get great power, become overbearing. The more power men have the better, if their power be used for good. The less power men have the better, if they use it for evil.

Birds circle round and round and round before they swoop upon that which they are aiming for. And if my discourse so far has been swinging round and round, this moment it drops straight on your heart and asks the question, Is your life a benediction to others, or an embitterment, a blessing or a curse, a balsam or a wormwood? Some of you, I know, are morning stars, and you are making the dawning life of your children bright with gracious influences, and you are beaming upon all the opening enterprises of philanthropic and Christian endeavor, and you are heralds of that day of Gospelization which will yet flood all the mountains and valleys of our sin-accursed earth. Hail, morning star! Keep on shining with encouragement and Christian hope!

Some of you are evening stars, and you are cheering the last days of old people; and though a cloud sometimes comes over you through the querulousness or unreasonableness of your aged father and mother, it is only for a moment, and the star soon comes out clear again and is seen from all the balconies of the neighborhood. The old people will forgive your occasional shortcomings, for they themselves several times lost their patience with you when you were young, and perhaps whipped you when you did not deserve it. Hail, evening star! Hang on the darkening sky your diamond coronet.

But are any of you the star Wormwood? Do you scold and growl from the thrones paternal or maternal? Are your children everlastingly pecked at? Are you always crying "Hush!" to the merry voices and swift feet, and to the laughter, which occasionally trickles through at wrong times, and is suppressed by them until they can hold it no longer, and all the barriers burst into unlimited guffaw and cachinnation, as in high weather the water has trickled through a slight opening in the mill-dam, but afterward makes wider and wider breach until it carries all before it with irresistible freshet?

What is your influence upon the neighborhood, the town, or the city of your residence? I will suppose that you are a Star of Wit. What kind of rays do you shoot forth? Do you use that splendid faculty to irradiate the world or to rankle it? I bless all the apostolic college of humorists. The man that makes me laugh is my benefactor. I do not thank anybody to make me cry. I can do that without any assistance. We all cry enough, and have enough to cry about. God bless all skilful punsters, all repartees ists, all propounders of ingenious conundrums, all those who mirthfully surprise us with unusual juxtaposition of words. Thomas Hood and Charles Dickens and Sydney Smith had a divine mission, and so have their successors in these times. They slay follies and absurdities which all the sermons of all the pulpits cannot reach. But what use are you making of your wit? Is it besmirched with profanity and uncleanness? Do you employ it in amusement at physical defects for which the victims are not responsible? Are your powers of mimicry used to put religion in contempt? Is it a bunch of nettlesome invective? Is it a bolt of unjust scorn? Is it fun at others' misfortune? Is it glee at their disappointment and defeat? Is it bitterness put drop by drop into a cup? Is it like the squeezing of Artemisia absinthium into a draught already distastefully pungent? Then you are the star Wormwood. Yours is the fun of a rattlesnake trying how well it can sting. It is the fun of a hawk trying how quick it can strike out the eye of a dove.

But I will change this, and suppose you are a star of Worldly Prosperity. Then you have large opportunity. You can encourage that artist by buying his picture. You can bless the world with pomological achievement in the orchard. You can build a church. You can put a missionary of Christ on that foreign shore. You can help to ransom a world. A rich man with his heart right—can you tell me how much good a James Lenox or a George Peabody or a Peter Cooper or a William E. Dodge did while living, or is doing now that he is dead? There is not a city, town or neighborhood that has not specimens of consecrated wealth.

But suppose you grind the face of the poor. Suppose, when a man's wages are due, you make him wait for them because he cannot help himself. Suppose that, because his family is sick and he has had extra expenses, he should politely ask you to raise his wages for this year, and you roughly tell him if he wants a better place to go and get it. Suppose, by your manner, you act as though he were nothing, and you were everything. Suppose you are selfish and overbearing and arrogant. Your first name ought to be Attila, and your last name Attila, because you are the star Wormwood, and you have embittered one-third, if not three-thirds of the waters that roll past your employees and operatives and dependents. Are we embittering the domestic or social or political fountains, or, are we like Moses, who, when the Israelites in the Wilderness complained that the waters of Lake Marah were bitter and they could not drink them, their leader cut off the branch of a certain tree and threw that branch into the water, and it became sweet and slaked the thirst of the suffering host? Are we with a branch of the Tree of Life sweetening all the brackish fountains that we can touch?

Dear Lord, send us all out on this mission. All around us embittered lives—embittered by persecution, embittered by hypercriticism, embittered by poverty, embittered by pain, embittered by injustice, embittered by sin. Why not go forth and sweeten them by smiles, by inspiring words, by benefactions, by hearty counsel, by prayer, by Gospelized behavior? Let us remember that if we are wormwood to others we are wormwood to ourselves, and our life will be bitter and our eternity bitterer. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the only sweetening power that is sufficient. It sweetens the disposition; it sweetens the manners; it sweetens life; it sweetens mysterious Providences; it sweetens afflictions; it sweetens death; it sweetens everything.

What is true of individuals is true of nations. God sets them up to revolve as stars, but they may fall wormwood. Tyre — the atmosphere of the desert, fragrant with spices coming in caravans to her fairs; all seas cleft into foam by the keels of her laden merchantmen; her markets rich with horses and camels from Togarmah; the bazaar filled with upholstery from Dedan, with emerald and coral and agate from Syria, with mines from Helbon, with embroidered work from Ashur and Chilmad. Where now the gleam of her towers? where the roar of her chariots? where the masts of her ships? Let the fishermen who dry their nets where once she stood; let the sea that rushes upon the barrenness where once she challenged the admiration of all nations; let the barbarians who set their rude tents where once her palaces glittered, answer the questions. She was a star, but by her own sin turned to wormwood, and has fallen.

Hundred-gated Thebes—for all time to be the study of antiquarian and hieroglyphist; her stupendous ruins spread over twenty-seven miles; her sculptures presenting in figures of warrior and chariot the victories with which the now forgotten kings of Egypt shook the nations; her obelisks and columns; Karnac and Luxor, the stupendous temples of her pride! Who can imagine the greatness of Thebes in those days, when the hippodrome rang with her sports, and her avenues roared with the wheels of processions in the wake of returning conquerors? What dashed down the vision of chariots and temples and thrones? What hands pulled upon the columns of her glory? Let the [illegible] desolation, and point to fallen gates and shattered statues and pictured sculpture, responding: "Thebes built not one temple to God. Thebes hated righteousness and loved sin. Thebes was a star, but she turned to wormwood, and has fallen."

Babylon, with her 250 towers and her brazen gates and her embattled walls; the splendor of the earth gathered within her gates, her hanging gardens built by Nebuchadnezzar to please his wife, Amytis, who had been brought up in a mountainous country, and could not endure the flat country around Babylon. What battering-ram smote the walls? What plowshare upturned the gardens? What army shattered the brazen gates? What long, fierce blast of storm put out this light which illuminated the world? What crash of discord drove down the music that poured from palace window and garden grove, and called the banqueters to their revel and the dancers to their feet? I walk upon the scene of desolation to find an answer, and pick up pieces of bitumen and brick and broken pottery, the remains of Babylon. I hear the wild waves saying: "Babylon was proud. Babylon was impure. Babylon was a star, but by sin she turned to wormwood and has fallen."

From the persecutions of the Pilgrim Fathers and the Huguenots in other lands, God set upon these shores a nation. The council-fires of the aborigines went out in the greater light of a free government. The sound of the war-whoop was exchanged for the thousand wheels of enterprise and progress. The mild winters, the fruitful summers, the healthful skies, charmed from other lands a race of hardy men, who loved God and wanted to be free. Before the woodman's axe forests fell, and rose again into ships' masts and churches' pillars. Fabulous bushels of Western wheat meet on the way fabulous tons of Eastern coal. Furs from the North pass on the rivers fruits from the South. And trading in the same market are Maine lumberman, and South Carolina rice merchant, and Ohio farmer, and Alaska fur dealer. And churches and schools and asylums scatter light and love and mercy and salvation upon seventy millions of people.

I pray that our nation may not copy the crimes of nations that have perished; that our cup of blessing turn not to wormwood, and we go down. I am by nature and by grace an optimist, and I expect that this country will continue to advance until the world shall reach the millennial era. Our only safety is in righteousness toward God and justice toward man. If we forget the goodness of the Lord to this land, and break his Sabbaths, and improve not by the dire disasters that have again and again come to us as a people, and we learn saving lesson neither from civil war nor raging epidemic, nor drought, nor mildew, nor scourge of locust and grasshopper; if the political corruption which has poisoned the fountains of public virtue, and beslimed the high places of authority, making free government at times a hissing and a by-word in all the earth; if the drunkenness and licentiousness that stagger and blaspheme in the streets of our great cities, as though they were reaching after the fame of a Corinth and a Sodom, are not repented of, we will yet see the smoke of our nation's ruin; the pillars of our National and State Capitols will fall more disastrously than when Samson pulled down Dagon; and future historians will record, upon the page bedewed with generous tears, the story that the free nation of the West arose in splendor which made the world stare; it had magnificent possibilities. It forgot God. It hated justice. It hugged its crimes. It halted on its high march. It reeled under the blow of calamity. It fell. And as it was going down, all the despotisms of earth, from the top of bloody thrones, began to shout: "Aha! so would we have it!" while struggling and oppressed peoples looked out from dungeon bars, with tears and groans, and cries of untold agony, the scorn of those, and the woe of these, uniting in the exclamation: "Look yonder! 'There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood!'"

Our Protegees in India

A Visit to an Orphanage for Girls which has Participated in "The Christian Herald" Fund

ONE of the most devoted and fearless workers for Christ in India is Rev. Alfred S. Dyer, the editor of the Bombay Guardian. He has toiled and suffered much in the cause of Christ in that far-away land, where the laws and customs frequently operate to the misery of the female population. He has recently paid a visit to the orphanage conducted by Mrs. Bruere, who has received help from the fund contributed by our readers. Mr. Dyer says, "It has occurred to me that your readers would be interested in the testimony of an independent eye-witness." He therefore kindly sends a photograph and the following account of the orphan waifs who have now grown strong and well, and are giving themselves to Christ:

"As every farmer is deeply interested in the result of his seed-sowing, so the many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who have helped to relieve famine distress and to succor famine orphans in India, will be glad to hear something of the outcome of blessing.

"I have just ended a long visit (made for the purpose of seeking rest) to a quiet spot near Talegaon, on the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, where is situated Mrs. Bruere's Orphanage for famine girls. Here I have had the privilege and joy of witnessing a gathered spiritual harvest. The group of eight in the photograph which is sent herewith, includes the youngest and the eldest except one, of the more than ten times that number who are being sheltered and trained under holy influences in that Orphanage. They were brought in several small parties from various districts during the famine. The spiritual as well as the physical transformation which has taken place in little more than a year is marvelous.

ORPHAN GIRLS AT TALEGAON, INDIA
(Partially Supported by "The Christian Herald")

"Early in 1898 a great work of grace went on amongst them, with the result that all the elder girls (more than half of the whole) intelligently sought and found Christ as their Saviour, and were baptized on a public profession of their faith in him. All the younger ones desired baptism also, and as it seemed impossible to draw an age limit, they, too, were publicly immersed, with solemn but joyful service in a river near by; and thus have made public avowal of their trust in him who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."

"It will interest many of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers whose gifts helped to make this work possible, to read the following brief histories of the girls in the picture, affording, as they do, specimens of the experiences of many others of the large multitude of famine children who are now safely folded in Christian homes.

"Heria, who stands with a single flower in her right hand on the left of the picture as you face it, is a farmer's daughter. On the death of her father several years prior to the famine, the family, consisting of the widow and four children besides Heria, went to live with the mother's brother. Here they remained until the severest famine days came, when Heria's uncle sent them away, saying he had not enough for two families. Thus cast out, they were obliged to beg as their chief resource. At one place they were permitted to share a stable with some cattle, sleeping of course on the ground among the oxen, etc. In this stable the mother and the youngest boy died within two hours of each other, and were taken away for disposal by the town scavengers without ceremony, slung like animals on a pole, a not infrequent occurrence in those sad times. Shortly afterwards two more of the children died of privation and exposure, Heria and a brother only remaining. These poor orphan waifs contrived to keep themselves alive a while longer by begging, till picked up by an American missionary. But so far as the boy was concerned, food and care were unavailing, and Heria was soon the sole survivor of the family. She is an exceptionally good girl, knowing Christ as her Saviour, and is a joy to those who stand in the relation of foster-parents to her at Mrs. Bruere's Orphanage.

"Sitting beneath Heria is Ananda, with her elder sister Bundia standing beside her. Ananda and Bundia were the only children of their parents. The parents being in a starving condition, started with their two little girls to walk from their village to the nearest town, in hope of getting work and food there, but first the father and then the mother died on the road. The children wandered on, and after being three more days without food, were found by a woman missionary, by whom they were eventually forwarded to Mrs. Bruere. Both the little girls are bright, affectionate and lovable.

"The photograph hardly does justice to the appearance of Rowati, the tall girl standing in the centre. Her features are regular, and beam with intelligence. She is "black but comely." Were her complexion white, she would be regarded in Western lands as handsome. But better than outward beauty, her face now bears the insignia of inward grace. She had never been to school when she came into Mrs. Bruere's charge a little over a year ago, but her progress in learning has been so rapid that she is now a teacher in the Orphanage. When saved from death by hunger, or a worse lot, she was sixteen years old. She had been married at the unusually advanced age (for India) of thirteen; but had not left home to live with her husband. During the famine, her father and mother grew weaker and weaker through lack of food, and finally they both died of want. More fortunate than many, she fell into the hands of a Christian woman, who sent her a journey of two days and two nights in a bullock cart to the Mission station.

"Standing beside Rowati is Goodji, both of whose parents died of starvation. She is one of the larger girls in the Orphanage who have been baptised on the public profession of their faith in Christ. The interesting little girl who stands in front of her, Chimmini by name, is the youngest of the famine children in the Orphanage. Gillie, who sits with her arm around Chimmini, is a cousin of Goodji, and, like her, has intelligently passed into the light and blessing of a disciple of Jesus.

"Lastly, there is Dymot, the girl on the right of the group, with her sari over her head. Her father was a cultivator. When the famine began, the family consisted of five—grandmother, father, mother, Dymot, and a young brother. The three former died of privation in the order named. The boy and girl were succored by missionaries. Dymot's brother is in the orphanage for famine boys at Poona, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Fox. Being only twenty miles distant, they occasionally have the joy of seeing each other. Both have professed Christ by baptism, and give evidence in their daily life of the genuineness of their conversion.

"It will help us to realize the great possibilities of the famine children who are under Christian care in India, if we remember that the noble Pandita Ramabai was once a famine orphan girl.

ALFRED S. DYER.

He Turned to Laugh

A young man was preaching on the streets in London when an infidel came up and said:

"The man who invented gas did more for the world than Jesus Christ."

The young man could not answer him, and the crowd had the laugh on him. But another man got up and said:

"Of course the man has a right to his opinion, and I suppose if he was dying he would send for the gasfitter, but I think I should send for a minister and have him read the 14th chapter of John," and he turned the laugh back on the man.

Comfort Thy Sorrowing Ones

THY sorrowing ones! Oh! how many they are,
Dear Saviour need comfort from thee!
Let love pierce the dark like a beautiful star,
To cheer those who 're needing to see.

Come near them, and tell them to lean on thy breast,
And make all their murmuring cease—
Bid them on thine arms everlasting to rest,
And give them thy comforting peace.

Thyself wast heart-broken—O, give to them calm—
For them all thy sorrows were borne—
Kind Saviour pour out of thy wonderful balm,
To heal the hearts stricken and torn.

Lord, bid them to trustfully look on thy face,
And hold them close—close to thy heart—
O, soothe them till grieving shall turn into faith,
And bitterest sorrow depart.

Thou knowest why suff'ring and sorrow be fall
Thou knowest the weight of all pain—
Thou knowest how blessing can come from it all,
And shining can follow the rain.

There's never a trouble thy hand cannot reach—
No bruise that thy love cannot heal—
We're all in thy keeping, O, come unto each—
The truth of thy love to reveal.

Let grief have no power our faith to benumb,
But help us await the glad day,
When thou in thy glorious kingdom shall come,
And sorrows shall vanish away.

The Railroad Men's Chaplain

John Brunton of the Rio Grande, Once an Engineer, Now a Trusted Spiritual Leader

CHAPLAIN JOHN BRUNTON

THERE are few men more widely known and respected among the railroad employees of the West, than honest John Brunton, of the Rio Grande. Mr. Brunton was born in Scotland 73 years ago, and came to the United States in babyhood. He entered the service of a railroad, and at twenty-one was a locomotive engineer. For thirty-four years, he handled the throttle, and was a fine type of the trustworthy public servant.

John Brunton had a good Christian mother, whose prayers and godly example were the means of bringing about his ultimate conversion. One night, while on his engine, with his train flying along at top speed, he gave his heart to Christ and resolved to live for him henceforth. Several years later, while attending a camp-meeting at Urbana O., where the famous evangelists Inskip and Cookman were addressing multitudes, he experienced a deep spiritual awakening, and from that hour may be dated his active work as a soul winner. In 1881 he was ordained by Bishop Hurst as a local deacon of the M. E. Church, and he has held a preacher's license for many years.

But it is as Railway Chaplain of the Denver & Rio Grande road that Mr. Brunton is most widely known and esteemed. He received this appointment in 1890, and took up his headquarters in Pueblo. It is said by those who know him and his work intimately, that "he has had personal prayers with more sinners than any other man in the State of Colorado." His style of address is frank and outspoken, and he rarely fails to reach the heart and the conscience. In his work he has many classes to deal with: railroad and bank officers, conductors, engineers, and firemen, baggage men, section men, and even tramps. Many a wreck has been saved and many a checkered life rehabilitated through Divine grace under the fearless admonitions and kindly ministrations of John Brunton.

In the pulpit, the Railway Chaplain is never dull. His addresses are full of a natural wit and his familiarity with the business of railroading enables him to draw upon that experience for his anecdotes and illustrations. Besides his duties as a preacher, he visits the sick or injured railway men in the hospitals, officiates at all public meetings held under railroad auspices, acts as mediator in countless disputes, and frequently intercedes in behalf of discharged employees. His headquarters in the little library and reading-room at Pueblo, are a centre of interest for the men. Funds to support his charitable work are supplied by the contributions of railroad officials and employees. His work is conducted absolutely without influence or restraint, as far as the railroad companies are concerned. It is a work which might well be duplicated among the railroads in other parts of the country, where blessings such as have followed Chaplain Brunton's simple ministrations, would be welcomed by many who are now enjoying very few opportunities for beginning the higher life.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Review

Sunday School Lesson for March 26.
Golden Text, John 10 : 27

BY MRS. M. FANSTIL

IN looking back over the first ten chapters of the Word of Life in the Gospel of the Apostle John, the evangelist, one is struck with the great and varied revelation of himself which our Lord has given us in this Scripture. It was only to the man who could understand him and bear witness of him thus that he could confide the Revelation (unveiling) of himself in the isle of Patmos; his last word to his church. He was the Word who was with God, who was God, who made all things, in whom was life, and "the Life was the Light of man." The eternal Word, the Life and Light of the mighty universe, in his wondrous grace, came down to the world of death and darkness to shine heaven's light, and to breathe heaven's light where death and darkness reigned; but "the darkness apprehended it not!"

It was the eternal Word who was also "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." It was as the Lamb of God that his first disciples knew him, and the power of such a revelation severed them from their former life. The sin which the Lamb of God came to take away held them no longer, old circumstances and avocations lost their power; the very teacher, the "man sent from God," who had brought them to "the baptism of repentance," was forsaken, and they followed Jesus.

The first miracle of our Lord was wrought, not in public, but in private family life, to make sufficient provision for a wedding feast in a poor relation's house? And yet it was the Word which was from the beginning who thus, in such a small and uninfluential circle, wrought "this beginning of miracles," and "manifested his glory, and his disciples believed on him!" There was untold majesty in such a "beginning"; it is a sample of all his miracles.

It was again the Eternal Word which met with the timid enquirer, Nicodemus, and showed him the indispensable truth that except a man be born again, he cannot see, still less enter into, the kingdom of God. What he did was in appearance so small, but in reality so great. What his instruments do may seem so great, and yet really is so little; he is the real Worker. Life was in his presence, in his words, in his touch, and yet no outward show proclaimed him; he ranked as a poor man amongst the poor—first despised, then rejected of men.

If to some this conversation with Nicodemus would seem to be hardly worth his while, how much more so the time and strength spent over the Samaritan woman! Nicodemus was at least one of the elders of the people, a man of distinction among the Jews in Jerusalem. But the Samaritan was of a despised race, poor, only a woman, and withal a bad woman! Yet the Eternal Word saw in this lost member of the human race a gem which ranked with him as equal to the Jewish ruler, and he gave as much time and pains to her as to the other. And here again, in the words of truth by which she was begotten again lay a hidden harvest of life power which should quicken hundreds of thousands in ages to come.

It was again as the Eternal Word that he met the nobleman, coming under no authority which worldly position arrogates to itself; not entering into the plans and thoughts of an earthly courtier to "come down" and heal his son, but speaking in Cana, where he was with his own intrinsic authority, "Go thy way; thy son liveth." In every meeting with men he insisted on faith as the indispensable necessity, the law of the new life.

But while he came under no earthly authority independently of his Father, he was ever the One sent of God. More than thirty times in this Gospel he declares how he was sent of his Father, and so utterly subject to him that he could do nothing of himself, nor yet speak of himself. His whole life was a living out of the Father's will. "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."

And thus doing nothing of himself, but revealing the Father at all times, he, the Eternal Word, multiplied the loaves, not only out of compassion to the multitude told of the "living water;" the Holy Spirit who should come; he proclaimed freedom from sin; but all to unwilling ears and hardened hearts, and when, as the Light of the World, he opened the eyes of the man born blind, both he and the healed man were persecuted as though some great sin had been committed by him. And yet he was always the Eternal Word, and instead of retaliating and acting or speaking in deserved indignation, he made himself known as the Good Shepherd who giveth his life for the sheep!

"I AM COME THAT THEY MIGHT HAVE LIFE."

before him, but as a proof to the disciples that the God of their fathers who gave them bread from heaven, lived still in the Eternal Son, and to prove to all that believe in him that children of God who truly believe need never be disconcerted under any circumstances. Believing that he is with us, and our cause really in his hands, he will not, cannot, fail those who put their trust in him, and the difficulties, impossibilities in our lives are his opportunities to manifest his glory.

In chapters 7, 8, we see him as the Eternal Word, speaking words impossible to be understood by those who believed not, and yet they were words given of the Father for that very occasion: words they were which tested and caused division among those who heard him, but the power which was in them paralyzed the very officers which were sent by the chief priests and Pharisees, who returned without their expected prisoner and said, "Never man spake like this Man." He wanted to make it quite clear that Christ was the Son of God, sent to the world to reveal God to men. Adopting the language of the Alexandrian philosophers, he represented Christ as the Logos or Word. That is, as we know the mind or soul of our friend by what he says, so we may know God by Christ, who is the Word made flesh. If we can thus conceive of Christ as the utterance, or manifestation of God, we are prepared for John's explanation of his purpose. We would expect that such a manifestation of God in human form would have a peculiar glory or brightness. John, therefore, selects from the life of Christ such incidents and such discourses as, in his opinion, show this glory. Besides this, he records utterances of Christ, not mentioned by the other evangelists, which showed that Christ claimed this unique personality. This is the key to the understanding of John's Gospel. Keeping this in mind, we see how each incident and discourse falls into

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

IN reviewing the preceding twelve lessons, it is important to keep in mind the avowed purpose of the writer of this Gospel. He was evidently familiar with the other three Gospels and proposed to supply their deficiencies. He place and subserves his purpose. A great deal more might have been related, as to this we are indebted, under God, to the Gospel, but these are the items and as he believes are sufficient. First, he describes the manifestation to the world. This occupies twelve chapters, in which he records miracles and teachings. Afterwards he reports the manifestation to the disciples, which was more private and intimate. Each of the passages we have considered during the quarter, presents one special aspect of Christ's character and is designed to teach its special and peculiar lesson. They represent Christ as giving Light, as the spiritual food of man; as the giver of life; as forgiving sin; and as the Shepherd protecting his people.

For Jesus himself testified (John 4 : 44). There is sarcasm in this remark. It is given in explanation of Christ's purpose in going to Galilee. He wanted retirement, therefore he went into his own country—the place of all others where he should have had the most enthusiastic welcome. It is as if he had said, "No one there will want to see me." Unhappily, this is generally true. People are slow to recognize greatness in their neighbors. Hawthorne's familiar story of "the great stone face" is an illustration. The people of the valley were looking eagerly for the great man who was to come, whose features would be like those of the huge face which nature had chiselled on the mountain side, overlooking the valley. A rich man came and they thought they recognized the lineaments; then a successful soldier came, and again they fancied a resemblance; then an orator was greeted as the expected man. All these were wrong. The man they sought was living among them, had lived in the valley from childhood to old age and none of them had recognized him.

Hath everlasting life (John 5 : 24). A famous novelist, in one of his works describes a man searching for the elixir of life. He represents his hero as a young and handsome man, whose learning and accomplishments were a mystery to all who knew him. It seemed incredible that one so young should have acquired so much knowledge. His own explanation was that he remembered himself as a very old man, feeble and diseased. He was on the verge of the grave, when from a bottle in the possession of a dervish he drank a draught which transformed him into a young and healthy man. But he could get no more of this life-giving fluid, and all his time was devoted to discovering the secret of its composition. The draught he had already taken was still potent in his veins and would keep him alive for a century, but he wanted to live on and on. This is what Christ gives to those who believe on him. Death to them only opens the door of a new and fuller life. Like the butterfly, they emerge from their old being with new powers and new beauty.

One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see (John 9 : 25). A priest in Belgium who told a girl whom he found reading the Bible that it was an heretical book that she ought not to keep, received a reproof which silenced him. The girl said: "You know what kind of home ours used to be. I have heard you reprove my father and brother for their drinking habits and beg them to reform. My mother and I suffered from their violence, as you know. You saw the bruises made by their blows. We seldom had enough to eat, and when my mother earned any money my father often made her give it up to him for drink. Well, they took to reading this book, and since then they have given up their wicked ways. They are regularly at work, and they bring their earnings home. It is a new home now, and the change has all come from this book. Do you wonder I love it?"

The porter openeth (John 10:3). "I would not cross the street," Spurgeon once said, "to hear myself preach, and I do not know why the people come unless it is that the Lord sends them." He had no eloquence, only the charm of using language so simple that anyone could understand it, and he preached the plain Gospel, in which he believed with all his heart and soul. The Holy Spirit, whom Christ likens here to the porter, opened the hearts of the people to the truth as he declared it. He was never trained in a theological college, never ordained; but to him the Holy Spirit, the porter, opened and the Lord's people, heard his voice.

GROUP OF COTTAGES AT THE MINNEAPOLIS OLD SOLDIERS' HOME

A Home For Aged Veterans

The Beautiful Retreat at Minneapolis, Where Old Soldiers Pass the Closing Years of Their Lives

AMONG the various institutions provided for the support of those who have served their country faithfully and well, there is none that combines comfort and the genuine home-like character in a greater degree than the Minnesota Soldiers' Home. This beautiful group of buildings is situated within the city limits of Minneapolis, on a point of land formed by the junction of Minnehaha Creek, with the Mississippi river. A quarter of a mile distant are the beautiful Minnehaha Falls, immortalized in Longfellow's poem. The location of the Home, both as to picturesqueness and healthfulness, could not well be surpassed. Electric cars reach it from both Minneapolis and St. Paul. Surrounding it on three sides is a beautiful public park of over 125 acres, fifty of which are the Home grounds proper. Ten acres are under cultivation as a garden. All the grounds are adorned and beautified with flowering shrubs, and are intersected by winding roads which pass all the main buildings. Two fountains give the scene an air of animation, and the military idea is preserved by two somewhat elaborate "forts," constructed in regular soldier-like fashion. All the grounds are lighted with electricity. The buildings are of pressed brick and stone, and are uniform in architectural design, yet varied in detail. Especially notable is the Administration building, which cost $35,000. The other permanent structures are the hospital, a large, double building, a laundry and four neat and commodious cottages. Each of the latter will accommodate about fifty persons. All the buildings are heated by steam radiators and electrically lighted.

In this beautiful retreat, surrounded by so many advantages, the old soldiers who have given the best years of their lives in their country's service, are now comfortably housed. Here they spend the closing years of life amid cheerful influences, and many evidences of kindness and consideration. In the library of the Home—where there are some 2,000 bound volumes and perhaps 1,000 odd numbers of current magazines, besides daily and weekly papers—the veterans pass many a pleasant hour, especially on stormy days. In fine weather, they saunter about the beautiful garden or the woodlands.

Many of the old soldiers are deeply religious and all take a warm interest in the services that are conducted at the Home every Sunday. These services have been productive of much good. Hearts have been touched, and men who, in earlier years, shared the perils of many battlefields, have now taken their stand under the banner of the Prince of Peace.

Altogether, the inmates of the Minnesota Soldiers' Home may be truthfully said to be happy and contented. They find the declining years of life full of comfort, and bright with the assurance of a hereafter, where war, and death are unknown.

VETERANS AT THE GATE OF THE HOME

He Took the Prince at His Word

It is recorded in history that some years ago a man was condemned to be put to death. When he came to lay his head on the block, the prince who had charge of the execution asked him if there was any one petition that he could grant him. All that the condemned man asked for was a glass of water. They went and got him a tumbler of water, but his hand trembled so that he could not get it to his mouth.

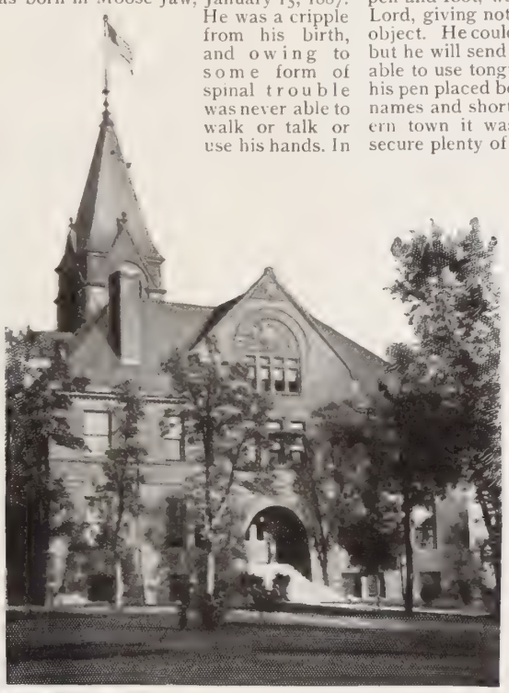
The prince said to him: "Your life is safe until you drink that water."

He took the prince at his word, and dashed the water to the ground. They could not gather it up, and so he saved his life. My friend, you can be saved now by taking God at his word. The water of life is offered to "whosoever will." Take it now, and live.

A Little Christian Hero

Though Crippled and Dumb, Herbie Bellamy Did a Wonderful Work for Christ

A VERY striking example of child heroism and conquest of obstacles, has just come to us from the Canadian North-west. The name of the little hero is Herbie Bellamy. He was born in Moose Jaw, January 15, 1887. He was a cripple from his birth, and owing to some form of spinal trouble was never able to walk or talk or use his hands. In 1892 Herbie learned to wheel himself around with his feet in a little four-wheeled cart which his father had made for him. He was a bright and interesting little fellow, with expressive eyes, and a mobile countenance: even at that early age there were evidences of a marked spiritual perception and religious development wonderful in a child. His home was one calculated to promote the growth of true moral sentiment. An older brother's constant care drew the little one so close to him that a pet name for him was the one word Herbie made intelligible. But his mother understood him, and it was wonderful to see them talk, for Herbie's method was facial expression, supplemented by head and feet.



THE ADMINISTRATION BUILDING

When Herbie learned to push himself around in his little cart, his mother took charge of the Sunday School infant-class. Then began Herbie's regular attendance at Sunday School. He at once became interested, learning and, in his own way, reciting the topic, golden text, and main facts of the lesson. Some time after this, a surgeon visited the place and saw Herbie. In the interview he said that, while Herbie would never be able to use his hands, he could certainly learn to write with his foot. This was a happy and valuable suggestion, and after a time the art was acquired with comparative readiness and astonishing skill.

During all this time he had shown special interest in missionary work. Soon after his mother became infant-class teacher, the whole class was organized into a Mission Band. Herbie was unanimously chosen president, and henceforth the society was known as "Herbie's Mission Band." This proved a great blessing to Herbie, still further deepening his sympathy, widening his knowledge and increasing his interest in mission work. Missionaries on their way to and from Japan, calling at that place, centralized his thought and interest upon that country, until finally he decided to earn enough money to educate a Japanese boy so that he could take his place and preach in his native land the Gospel of Christ, which Herbie himself could not do.

"Think of it!" exclaimed the hero's pastor. "A ten-year-old child, speechless and helpless, a physical wreck, undertaking to literally fulfil our Master's last command!"

Herbie went to work, and soon, with pen and foot, was doing business for the Lord, giving not one-tenth, but all to this object. He could not go himself to Japan, but he will send a boy in his place. Unable to use tongue, hands or limbs, he has his pen placed between his toes and writes names and short letters, and in that western town it was not difficult for him to secure plenty of work. As a result of his first year of loving labor the annual Missionary report of Herbie's Church for 1897 shows the following: "From Moose Jaw we received the handsome sum of $83, the result of the efforts of a little cripple lad, Herbie Bellamy, to be used expressly and only for the education of a pupil in Kanazawa Orphanage." One year later Herbie's Band raised the almost incredible sum of $160.05, while the ordinary church contributions had increased over fifty per cent. On the evening of December 4th he talked much with his mother of his prospects. He had then himself $69, and said he was going to work hard to make it $75 by New Year's.

The following week Herbie Bellamy was suddenly taken seriously ill. When his little frame was racked with pain and his lips were parched with fever, the little suffering saint simply said: "God is good to give me such nice cold water." There is a touch of true heroism in the closing scenes of this Christian life. The Lord's work had grown to be with him a spiritual passion, and it was strong even in death. The unselfish, generous nature was beautifully revealed in his last request: "Keep up my Mission Band." After six weeks of intense suffering, God took this consecrated spirit to be with Himself, on Jan. 21, 1899, at the age of twelve years and six days.

Herbie's memory is precious. In the few years of his little life, and in spite of the greatest disadvantages, he had made a record that will thrill and encourage all who read of it. His noble work has stirred the hearts of those who knew and loved him, and perhaps to some others the story of his simple faith, his missionary zeal and his whole-souled devotion will prove a comfort and an inspiration.

An Everlasting Shame

THE Joint High Commission, after settling eleven of the questions between Canada and the United States, have found the twelfth an insurmountable obstacle, and have adjourned until next August. If after eight months' of sessions at Ottawa and Washington the High Commission—composed of splendid men on all sides—finally quit their work with a controversy not settled, it will be an everlasting shame. We cannot believe that after all that has been said and done the relations between England and the United States are to be strained. It would put back the doctrine of arbitration more than the last quarter of a century has put it forward. It cannot be that a question of boundary line will disrupt the good international feeling. Both sides had better give up a great deal of land and sea than give up the cordiality of the two English-speaking nations, who to-day hold the destinies of the earth in their mighty grasp. Though two of the most important members of the Joint High Commission have died as martyrs in the service—Mr. Dingley from overwork, and Lord Herschell from a wound received while on duty—yet there are enough good and great men left on that Commission to settle once and forever the last difference between these Christian nations. Let us pray God that enough wisdom and kindness and generosity may be given to avert from the United States and Great Britain the calamity of non-agreement.

Wesley Memorial

THE second of March, the date of John Wesley's ascension, has for several years been commemorated. That is well, for this country at a certain time badly treated him. While in Savannah, Ga., the grand jury indicted him for a long list of offences. He attended seven sessions of the court, ready to prove his innocence on all the charges, but they would not allow him to make answer; so he escaped in the night in a boat, landing twenty miles away, and then trudged the swamps four days and nights in hunger and thirst and fatigue, and took ship at Charleston for England. That is the way America treated John Wesley alive. Most appropriate is it that our country do now, by way of atonement, as far as possible, what it can for the wrongs inflicted more than a hundred years ago. But that has been the world's habit in the treatment of its best men and women. Curse them while living. Praise them after they are dead. Christ held up to view the habit of ante mortem outrage followed by post mortem eulogy, as he pointed to some grand tombstones raised over people who had been badly treated while living and said: "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, because ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous and say if we had been in the place of our fathers we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." Thank God the day has come when all Christendom honors the name of John Wesley. Amid the high things said of him, I notice a lack of recognition of him as a hymnologist. His brother, Charles Wesley, wrote so many more songs that the world is apt to forget that John Wesley wrote any. Some of the mightiest hymns broke from his pen, hymns that will live as long as eternity, for, though after the new song of heaven arises, there may be no more use for earthly rhythm, the songs we sang on earth will forever be a part of our most thrilling reminiscence. John Wesley wrote that battle shout, "Give to the winds thy fears," and he put into English that German hymn of condensed evangelism, "Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness," and presented to the church of all ages those buoyant stanzas, "Thee will I love, my strength and tower," and other doxologies on which great congregations have many times been lifted heavenward. Because Charles Wesley may have had stronger wings and taken higher flights in poesy is no reason why we should fail to recognize that John Wesley, the organizer, was John Wesley, the inspired hymnologist. What must be his heavenly reward! Just think of him more than a hundred years in heaven. But I hope he has been somewhere near enough to earth to hear some of the fine things said about him. He heard, while on earth, the mean side, the lying side, the persecuting side, and it seems to me it is high time that he heard from human lips, as well as from angelic, the grateful side, the grand side, the glorious side!

Colonial Economies of the World

THE Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, U. S. Treasury Department says there are 125 colonies, protectorates and dependencies on the face of the earth. They occupy two-fifths of the territory and embrace one-third of the entire population of the globe. In all, they aggregate 500,000,000 of people. All the governing countries lie in the North Temperate zone, all the dependencies in the Torrid. Save on the South American Continent, no independent republic exists in the latter zone. The total imports of these dependencies amount to more than one billion and a half dollars; more than 40 per cent. of their imports are purchased of the mother countries, and of their exports more than 40 per cent. goes to the same. Those that have the largest civil liberty are the most successful. Two-fifths of these dependencies belong to Great Britain, about one-third of them belonging to France.

In view of our recent territorial expansion, we may well study the situation as presented to us by Great Britain. She has brought the three hundred and fifty millions of her colonists into market communication with herself. What Prof. Seeley once called "Greater England" is almost entirely made up of these colonies. She has in these colonies 55,000 miles of railway and 150,000 miles of telegraph wires, and the deposits in her colonial banks amount to $300,000,000. A Nicaraguan Canal would bring the products and manufactured goods of the United States as near to Manila as is Havana to New York. To-day, only about six per cent. of the Philippine imports come from this country. There is no reason why we should not supply [illegible] 8,000,000 with what they need in cottons, manufactures of iron and steel, machinery, mineral oils, provisions, bread stuffs, and other articles of this class of which our market is more than full.

Here is the two-fold commercial cord which will soon bind us to these new dependencies. It is the American opportunity, and Americans are quick to see and improve their opportunities. It is an opportunity we did not seek, but one bright morning, before the Spanish vessels had got up steam, it came to us through Admiral Dewey.

Can the People be Trusted?

THIS is a question sometimes asked, and many a politician is flattering his constituents by an affirmative answer. What shall we say? If we follow the line of the familiar Quaker utterance, we should reply that the people can be trusted if they are all like "me and thee, tho' sometimes thee is a little uncertain." If the people were good and pure and noble-minded, there would be no need of even asking the question. But are there not unbelievers among "the people?" Are there not sensuous animals, who, by gluttony and drink, have destroyed well-nigh every semblance of humanity? Are there not misers who would demolish the republic, if only they might build their treasure house on its ruins? Can we therefore say that the people can be trusted—that their voice is the voice of God? Yes: notwithstanding these blotches, these degenerates. Faith in the people is one of the best and richest products of civilization. Charlemagne would have laughed at it: even Solomon would have been shaken out of his pessimism and compelled to acknowledge that here at least was a "new thing under the sun." But let us beware lest the phrase become the indisputable utterance of an eternal fact. It is not: it was never so. The Jews could not be trusted, and therefore Zedekiah languished in a foreign dungeon and Ezekiel sighed to the night wind of the Euphrates. The Egyptians, the Babylonians, all earlier nationalities, could not be trusted, and therefore their government was dissolved and their cities wasted. It is only in so far as the people are God's people, or at least permeated by righteous sentiment, that they are led on, often without knowing it, by religious ideals, and are impressed by the convic-

The Bible was not circulated in Cuba until 1882. In that year the American Church Missionary Society built at Matanzas the first Episcopal [illegible] in Cuba.

The Ohio State Legislature has passed a bill appropriating $6,000 for a statue of the late Miss Frances Willard, to be placed in Statuary Hall, Washington, D. C.

Rev. Arthur Gates of Plainfield, N. J., has just closed a successful meeting with the First Baptist Church, St. Paul, Minn., Rev. H. F. Stillwell, pastor. There have been many additions.

The American Bible Society circulates the Scriptures in [illegible] languages and dialects, 30 American Indian, and 3 South American languages and dialects.

President C. F. Gates of Harpoot has sent word that the Sultan of Turkey has consented to [illegible] the American Board in Asia Minor during the Armenian [illegible]

The number of Christian Endeavor Societies in existence, on Christian Endeavor Day, February 2, 1899, was 54,934, with a total membership of [illegible] lands, and 3,467 others are in Canada.

A remarkable religious awakening is said to be going on in a quarter of Lisbon, which has hitherto been unaffected by Protestant influence. The work was initiated by a Christian from Brazil, and [illegible] persons are present every evening.

The American Bible Society has received a special report from Rev. John R. Hykes, on the Philippine Islands as a field of work for the Society. His report indicates that there would be no hope of religious liberty or of an open Bible without American control of the islands.

Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute of which Booker T. Washington is principal, is the scene of a remarkable work of grace. It began with the week of prayer. During that week no less than one hundred students declared themselves resolved in Christ's strength to follow him.

Statistics of lunacy in England show that this year the number of patients in asylums, controlled by municipal bodies, is in excess of those in the same asylums last year by seven hundred. Of these, one-fourth have become demented through the immoderate use of alcholic drinks.

Rev. James Wharton is making an evangelistic tour among Congregational churches of the South. He had great success during his eight days [illegible] Church, Washington, [illegible] and evening. More than 100 persons made profession of faith.

The converts of the Church Missionary Society in South and Middle China contributed last year toward the support of their churches an aggregate sum of $10,171. Considering how poor the average Chinese laborer is, this is an enormous sum, and shows that conversion is bearing fruit in [illegible]

One Spaniard at least has had the penetration to perceive that his country's fatal error in dealing with the colonies was its alliance with the priests. He bluntly told Sagasta in the Cortes that his "policy was disastrous because you joined sword and cassock in order to establish a feudal theocracy."

An extremely simple creed which has been adopted by a Chicago church is quoted by a correspondent of the Congregationalist as follows: "We believe in the two laws of love toward God and toward our neighbor as proclaimed and expounded by Jesus to be the fundamental and all-inclusive ideal of every true life."

The American Sunday School Union, whose headquarters are in Philadelphia, will celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary at the Academy of Music in that city on May 25. Many eminent speakers will be present, besides representatives from all parts of the United States. During its seventy-five years of work it has organized over 130,000 Sunday Schools.

College Settlements are careful to avoid [illegible] their philanthropic work by distinct religious effort, but at least one settlement has found that the two objects are not incompatible. Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall stated at a recent meeting that the workers in the settlement conducted by the Union Theological Seminary, had "found family after family that gladly welcomed religious services."

The Doshisha College in Japan has once more become a Christian institution. Although built and endowed by American Christians, the trustees took it from under Christian control and made it a secular college. The American board, however, has protested in vigorous terms that the trustees have all resigned and a new board has been elected, which has recalled the former teachers to their chairs. The former constitution has also been restored.

Samoa's Rival Kings

HOPES of a peaceful settlement of the Samoan trouble are encouraged by the attitude of Baron Von Bulow, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs. He has assured Mr. Andrew D. White, our Ambassador at Berlin, of his government's desire to find an amicable solution of the difficulty, and declares that in the meantime Germany will strictly adhere to the terms of the treaty under which the affairs of Samoa are administered by the United States, Germany and England. He has given evidence of his sincerity by appointing Herr Solf successor to Dr. Raffel, whose relations with the American and English consuls have become hostile. Probably that change of officials will do more than anything else to restore tranquillity. All the reports of recent events, from both American and German sources, show that if the three consuls had acted together on either side, there would have been no bloodshed or looting. But with the German consul supporting one candidate for the throne and the American and English consuls the other candidate, an opportunity was given to the Samoans to settle the dispute by a fight, as they have been accustomed to do. This result was the one that the treaty was framed to prevent. It provided that in the event of a dispute as to the succession to the throne, the question should be submitted to the Chief Justice, whose decision was to be final. The rival candidates were Malietoa Tanu, the son of the late king, and Mataafa, a chief who had made trouble in the former reign and had been banished, but allowed to return on condition that he abstained from further plotting. Chief Justice Chambers, who is an American, listened to the pleas on both sides, and after spending eleven days in weighing the evidence, decided in favor of Tanu. The German Consul refused to accept the decision and encouraged Mataafa to resist. Mataafa was fully prepared, and as he had 3,500 men under his command, while Tanu had only 2,000, he was speedily in control. Tanu's troops were driven out of Apia and the town was looted by Mataafa's men. The German Consul closed the Chief Justice's court, and announced that he had been superseded by a German official. Mr. Chambers, however, obtained help from an English warship in the bay, forced an entrance to the court, and ran up the English and American flags. Mataafa has so far succeeded in maintaining his position, but he will have to yield if the new German Consul should, according to Baron Von Bulow's promise, adhere to the terms of the treaty and accept the Chief Justice's decision as final. Mataafa has injured his own cause by his violence and lawlessness. As he cannot hope to reign without the consent of the three great powers, he would have done better to have conciliated them, and not to have attempted armed resistance. But, like the sinner who rebels against God, he did not stay to count the cost of his rebellion. He will have to answer the question that God put to Job:

Wilt thou also disannul my judgment? Wilt thou condemn me that thou mayest be righteous? (Job 40: 8).

A Responsible Position

A newspaper writer who recently visited the New York & New Haven Railroad's depot at Boston, Mass., gives a vivid account of the system adopted for switching trains. "What interested me most," he says "was the electric train-controller which is a marvel of ingenuity and apparently of safety as well. Three shifts of men, working eight hours a day, are required to handle the 750 trains that I was assured pass through the station daily. Working in his tower with compressed air cylinders connected with electric wires, a touch of the finger is sufficient to make connections work on the instant and shunt an incoming train onto the proper track where the passengers are to be landed. The control is perfect, and the combinations are very like those of the most improved switchboard similar to those one sees in a telephone or telegraph office. But I was glad that some one rather than myself, had the responsibility of switching people about at a time when the movement of the trains must be almost incessant." The writer had evidently a less exalted opinion of his own powers than some of the prominent men of our day who criticize God's providential dealings in controlling and directing human affairs.

O Lord I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jer. 10: 23).

A Policeman's Unusual Offence

A trial probably unprecedented in the annals of the New York police force took place last week. A roundsman named William Nesbitt was charged before Commissioner Sexton with preaching in a Methodist Episcopal church on Sunday, January 22. His Captain, who preferred the charge, explained that on that night Nesbitt was on duty from five o'clock till midnight, but the Captain had received an anonymous letter stating that at 8.30 he was in the church in question preaching. Nesbitt said in explanation that he had been invited to speak on that Sunday evening, but, finding that he was to be on duty, had declined. As he was passing the church while making his round he went in and apologized to the congregation for being unable to speak, and then resumed his patrol. The Commissioner reprimanded him for being in a church when he should have been on his post, and cautioned him against repeating the offence. The Commissioners have not much trouble of this kind. They have more difficulty in keeping their men out of saloons than out of churches. Technically, we suppose the roundsman was in fault, but if the charges against the police were all of this kind the people would be very glad.

When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice; but when the wicked beareth rule the people mourn (Prov. 29: 2).

A Brother Changes His Mind

A citizen of New York who is in business as a contractor and owns a large stable in Harlem, where he keeps over forty horses, was returning home from an entertainment one night lately, when he was informed by a friend that his brother was locked up in the Harlem police station. His friend had seen him earlier in the evening in the grasp of a policeman. He inquired the charge, and had been told that it was "attempted arson." The contractor had no very strong affection for his brother, who was a drinking man and was continually appealing to him for funds, but he did not like to think of his spending the night in a cell. He therefore went to the station house and offered bail for his brother. The sergeant accepted him at once, but said it was "a queer offer." "Why is it queer?" the contractor asked. "Who should bail him if his brother does not?" The sergeant admitted that it was natural for one brother to bail another, but he said, "You are the prosecutor in this case. It was your stable that he set on fire." The contractor was astonished at the strange news and immediately withdrew his offer of bail. "Let him stay," he said. "He does not deserve to be let out." There he showed human nature. A wrong done against himself seemed a greater wrong than if it had been done against some one else. It is well for the world that Christ was not of that spirit. He wished that those who were most conspicuous in causing his death should be the first to benefit by it.

CHIEF JUSTICE CHAMBERS, OF SAMOA

And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem (Luke 24. 47).

Why the Wedding was Delayed

A party of wedding guests assembled at a house in the suburbs of Jersey City, N. J., a few days ago, speculated on the cause of the absence of the bridegroom. The wedding was fixed for seven o'clock, but half an hour passed, and still he did not come. The bride, at first only puzzled, became hysterical as she realized the slight her lover was putting upon her. The guests suggested various causes which might have delayed him, but when eight o'clock struck, and he had not arrived, they began to suspect that he did not intend to come. Finally, the bride's mother, deeply mortified by the delay, went to the house where her prospective son-in-law lived with his parents. He was sitting, attired in his dress suit, talking to them. He had not been able to summon courage to tell them he was going to be married. He had explained his attire by saying that he was going to a party. The arrival of the lady precipitated a crisis, and he had to confess his intentions. His parents were annoyed at the marriage and at their son's duplicity, but as he was of age, they could not prevent the ceremony taking place. He accompanied his future mother-in-law to her home and the belated marriage was duly solemnized. It may be hoped that the union will be a happy one, but fit had an ominous beginning. The bride cannot have much respect for a husband who shrank from declaring his love and his purpose to his family. There are some who show the same lack of courage in shrinking from making an open confession of their allegiance to Christ. They forget the solemn warning that he uttered:

Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed when he shall come in his glory (Luke 9. 26).

A Spite Fence

The quarrel of two New Jersey property owners has had an amusing outcome. One of them recently erected a big tenement house on his land. It was capable of accommodating fourteen families. It did not cover all the ground, but left two feet on each side for air and light. Soon afterwards, the owner of the adjoining lots decided to erect a similar house, but he proposed to cover his ground. He thought that the two feet his neighbor had left would be a sufficient space between the houses. His neighbor, however, urged him to build, as he had done, two feet within his line and thus there would be a space of four feet for air and light. He would not consent to do this, believing that two feet was space enough. His neighbor thought it unjust that he should thus provide an air-shaft for both houses, and determined that it should not be done. In order to prevent the tenants of the new house deriving any benefit from the two feet of space, he has erected a fence of corrugated iron on his own line, which runs close to his neighbor's house. This shuts out the light and air from the windows on that side, while his own tenants are not incommoded by it. It was natural that he should be provoked at his neighbor's attempt to utilize for his own benefit the air-shaft he had provided, but he would not have erected the fence which does him no good but only does harm to his neighbor, if he had received the spirit of Christ, who forbade such retaliation.

I say unto you that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also and whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain (Matt. 5: 39-41).

APIA, THE CAPITAL OF SAMOA

A Costly Blunder

The owner of a lot at Van Nest, N. Y., has made a strange discovery. He is at present a resident of New York City. Some months ago, hearing that a certain estate was being subdivided and sold in lots, he went to the agent and purchased certain lots. Having to visit the neighborhood on other business recently, he made time to go and look at his lots. To his astonishment, he found on them a Queen Anne cottage nearly completed. He ascertained the name of the owner, and on his return to the city, notified the agent from whom he had purchased the lots. It was then found that the trespasser had bought the adjoining lots, and that his contractor had begun building without having a survey made. It was admitted by all parties that the house stood on the wrong lot. It was offered at a low price to the owner of the land on which it stood, but he did not want such a house. Finally, after long negotiation, he was induced to accept the lots belonging to the owner of the house, and received as compensation for making the exchange a thousand dollars. It was a bad blunder to spend money in building a house on another man's land, but there are men who discover, when they come to die, that they have been guilty of worse folly in building up a fortune which they must leave behind, while they have neglected to secure the inheritance which might be forever theirs:

I hated all my labor which I had taken, because I should leave it unto the man that should be after me, and who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? Yet shall he have rule over all my labor (Eccles. 2. 18).

Pope Leo XIII. and his Times

ST. PAUL'S GATE, ROME

THE PALACE OF THE CAESARS

ONCE again, the occupant of the Vatican has become an object of acute interest to the civilized world. When the news of Leo XIII's sudden illness was circulated recently, it was believed that his great age and feebleness would make it extremely doubtful whether he could undergo the operation which his physicians decided to be necessary. His illness resulted from a tumor on the thigh, of thirty years' growth, the excision of which he bore with much fortitude. His physical condition, however, is such that the slightest indisposition may have a serious result, and the princes of the Roman Church, by whom he is constantly surrounded, realize the fact that the day is not far distant when another Pontiff must be chosen to the throne of the Papacy.

Half a century has witnessed many remarkable changes in the social, political and religious condition of Europe. Not the least of these have been the changes that have taken place within the Church of Rome itself. In the aged Leo XIII. the world has witnessed, not without wonder, the head of the Roman hierarchy casting behind him many of the time-worn trammels and traditions that formerly hedged the pontificate, and acting in a spirit more in harmony with the progressive and enlightened character of the age than any of his predecessors would have dared to do. The head of the church has been in advance of and better than the church itself.

Rome is still Rome, and clings, with its ancient pertinacity, to its outworn dogmas, its absurd traditions and superstitions, its mummeries of things sacred, its idol and relic-worship, and its claims upon the consciences of men. It is still an organization of spiritual contradictions and deep secular craft. But the church's dogmas and tenets aside, Leo XIII. has shown himself one of the great men of the century. He has sought, although unsuccessfully, to extend the limits of the church by alliance with the millions who adhere to the Greek communion. He has established friendly relations with the Republic of France, to the surprise of those who assumed that royalty alone had a right to papal recognition. He has devoted thought and study to the great social problems of the age, and has echoed, in polished periods, the doctrine of human equality. He has shown a deep sympathy with the poor and the oppressed. His [illegible] statesmanlike qualities of a high order. His advice has been listened to with respect in the cabinets of Europe, and while Americans could not recognize his right to interfere in our relations with Spain, they gave him credit for purity and sincerity of purpose. All his efforts have been in line with a purpose to reconcile the church with the age and the age with the church. And now, in his declining years, his figure looms up, venerable and impressive, against the twilight sky of the century.

POPE LEO XIII.

Joachim Vincent Raphael Lodovico Pecci was born at Carpineto, Italy, March 10, 1810. Carpineto, a little town of 5,000 inhabitants, lodged in a cleft of the Volscian Mountains, was described by Cardinal Joseph Pecci, the Pontiff's brother, as "an eagle's nest, high above the plain, between two gigantic rocks;" and it may be said that Leo XIII., in his superior faculties of watchfulness, observation, and domination, has shown qualities that might have been nurtured in an eagle's nest. His parents were Count Domenico Lodovico Pecci and Countess Anna. The countess is said to have been a lovely woman and an excellent mother. There is a tradition that she always felt that her fourth son, Vincent, as she called him, would ultimately become Pope.

Europe was convulsed with the throes of Napoleonic ambition, when Count Lodovico Pecci was forced into the service of the Corsican, although all the sympathies of the Pecci family must have been opposed to Napoleon. Only after Protestant arms were victorious over France at Waterloo did the papal conscience breathe freely. Pius restored the suppressed Society of Jesus; and to the Jesuit College at Viterbo, Joachim and his younger brother, Ferdinando, were sent. Here young Pecci began to show his love for classical literature, and to give early promise of that ability which has made his encyclicals distinguished as finished specimens of scholarly art.

Leo XII., who succeeded Pius VII., restored the noted Jesuit Collegio Romano, and to this, in 1823, came Vincent, or Joachim, Pecci; and here, as at Viterbo, he stood pre-eminent among his fellow-students, and academic honors crowded thick and fast upon him. When he was twelve years of age he was appointed to welcome the Provincial of the Jesuits to Viterbo, on a great occasion, in Latin verse of his own composition. At the Collegio Romano, when fourteen, he delivered an oration in Latin before the assembled students and faculty, on the political and ecclesiastical history of his day. He won prizes by impromptu Latin hexameters; and honors in Greek, physics, chemistry, mathematics, and philosophy. He was put forward to discuss grave questions in solemn academical tournaments, where he was heard by the elite of Roman society, the cardinals and the papal court. Joachim Pecci had every opportunity to become polished, learned, graceful, and witty, and he made the most of his opportunities.

It was quite in keeping with Pecci's character that he should have felt drawn to join the mendicant order of the Franciscans, for Francis of Assisi had been his mother's favorite and she had been buried in the garb of that order. It was also quite in keeping that he decided to follow the wider field of secular priesthood, and entered the Theological department of the Gregorian University, where he spent two years among the most brilliant and learned men of the Roman church. In the year 1832, Pecci received his degree of Doctor of Theology. Once more it is in keeping with his character that instead of choosing parochial work, he determined upon papal service, and to that end, entered the college for noble ecclesiastics, where candidates are prepared for diplomatic or administrative service in the papal government. Here, the star of Pecci's learning began to shine with the brilliancy of approaching destiny. Princes and cardinals predicted great things of him and treated him with grave regard. Leo XII., died in 1829 and after the brief pontificate of Pius VIII., came Gregory XVI., into whose immediate service Pecci entered. In Nov. 1837 he was ordained in the little interior chapel of "St. Andrew on the Quirinal." From this began his administrative and diplomatic career.

First, he was appointed Governor of Benevento, where on several occasions he handled Papal troops effectively against brigands; then Delegate of Spoleto, where he dealt successfully with disaffected communities; next Archbishop of Damietta, and Apostolic Minister to the Court of Brussels, where he opposed undenominational education—a policy the reverse of progressive, in the modern sense. King Leopold, of Belgium, was fond of saying to the witty and adroit Nuncio: "Really, Monsignor, you are as clever a politician as you are an excellent churchman."

In 1845, Pecci was recalled from Brussels and created Bishop of Perugia. From Belgium, Pecci returned to Rome by way of London. Anglo-Saxon problems then absorbing attention in Europe and America had already attracted the attention of the astute prelate; the Irish question had by no means escaped him; and the month in England was spent to good purpose. Another month was passed in Paris at the court of Louis Philippe; and the Nuncio returned to Rome with the social, political, ecclesiastical and educational conditions of Germany, England and France in his mind for ready reference. The next thirty-two years in Perugia were busy ones for Pecci. He was called to Rome, in September, 1877, by Pius IX., to fill the important office of Camerlengo of the Roman Church, for Pius was failing rapidly. In January, 1878, a month after the death of Victor Emanuel and the accession of Umberto, Pius breathed his last.

These pictures of Leo XIII. on this page were secured with great difficulty, as the Pope dislikes being photographed. After much negotiation, Mr. W. K. L. Dickson, an English gentleman, obtained the desired permission and a large number of pictures of the Pope were taken in the spring and summer of 1898. They were approved as entirely satisfactory. They have been exhibited privately before Queen Victoria and also before various dignitaries of the Papal Church, the latter agreeing that the representation of the Pope was absolutely truthful. They were first publicly shown in America in December and are now being exhibited in various cities under the auspices of the Vaticanet Mutoscope, through whose courtesy THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is enabled to present the selections on this page.

lots being deposited in a large chalice on the altar, and a majority of two-thirds is necessary. When the ballots are counted, if no one receives this majority, they are burned, and the smoke issuing from the chapel indicates to the populace that a Pope has not been chosen. Twice on February 19, 1878, the crowd watching from St. Peter's Square, saw smoke ascend from the Sistine Chapel, but on the 20th there was no smoke. Then was announced the election of Pecci "who hath given himself for name Leo XIII." The bells of St. Peter's rung, but no cannon thundered from the Castle Sant Angelo, where the flag of Savoy floated. State and Church in Italy were forevermore separate and distinct . . . The story of Leo's pontificate would be largely the history of his times. While he has not departed from the doctrinal landmarks of the Papacy, he has brought the Vatican more into sympathy with the just aspirations of mankind; if he has not always gone so far as circumstances seemed to demand, he has never been reactionary. He has not only been a diplomat and statesman; he has also proved himself a most able financier, and the Papal treasury is probably in better condition to-day than for many years before. "Peter's Pence," the offering of Catholics, which is accepted as the Pope's peculiar perquisite, has greatly increased. The Church of Rome has greatly waxed in affluence. Its influence upon the minds of men is, however, no longer a dominating one. It does not now hold the key to men's consciences. It terrorizes kings and communities no more. A liberal and enlightened age has done much to brush away the fabric of power and the cobwebs of superstition which Rome would have sacredly preserved. The clear sun of a Christian civilization shining abroad throughout the earth, has made the old Rome, with its dark legends and superstitions, no longer a possibility. A student of the times, Leo XIII. has endeavored to accommodate the church to the new order of things. He has striven to accomplish the impossible—to make the old bottles of Romish doctrine hold the new wine of modern Christian philosophy. The world has watched the effort with the greatest interest, and the ablest and wisest have given him credit for his high purpose, even though his task has been a futile one, and the solution of the problem, under such circumstances, an impossibility.

SIG. DECASTRO, THE POPE'S VALET

Who will succeed Leo XIII.? Cardinal Rampolla, who is prominently named, is a man a good deal after the aged Pontiff's own heart. He is said to have no sympathy with the Irreconcilables, and he is an admirer of the American Republic. In a word, he is in harmony with progress. Rampolla's election would insure a continuation of the present ecclesiastical regime. There are other cardinals, however, whose names are freely mentioned in connection with the office.

Dogs as Drawers of Milk Carts in Holland—The Dogs of Lapland and Alaska

THE milk-wagon of Holland is sometimes a boat. When it is not a boat, it is a wagon drawn by dogs. Of course it dignifies the dog to put him to such worthy occupation, and if he could speak he would probably testify to his appreciation of such advancement. What do you say, children? Doggie is such a faithful fellow it looks as if he were entitled to an education and to a better calling than hunting birds and hares, doesn't it? Of course you know how useful, how necessary to man's existence, is the dog of Lapland, Siberia, Alaska, and other cold countries; also how the great shaggy St. Bernards rescue lost travelers from an icy death in Alpine snows. The following true story of a Newfoundland's mistaken zeal may serve to entertain our little readers:

Cæsar, a handsome, long-haired, Newfoundland dog, went with his master's family to a new-bought country residence having a pool where the children could bathe and swim. That is, they thought they could until they tried it. Cæsar was sort of playmate and caretaker, going with them everywhere. If they were sent off on a visit in the carriage and Cæsar didn't go, he howled until their return. The only thing that ever reconciled him to remaining behind was when there was a baby too little to go and mamma wanted him to nurse it. Never was more devoted caretaker. Baby took liberties with him, pulling his hair, sticking her fingers in his eyes. But Cæsar knew how to make allowances for babies. He knew how to roll babies over and over and make them laugh. When baby was cuddled, pink and white, and fast asleep against his silky sides, how still he kept! Nothing would induce him to move. Cæsar knew babies too well for that. He let baby and all his playfellows have their way about all things save one. Swim or bathe in the pool they should not! Cæsar permitted no such risks. The moment a child dived in, that moment Cæsar plunged after and brought him out, whether or no!

Of course, Hollanders are very kind to their dogs. Indeed, these people are too wise and thrifty not to be careful of all their possessions. The cow stables adjoin the peasant-farmer's living rooms, and while his family take their meals, Bossy, in full view, is regaling herself with hay and Dimple complacently chews her cud in apartments immaculately clean. In the cool dairy, appointments glisten with much scrubbing and polishing. Never was there more golden butter, more tempting cheeses or creamier milk than in the dairies of Holland. The milk for city customers is poured into great copper jugs that dazzle all beholders when the cart comes along, its many bells giving tinkling notice to housemaids that the breakfast beverage is come. Milkwoman Gretchen is driver, and so sure is she of the quality of her wares and of duties paid, that milk inspectors and police officers inspire her with no terrors. They all have kindly words for her and a few pats for her dogs.

The Helpfulness of Dolls

"My little daughter learned how to make her own clothes while dress-making for her doll," says a wise mother. "I gave her a big doll, material for garments, patterns, scissors and full workbasket equipments, and showed her how to fashion dolly's wardrobe. I used no compulsion, simply 'tolled her on' from stitch to stitch and garment to garment. Much cloth was wasted, but my child got sewing-lessons that were worth it."

Chinese Wedding Customs

Invitations which are delivered personally twenty days before the ceremony, consist of gilt hieroglyphics on red paper, measuring four by nine inches, and each invitation is accompanied by a piece of betel nut. The bridegroom, on reaching the house of his betrothed, is greeted with a shower of yellow rice, which has been perfumed with attor of roses and kept in a vase of gold. Two eggs are presented to him, and he gives in return a bit of money wrapped in red paper. In some provinces, the bride enveloped in a black veil, goes forth to meet the bridegroom. On entering a temple, a bridal party immediately proceeds "to wake the great Joss," by lighting up a quantity of fire-works and shooting off a lot of fire-crackers. The priest mumbles off the service at lightning speed: bride and bridegroom drink from a little glass, and are pronounced man and wife. Of course, some of these customs are only observed among the wealthier classes.

Birds in the night that softly sing,
Winds in the night that strangely sigh,
Come to me, help me, one and all,
And murmur, murmur, murmur baby's lullaby.

From Sir Arthur Sullivan's lullaby, Birds in the Night.

International Kindergarten Convention

The sixth annual convention of the International Kindergarten Union, was held in Cincinnati during the first week in March. His Honor, Gustav Tavel, Mayor of Cincinnati, made the welcoming address. Other addresses were made by Prof. Myers, of the Cincinnati University: Captain Momfort, President Board of Education; W. H. Morgan, Superintendent Public Schools; Frank Parry, Earnest," "The Kindergarten and the Mother," "Songs," "Social Aspects of Home and School," were some of the topics presented by prominent kindergartners. The Hon. Emilie Paullson, editor of the Kindergarten Review; Miss Fitts, Principal of Pratt Institute Kindergarten, Brooklyn; Miss Symonds, of Boston; Miss Neil, of Washington; and other able and experienced educators demonstrating the charm and value of "finger plays," and other Froebel games. The Cincinnati Woman's Club gave the visitors a reception.

The "Boy's Room"

If your house is large—and doubtless it is if you live in the country—give your big boy a room of his own. "Do not make the mistake," writes Mrs. John B. Sims, "of putting the boy off with just any old thing. Many a boy's life has been made miserable by a constant migration from one sleeping place to another, winding up with a bed on the floor, just to make room for some more important member of the household. Give him a room of his own, and do not ask him to leave it." Encourage him to keep it in an orderly way, and to beautify it with good pictures. It is as good training for a boy as for a girl to have a room, and to be trained to keep it neatly. If there are many boys and girls, and you can't give each a room, do the best you can to let each have a corner that can be called his or her own, where individual treasures can be kept.

A Museum for Children

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences is going to establish one—the first of its kind in the country—and modeled on children's museums in Paris, Berlin Vienna and St. Petersburg. Only think of it, little readers—a whole building fully equipped with beautiful maps, plates, pictures, specimens etc., just for the children! There will be competent instructors in charge of departments, who will show little visitors around and explain things to them: and the more questions asked about bears, panthers, birds, bees, flowers, the better they will like it. It will be shown how glass, bronze, and other articles are made: why some plants are poisonous and others good for food: how people dress and live in different parts of the world. Historical events will be depicted in pleasant and striking ways. Prof. Goodyear is the originator of the plan for this museum, and many friends of the children are coming to his help.

The Master's Coming

I awaited the Master's coming—the touch dark alone.

And I said: "When the guards are dreaming
I will steal to his couch of rest; was broken, the couch where my Master lay Held only his shrouding garment—they had taken down in the dark to die
Under a hopeless heaven, under a sunless sky;
But my dreams were all of the Master dear
as my soul was dear,
And waking I saw the glory of his beautiful presence there

And he said, as I fell and worshiped: "Arise, and the Master see:
Behold the thorns that have crowned him—
the wounds that were made for thee!"

I wait for the Master's coming, now as in days
Under a hopeful heaven, under a cloudless
And still when the guard dreaming I steal to his couch of His smile through the darkness lightens, and welcomes me to his breast!

Fear of the Dark

FEAR is an instinct of protection. Children should no more fear the dark than the little birds in the forests fear it. This fear, once acquired, is difficult to overcome, and has followed many a person through life. A little sufferer was maid, whose care had been much given over to ignorant nurses, fell into the hands of a wise aunt, who discovered as one of the child's chief afflictions such fear of the dark as made night a terror to her. She had been told of hobgoblins lurking in shadows to catch naughty children who made a noise; and so she would lie quiet and in a cold sweat of terror try to go to sleep by herself. "Auntie" determined never to leave Maisie in the dark until she had lost fear of it. So, without explaining why, she sat by Maisie every night, or held the child in her arms till slumber came, at first keeping the light burning and leaving it burning after Maisie was asleep. Gradually, she began lowering the light, night by night, to softer and softer dusk, never saying a word in regard to fear, but putting the child to sleep with a pretty story or song about the dark. Once it would be:

When the tender daylight dies
Roses wrap themselves in musk:
Violets droop and close their eyes.

She told how flowers blanketed themselves in perfume: how little birds tucked their heads under their wings, and sat up in trees, each birdie by himself in his own little private room of twigs and green leaves, which the good God made so birds would have nice little dark homes to sleep in. What a nice time bees and bugs and butterflies, and even earth-worms had in the dark when nobody could see to catch them and nobody was walking around to tread on them! How good of God to give the blessed night when everybody and everything could rest in security. She would fold Maisie into her crib and say: "The darkness is just like a great soft blanket that God sends to wrap the earth up in, so it can go to sleep." Once, as the light went down rather suddenly, Maisie asked tremblingly: "Is a big black bear in the corner?" "Why, no, dear!" The light flashed up instantly so Maisie could see: then went down softly and Auntie said: "Dear, God is in the room, our good God." After a while Maisie learned to love the darkness. She called it "God's blanket:" first asking Auntie to put out the lights and let her go to sleep like the birds and flowers: later, stealing off when tired of play and going to sleep by herself.

Old-Fashioned Winters—Boys and Cigarettes—Little Boys' Letters, etc.

DO you know what an old-fashioned winter means? Some of you who live in high latitudes do, but here in New York we haven't for years had anything so bleak, cold and persistent as the recent spell of weather, which will make Lincoln's birthday a sort of landmark in memory for years to come? In my childhood we had cold winters and deep snows, and I remember going to school with snow walls as high as my head on either side of the street, but latterly we have had nothing to compare with the wild cold winds, the zero temperature, and the drifting snow of the last few weeks.

THE PERSONS chiefly responsible for the cigarette smoking so often indulged in by growing boys are fathers and mothers. What on earth are parents about to let the lads form such a wasteful and silly habit? I think usually it is a case of "The queen was in the kitchen Eating bread and honey," and,

"The king was in the parlor Counting out his money," while

"The boys were in the alley
And smoked, and thought it funny."

In other words, mothers are busy with their household cares; and when boys—little boys—come home from school they don't want the romping little fellows of ten or twelve years to litter up the clean house with their muddy feet nor to play under their own eyes with shinny sticks and clubs and Indian war-whoops. They send the boys off or let them go—it amounts to precisely the same thing in the end—and they range the streets until dark and after with companions of their own choosing. The fathers, if not counting out their money, are busy earning it by the sweat of their brows; they are behind counters, or driving teams, or minding machinery; and when they come home tired out they sit down after supper and smoke themselves, and naturally the boys think there is nothing quite so manly, and so they form a most undesirable habit.

In co-educational schools it would seem to me that the girls might easily form a public opinion, with the aid of the boys who disapprove of cigarettes and kindred follies, which would go far to save the tempted from yielding to this vice. Girls seldom know their power to keep and hold men to purity. If they did, they would not so often condone sins on which they should frown. If girls would refuse to associate on friendly terms with men who were profane, who were Sabbath breakers, who drank, who violated any edict of good morals, the girls themselves being pure and sweet and Christian in their daily lives, one would soon see an elevation in the character of young men. Home life, too, should be so arranged that boys and young men should find pleasure and interest there, and this is very largely in the hands of sisters. To every sister the question comes urgently and pressingly: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

JEAN D. You ought not to open your little boy's letters. You rob him of the pleasure of first reading them himself, and besides you give him an object lesson in impoliteness. A letter is so personal a possession that children should be trained by example in seeing it respected. No, I do not think that a wife should open her husband's letters, or a husband open his wife's. There may, of course, arise emergencies when the rule may be suspended.

MRS. S. H. K. writes asking how to make over one or two old gowns. If she is like me, she will take more pride in a gown which has been turned and changed and made the best of than she would in one entirely new. I always consider a black skirt a splendid standby. If I had, as Mrs. S. H. K. has, a dress of purple cloth, I would let the skirt remain as it is, except that I would turn it if the wrong side was entirely fresh. It is a little too wide, probably, for the present style. The waist itself does not differ very much from the new models except that the large caps must be taken off the sleeves, which may be trimmed with bias folds if it is necessary to make them in two pieces. Sleeves are at present worn with very little fulness. We are trimming skirts around the bottom just now, so that a black Henrietta skirt which is a little short may be easily lengthened by the addition of a fold of silk or velvet or velveteen. This may be headed with a piping of silk. The waist with the pretty jet yoke will need very little change.

For Our Children's Home

WHILE on one hand we are receiving letters of solicitous inquiry (and curious spelling) from former little guests of our Children's Home, asking anxiously when "the country will open?" on the other, come communications from friends in various parts of the country, ready to help us take early forethought for the tenement children. These waifs must suffer in the hot season coming unless Christian charity makes provision for them. The following extracts from letters written before and during January, show how faithfully our readers remember the tenement children:

C. Pratt Ward, $1. A little boy ten years old earned it for the benefit of little waifs of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home. [illegible] little ones.—Maggie Bowie (aged ten), $3. to give one little girl an outing.—A. E. C., $1. May God's blessing rest upon this good work [illegible] the outing of one child. Wish I could send more. Hoping and praying that this will make one poor little waif happy.—Florence Isabel Moore, $9. To make three little ones happy.—Mrs. H. L., $3. Praying that some poor child may be benefited.—The Children's Friend, $3. With the prayer that it will save for Jesus one dear little soul.—J. P., $1. May the Lord help you in this good work.—Anna Caffee, $1. 'Tis only one of the many needed, but perhaps 'twill add somewhat to the happiness of the many needy little ones.—J. M. P., 75c. Please accept this small sum from baby's bank. She is aged twenty months. May these few pennies bring some little one nearer the Saviour.

Junior C. E. Presbyterian Church, Corinth, Miss., $1.50. We want to send our mite to help in your work for the poor little children of the slums.—Sunday School Class, Wilkesbarre, Pa., $1.50 for the Children's Home.—Junior C. E. of Central Baptist Church, Springfield, Ill., $3 to send a child from the tenements to your fresh-air home.

Music Easily Learned.

DURING LEISURE MOMENTS AT HOME, PIANO, ORGAN, GUITAR, AND VOICE.

Old and Young Play Perfect Accompaniments with Few Days Practice.

A well-known professor of music has prepared [illegible] guitar or voice, whereby anyone can learn all the tunes, notes and chords with but a few days ordinary practice and play perfect accompaniments in all keys. It is the cheapest, the best, the most rapid and correct method ever devised to learn music. Parents who have difficulty in keeping children at their lessons will not only [illegible] but will provide a greater interest in the subject because the child succeeds in playing from the beginning.

Older persons who have a fondness for music but lack the time in which to practice by the old methods will be rejoiced to know that Prof. Rice's method of teaching is exactly the thing to awaken their musical yearning.

Descriptive circulars of this wonderful system are mailed free, or sample lessons 10 cents.

Every man, woman and child ought to be attracted by this easy, rapid and cheap method of learning to play. Do not neglect to write at once before you lose the address. G. S. Rice Music Co., 241-W Wabash Ave., Chicago.

450 Happy Orphans

Miss Shattuck Writes of Her Little Armenian Charges and the Progress they are Making

OF all the four Mission Homes in Anatolia, at which Armenian orphan children are supported by the readers of this journal, there is probably none that is quite so near to their hearts as that in Oorfa, where Miss Corinna Shattuck, the brave American missionary, is conducting the work. Miss Shattuck has a very large family of orphans—some 450 in all, she writes—of whom a goodly portion are CHRISTIAN HERALD proteges. She has sent us this entertaining letter, describing their recent Christmas and New Year celebration:

OORFA, TURKEY, Jan. 31, 1899.

Dear Christian Herald Friends: We have but just passed our Christmas vacation, New Year's (Jan. 13) and Christmas (Jan. 18) being observed here. We did not attempt coming together with the Germans for any festivities this year, as was the case last Christmas, but each received the children of our own Homes. We had a room-ful, but, the day being mild, we sat with windows lowered and the outer door open—128 children, mothers, servants: in all about 140. Scripture lessons, recently prepared for Sabbath evening recitations, were reviewed by classes. The "Who-am-I?" Bible game, which all enjoy so much, was in the hands of a committee of four, and they chose such hard-to-be-recognized personages that even their elders knit their brows. Then some wanted to tell parts of Pilgrim's Progress, which they have been enjoying of late. Hymns, and an attempt at photographing from opposite corners of the big room (which, however, did not prove successful) made the time pass all too rapidly. When asked if they would like to mention special causes for thanksgiving, one said: "That our friends have continued to remember us with money and prayers;" another, "That Jesus came to live in the world." Another said, shyly: "That God helps us in our temptations," and so on, many freely opening up the thoughts of their hearts.

We gave no gifts for which we had expended money. Each had a Bible picture card and another bright one besides. We had enough to give each of the Gregorian Monastery boys and German orphans the same, thanks to the many American friends, who continue to send us these. The girls had some of the extras sent by "parents" of the German orphans. Our carpenter boys made a playhouse of two apartments, older girls furnished it, and a happier set than the givers and receivers could not be found anywhere.

Christmas here continues three days. The second day all went to some relative; or, in case of our stranger children, or such as had nobody to receive them, to homes opened for the day by good people. A great quiet reigned in the nine orphan homes while some 450 happy children were scattered over the city, only to return merrily at dusk.

Our college boys, as also some here in the Home, feel that they have given themselves to the Lord, and are very happy. We thank God for all his blessings.

C. SHATTUCK.

A Good Complexion

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secret for securing a clear complexion.

But all these are simply superficial assistants. It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly; unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood a good complexion is impossible.

That is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexion clear.

When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary. Take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man or woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and cost 50 cents per package. They are prepared by the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion. Ask your druggist for the tablets and a free book on stomach diseases.

The Sick Poet's Bedside

Rudyard Kipling's Dangerous Illness Drew Forth the Love of Two Continents

Copyrighted by McClure's Magazine

RUDYARD KIPLING

ONLY a little over ten years ago, the world had just begun to hear of a new poet—a young Anglo-Indian whose fresh and unique genius had already stirred the hearts of white men living in the East. Last week, the people of two continents were watching, with painful anxiety, the bulletins that told of Rudyard Kipling's life-and-death struggle with pneumonia in a New York hotel. Shortly after his recent return to this country, he was taken ill, and for over a week his life hung in the balance. When the crisis had been safely passed, and the waiting world knew that Rudyard Kipling would live, the pent-up sympathy found expression in a torrent of letters and telegrams to Mrs. Kipling, whose devotion to her husband had kept her prisoner at his bedside from the moment of his first attack, until he was declared out of danger.

Few literary men have achieved fame so suddenly as did Rudyard Kipling. A native of Bombay, India, where he was born of English parents in 1864, his first literary work was done while he was connected with an Anglo-Indian newspaper. Kipling's father was a man of delicate artistic tastes and a designer of distinction, but young Rudyard's talents lay in quite another direction. For him, the ever-changing panorama of military life in India held a peculiar fascination. He was a close observer, and the typical British soldier became his absorbing study. His first book—little more than a handful of leaves loosely bound together—was entitled "Departmental Ditties," and as it dealt with the soldier's life in a style at once new and realistic, it was soon read in every barrack-room in India. Soon afterward he issued "Soldiers Three," a story of the adventures of a trio of comrades, so quaintly related, so accurate in its description of camp life, and showing in its best light the heroic side of the private soldier, that it attracted attention at once to the young author. These productions gave evidence of a power of vivid description, a droll humor, and a keen but honest satire that might yet awaken the echoes of the literary world. That early promise has been abundantly fulfilled.

But while Rudyard Kipling must be accorded a unique position as a prose writer, it is as a poet that he stands highest in popular estimation. No man, in late years, has struck a deeper or truer note and certainly none has stirred the hearts of multitudes to better purpose. In prose a brilliant and fascinating teller of tales, he is, in his more serious verse, a profound thinker, a seer, and philosopher. If he had never written a prose sentence, his poems alone would have ranked him among the foremost minds of his generation. Indeed, the admiration of his genius in England is such that he has been hailed as the "Anglo-Saxon laureate." Some of his poems dealing with Hindoo life and character are replete with terse description and fine feeling, and show that true heroism and fidelity, even to death, are as much traits of the despised native as of the ruling Caucasian. His descriptions of battle and adventure by land and sea stir the pulses, like the strong lines of some ringing old saga of Viking days.

Kipling's genius has probably reached its best expression—up to the present, at least—in the two really great poems, "Recessional" and "The White Man's Burden." It is related of the first that Mrs. Kipling rescued it from the author's waste-basket, where he had tossed it, in dissatisfaction with his effort. It was a fortunate chance that led his wife to save to the world those grandly solemn lines, that seem like the chant of a nation bowed in deep contrition:

The tumult and the shouting dies,
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord, God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

In "The White Man's Burden" Kipling sounds a clear note of warning to the nations of Christendom, indicating their duty to the inferior races which they, in their selfish struggle for power, have neglected.

THE NEW PANSY-VIOLET

(TUFTED PANSIES)

These new Pansies are called "Tufted" because a plant from a single seed will grow and enlarge into a clump or tuft of plants, which will live and bloom year after year, and send out "runners" like the Violet, hence the name, Pansy-Violet. It makes a hardy perennial plant, living out all winter, increasing and blooming continuously. They are sweet scented, like the Violet. The flowers are large and of good substance. The colors are marvelous and endless in variety. Dark and bright, also delicate shades, zoned, pencilled, and mottled in wondrous colors. And added to all this, a hardy perennial violet-perfumed Pansy, increasing in size and numbers each year. This new plant has awakened much interest and enthusiasm in England and Scotland. To secure new customers we are sending with our complete 1899 catalogue of the best Flower Seeds in America, the new PANSY-VIOLET (as above), 1 pkt. (150 seeds) for only 10c., 3 pkts. 25c.

Other unequaled specialties, which can best be procured from us. Write to-day.

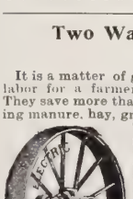
Two Wagons at One Price.

It is a matter of great convenience and a saving of labor for a farmer to have a low, handy wagon. They save more than half the labor of loading in hauling manure, hay, grain, corn fodder, wood, stones, etc.



The man who already has a wagon may have one of these low handy wagons at the small additional cost for a set of wheels. These Electric Steel Wheels, with either direct or stagger spokes, with broad faced tire, are made to fit any axle. You can convert your old wagon to a low, handy wagon in a few moments time. You thus virtually have two wagons at one price. Write to the Electric Wheel Co., Box 136 Quincy, Illinois, for their catalogue; which fully explains about these and their Electric Handy Wagons, Electric Feed Cookers, etc.

If you would shake that aching, fagged out feeling which has clung to you since having the grip take Hood's Sarsaparilla to vitalize your blood and put renewed strength and vigor in your whole system.

"Memorial Rose"

THE accompanying pictures show the varied uses of the "Memorial Rose" (Rosa Wichuraiana). The one we offer is the true variety. Beware of hybrids which may be offered as "just as good."

For use in.. CEMETERIES.—It is difficult to conceive anything more appropriate for this purpose. It creeps like an Ivy, growing ten feet and over in one season, forming a dense mat of lustrous foliage. Trained over a gateway it forms a perfect bower, or it can be grown on a fence or house. As a pot plant it is a beautiful and charming Rose. It is unsurpassed for covering places quickly with verdure and readily adapts itself to all conditions of culture, whether barren soil, rocky ledge, fertile garden, shady nook or sun-kissed slope.

The Flowers.—Pure satiny white, with a golden yellow disc, five to six inches in circumference, delightfully fragrant. They fairly cover the plant.

PRICES (free by mail).—Strong plants, 20c. each, 3 for 50c., 7 for $1.00, 12 for $1.50. Extra strong plants, 30c. each, 4 for $1.00, 9 for $2.00, 12 for $2.50. Sent at proper planting time, or immediately, as desired.

SPECIAL.—All purchasers of the "Memorial Rose" who will state where they saw this advertisement will be sent FREE our Manual of "Everything for the Garden" for 1899, the most useful and ornamental catalogue of horticultural requisites ever issued in this or any other country. It is a book 9 x 11 inches, with an artistic cover in ten colors, over 700 engravings and 6 superb colored plates. This book costs us 20 cents per copy, and is worth ten times that sum to the planter.

True Penitence

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for Mar. 26. II. Cor. 7:1-11

WHEN a man is conscious of having offended God, of having done something that he ought not to have done, what ought he to do? That is the question that runs all through the Law, the Psalms, and the Prophets, and it perplexes men who, living in heathen lands, do not know the Bible. The ancient law prescribed sacrifice, the Roman Catholic Church to this day imposes penance, the Buddhist and the Hindoo undergo self-torture in the hope of obtaining remission of sin. Christ's words however, reiterating the message of Isaiah, Micah and other prophets, assure us of pardon if we repent. That is an indispensable condition. "Except ye repent" Christ said, "ye shall all perish." So important is this condition, so momentous is it to the soul, that as he declares, when it appears, its significance is felt by those highest of all intelligences who are best able to appreciate it and "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God." If the repentance of one sinner is so important, and the absence of repentance is so eternally disastrous, how necessary it is to understand what repentance really is!

One thing is clear from Scriptures: repentance does not consist in tears, self-reproaches and agonies of distress. These may, and often do, accompany it, but they are not in themselves, true repentance. There may be true repentance without them. This fact ought to be understood, because there are many persons, who have read, or heard, of such experiences in the lives of others, and have been concerned because they have never undergone them. They have feared that, not having wept and agonized as others have done, they have not repented. But there is no justification in this fact for such fears. It is notorious that the grief which manifests itself in the most profuse tears, is that which the soonest passes away. Nor is there any merit in self-inflicted suffering. We cannot make payment to God in such coin. He takes no pleasure in our penance, nor in any misery we may undergo. It is the sorrow of the heart, that he desires to see, the hatred of the sin of which we have been guilty, the determination to avoid it in the future and the humble petition for pardon. These are the signs of true repentance, the characteristics of the repentance which, as the Revised Version has it, "brings no regret." The sorrow which knows no comfort, which spends itself in tears and sighs and groans and leads to no result in the life, is an unintelligent emotion of no practical value to the sinner, nor of acceptance with God.

There should be no difficulty in the mind of anyone who has had to do with children as to the nature of true penitence. When a child has been guilty of some serious offence, the wise parent's first thought is about the child's future welfare. "If he has done this thing now, what will he do when he grows up? How can I teach him the wickedness of this thing and cause him to avoid a repetition of it?" It would be easy for the loving parent to forgive, but that would be detrimental to the child's best interests. He must not get into the way of thinking lightly of evil. It is a serious matter, perhaps not so much in itself as in what it portends. So the parent argues, having had sad experience of the evil which might have been checked early, but which, left uncorrected, becomes irremediable. There must be punishment in some form to produce this impression, or there may be, with an intelligent child, such explanations as will have that effect. It is when the child is sorry for what he has done, when he tries to undo it, when he acknowledges his fault and asks forgiveness that the parent is satisfied. How much more is God ready to forgive under such circumstances! The Apostle's summary of the signs and characteristics of true penitence shows that this is the real disposition required. It produces earnest care against a repetition of the offence: a self-clearing of the spirit which caused the evil: indignation, zeal and longing for purity. These are the characteristics of true penitence.

MAD, MERCILESS MARCH!

What it Means to the Countless Army of Lung Sufferers.

..BEGIN NOW TO FORTIFY YOURSELF..

Catarrh, Bronchitis, Grip, or Its After-Effects, Asthma, Weak System, Lingering Cough, and All Other Consumptive Tendencies Should be Looked After Carefully at Just This Time.

What March Means.

What the frost is to the flower, is March, mad, merciless March, to the consumptive. March is a month fraught with fearful possibilities and countless dangers.

March is the time to look after the "little things in health," for many a consumptive's grave has been filled by one who neglected a simple cold, and realized the truth only when consumption's wicked grasp was upon him.

Fortify Yourself.

Now; not tomorrow, or the day after, but today—NOW—is the time to begin to fortify yourself against the ravages of possible disease in the month to come.

Remember that even the healthiest and most vigorous person in the world comes out of the month of March weaker and less vigorous than at the beginning. Then what must it mean to the millions of lung sufferers, who haven't the vitality to fight the elements?

It means one thing to many—DEATH!

Don't be one of those who take chances. Stock your constitution with a fighting array of strength that will overcome any condition of climate or weather. Make of yourself an invincible fortress of health, a veritable Gibraltar of strength.

If you are well and strong and hearty now, do this as an extra precaution; but if you are in any way a lung sufferer, if you have catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, grip, or its after-effects, any kind of a cough, shortness of breath, a hereditary consumptive history, occasional chest-pains, rough breathing, "morning and evening" coughing spells, poor circulation, pimply skin, night sweats, or any other symptom that shows a consumptive tendency, don't hesitate for a moment, but fortify yourself at once.

The Way.

Heretofore there have been many different ways to fortify yourself, but nothing that could cover ALL conditions, until the eminent medical scientist, Doctor Slocum, gave to the world the benefit of years of scientific study and research, and promulgated what has since been named in his honor, the SLOCUM SYSTEM.

In the SLOCUM SYSTEM, which consists of four distinctly different preparations, a carefully thought-out and scientifically constructed system of treatment is given.

FIRST, it seizes on every germ in the nose, throat, chest or lungs, and drives them completely out of the system, thereby removing the cause of the disease.

SECOND, it introduces into the weakened and debilitated system, a strengthening, invigorating and fattening food, which builds up and restores the wasted and worn out tissues.

THIRD, it soothes and allays all inflammation of the alimentary canal, stops all catarrhal discharges and conquers the cough.

FOURTH, it gives the system a tonic influence, which stimulates, invigorates, strengthens and makes the blood red, rosy, and of quick, healthy action. It vitalizes every weak and "rundown" condition, quickens the brain and regulates the heart, till the whole system responds with a warm, natural glow of perfect health.

Practical Philanthropy.

Much as the SLOCUM SYSTEM means to humanity, it may be obtained by the readers of The Christian Herald for the asking, owing to the desire of Doctor Slocum that humanity may reap the reward of his long years of labor.

By special arrangement with Doctor Slocum, the readers of The Christian Herald may have the four preparations of the SLOCUM SYSTEM by simply sending their names and complete addresses to the SLOCUM LABORATORIES, 96 and 98 Pine street, New York City.

Write to the Doctor Today.

No matter what your difficulty, no matter what your fears, write to Doctor Slocum. Write fully and freely, with the idea that you are addressing a man with a big, broad, liberal mind, who has given the best part of his life to the study of just such a case as yours, and who will give you advice freely and generously.

Address DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 98 Pine Street, New York City, and say that you read this offer in The Christian Herald.

A Generous Deed

How a Party of Snowed-in Travelers Raised a Church's Debt

MR. TALMAGE'S sermon to the commercial traveler reveals a story related several years ago by a young man who was then a member of that strong and powerful fraternity. It has never been published, unless in the local paper of the little Western city where the incident occurred.

He was a minister's son, and traveled for a large Chicago furniture house. It had been his custom to stop over Sunday in whatever place he happened to reach Saturday night, and attend divine service.

It was winter;, a snow-storm had blocked all the trains leading out of the city, and 300 "drummers" were held fast over Sunday.

On inquiry, the clergyman's son learned that among a number of rich churches, there was one poor one struggling along under a burden of debt. A plan for helping it occurred to him which, as he was genial and popular, he succeeded in carrying out.

When the little congregation gathered for the morning service they were surprised to find 300 well-dressed strangers occupying the body of the church. But their amazement reached its climax when the collection was taken up. They had no silver plate, and as each of the strangers put in a silver dollar, the hat that was being passed 'round had to be emptied once or twice. But for the sacred hour and place doubtless a round of applause would have greeted the pile of silver that lay on the table at the close of the offertory.

Early on the following morning the party was waited on by a committee of ladies with a vote of thanks and the request that they allow the accompanying photographer to take their pictures.

The photographs were a success and sold for fifty cents a piece, the little church was completely cleared of debt, and the commercial travelers went on their way with the pleasant consciousness of having done a generous deed with little cost to themselves. E. M. CONNELLY.

WEAK LUNGS

Dr. Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, has just published a new book on which explains all about Consumption, how it arises, the symptoms by which it is known, how it can be prevented, and the only treatment by which it can be cured. He also describes

THIS BOOK is of such great importance and interest to all who have weak lungs or are threatened with any form of lung disease that it has been decided to issue an edition of 50,000 copies in paper covers for free distribution. Dr. Robert Hunter is the oldest Lung Specialist of this country, and acknowledged throughout the world as the greatest living authority on all diseases of the breathing organs.

From the New York Herald: "It seems after many disappointments and false rumors of the cures for consumption, that the treatment as discovered and practiced by Dr. Robert Hunter, 117 West 45th St., New York, has accomplished results so satisfactory that this dread disease need no longer be classed among the incurable."

From the New York Sun: "Dr. Hunter's recent book on Consumption and its wonderful cures that have been reported, effectually remove all doubt as to the curability of this dread disease."

Readers of The Christian Herald can obtain Dr. Hunter's Book FREE by addressing him at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

J. F. R., Lansdale, Pa. Are a pomegranate and an orange the same fruit? If not, where does the first mentioned grow, and does it grow on trees or bushes or on vines?

No; the pomegranate is a native of Western Asia and Northern Africa, and is the fruit of a leafy tree of the myrtle family. The orange tree is of the citron species.

Channing, Brooklyn, N. Y. What people had the Zend Avesta for their sacred books? Who was their leader? Do any people still use them?

The Zend Avesta are the sacred books of the Parsees of India. They are ascribed to Zoroaster, who is reputed to have lived about 1,000 B.C. He held that the origin of life was dual, and that there was a good and an evil mind in the Supreme Being, as there is in man. He taught that the good would enjoy immortality of bliss, while the wicked would undergo eternal punishment. He also believed that the good principles were manifested in blazing flame. The Parsees still use those books, although some of the teaching has been modified in modern times.

Subscriber, Adelaide, Can. Would it be of any service if I got up a list of names of ladies who would not like Brigham H. Roberts, the polygamist to sit in Congress? All the names would be in Canada?

We shall be glad to hear from the women of Canada on the subject. Their active interest shows how far-reaching is the moral crusade against the Mormon evil.

Walter McB., Jersey City, N. J. When was the expression "Brother Jonathan" first applied to the United States? 2. What was the origin of [illegible]

The story is related that during the Revolutionary War, Washington being in need of supplies for the army, and placing great confidence in the sagacity of his friend Jonathan Trumbull, then Governor of Connecticut, used to say in such cases: "we must consult Brother Jonathan." The phrase became familiar, and gradually passed into national usage. 2. It began in the War of Independence, (according to Frost), when the stores for the troops were marked with the initials U. S. (United States), and the soldiers jokingly declared they stood for "Uncle Sam."

L. M. L., Wilton, N. H. How, when, where, and by whom were cards invented?

Cards are of ancient Eastern origin, and it is claimed by some early writers that in their first stages they constituted a symbolic and moral game, although they were afterward put to profane and even sinful purposes. Chinese and Hindu cards had upon them images representing deities, etc. Cards with spots are said to have been invented in the reign of the Chinese Emperor Seun-ho, about 1120 A.D., being devised for the amusement of his numerous wives. Cards were unknown in Europe until the end of the fourteenth century.

Inquirer, Bird City, Kan. 1. What is a madstone and where found? 2. In what business was U. S. Grant engaged prior to his death? 3. Has the President of the United States anything to do as to when Easter shall be observed?

1. A porous stone, popularly supposed to cure hydrophobia, by absorbing the venom. Such stones are often kept in families as heirlooms. 2. He engaged in no business, but spent much of his time in writing his Memoirs, which were afterward published. 3. Nothing whatever.

W. L. B., Freeburg, Pa. You are mistaken. It was Wesley, not Toplady, who wrote "Jesus, Lover of My Soul;" and the story of the bird pursued by the hawk and finding shelter in Wesley's window (which was printed in this paper), is related by several biographers of Wesley. His latest biographer, Rev. L. A. Banks, gives the incident, but adds that "it is quite probable that the hymn had its inspiration on the sea. A short time before writing it, Mr. Wesley had narrowly escaped shipwreck in a storm on the Atlantic, and the words, taken as a whole, seem to indicate that this was the vision before his mind."

S. B. W., Nyman, Ia. 1. What was the purchase price of Alaska? 2. Why do we not have our coldest weather in December, when the sun is farthest from us, and our hottest weather in June, when the sun is the nearest: instead of in January and February the coldest, when the sun has drawn one-third nearer, and in August and September the hottest, when the sun has withdrawn one-third of the distance?

1. The price was $7 200,000. 2. During the summer, the sun's rays strike the earth vertically, attaining their maximum intensity at midsummer, when the day is longest. Meanwhile, the earth's surface, becoming charged with heat, gives out a steadily increasing proportion, and this radiation increases as summer advances, reaching its maximum considerably after midsummer. In winter, the rays strike obliquely; the earth's surface cools as the season advances, attaining its maximum frigidity long after midwinter (the point at which the sun is farthest).

C. Sanford, Colchester, Ill., writes to ask if some reader of this journal will send him a copy of the patriotic verses said to have been composed by Hancock and Adams during the Revolution, and commencing "Come, lovers of freedom, together.

And hear what we have to say," etc.

Mrs. B. L. Dennis, Providence, R. I., writes: Possibly the few lines below may be helpful to some one, if you think best to publish them at any time. Author is unknown to me.

Subscriber, Mahonoy City, Pa. Is there or has there ever been a certain time set for husband or children to wear crape bands on their hats to mourn the death of a beloved wife or mother?

Crape is now ordinarily worn only six months, even for the nearest relative, and the duration of deep mourning does not exceed a little ones—too busy sometimes to care for people, shut up so long from active work; but I am never idle, though back aches and arms are crooked, and most of my work is done in a chair. A SCENE ALONG THE LINE OF THE PROPOSED NICARAGUA CANAL

The old and the new are strikingly illustrated in this picture—the ancient idols in their recesses or shrines, amid the gloomy shadows of primeval woods, side by side with that great modern disseminator of intelligence, the electric telegraph. 5th Prize—Rand & McNally's National Indexed Standard Atlas of the World. Historical, Descriptive and Statistical.

6th Prize—Harper's Book of Facts; a Classified History of the World, embracing Science, Literature, and Art—954 pages.

7th Prize—The Topical Bible. A Subject Classification of every text and passage in Scripture, by Chaplain Orville J. Nave, U. S. A.

The requirements and conditions of the contest are these:

Each competitor to write to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a letter containing his or her suggestion for an appropriate programme to be adopted for the proposed Celebration, at the ushering in of the new century.

Each letter should give the writer's best thought or suggestion, keeping in view the fact that the Celebration is intended to be of a far-reaching character, and one that should include every sect and denomination in Christendom,—all who name the name of Jesus and believe in his teachings.

Competitors should endeavor to find a suitable place in the programme for the combined participation of churches, Sunday Schools and other religious organizations.

Competitors should consider the general form of the exercises, their duration, and also whether they should be held at one or more central points of assemblage, or simultaneously, throughout the Christian world.

The competition will close October 1, 1899. All letters in this contest should be addressed:

Opening Up the White Continent

THE WORLD'S GREATEST RAILROAD, ACROSS SIBERIA, NEARING COMPLETION—A VAST FIELD FOR MISSIONARY AND CIVILIZING EFFORT

WITH the early completion of the great 8,000-mile railway across Central Asia and Siberia, the civilized world will hail an event which coming generations will regard as hardly less important in its far-reaching results than the opening up of the "Dark Continent" of Africa. This opportunity for advancing the standard of a Christian civilization has been placed at the world's disposal by the splendid enterprise of Russia. The Czar's government acting alone has placed an iron girdle about the great Asiatic mountain ranges, spanned the rivers, and laid a shining path across deserts of sand and bleak wastes of snow, and through the great forests, at an expenditure of labor and money which would have appalled almost any other European power.

In this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we are enabled to present, far in advance of all contemporaries, the facts concerning the present condition and immediate prospects of this great railway, which promises to speedily revolutionize a great part of the ancient world.

The Czar is a good railroad builder and has spared neither money nor effort in his project to connect the Baltic with the Pacific, across the vast plains of Siberia and the tablelands of Manchuria. In China alone his engineers have finished two thousand miles of road, and in Russia and Siberia nearly four thousand more. Already the work is proving a means of good. The opening up of the extensive province of Manchuria is having a wonderful effect upon the people and on the relations they bear to foreigners. Cities of large population have sprung up on spots where a year ago the wild beasts of the forest ranged.

One instance is particularly striking. By imperial edict, issued in April, 1898, a spot was chosen along the line of the proposed railroad for the founding of a palace city. A collection of rude Oriental dwellings was there, grouped along the banks of the Sungari river, in the centre of the province. Native Chinese were numerous enough in the vicinity; but they needed the magic touch of the white man's civilization. Chulauchen has sprung up almost in a night, and a population of near 100,000 is now employed there. Railroad shops are in operation with several thousand hands, and immense steamship wharves are finished along the river front. The new city has electric lights, asphalted streets, fine churches and public buildings. People of every nation on the globe are to be found there. Railway construction gangs work westward and eastward from the city, and thousands of the Chinese find employment in the work. Mr. M. Sergey Friede, a New York business man, who has just returned from this wonderful new city, gave the writer the names of seventeen American business firms who are supplying about three million dollars' worth of goods to the capitalists—Russian and Chinese—interested in the new developments.

While the railway is distinctly a government enterprise, the hundred and one other enterprises which follow naturally in its wake are open to the world. The Russian government guarantees work to certain classes of settlers, but welcomes all on the broad theory that a newly opened territory needs a cosmopolitan population to make it thrive. Tradesmen and skilled mechanics from London, Paris, and even New York are established there.

Where now stands Imau, a thriving city, second only to Chulauchen in importance, the wolf was hunted a year ago. To-day, it is a city of 40,000 inhabitants, and a commercial centre, with busy shipyards, iron foundries, and great supply depots. Many Americans and Englishmen help give to the new city an international air. Schools are in a flourishing condition, and there are two hospitals well-equipped with American appliances and manned by American physicians. Stations are now located every few miles apart along the railway, connected by wire, and covering thousands of miles of territory. Troops of Cossacks are kept at Chulauchen under command of Col. Gernyvoss. The Czar has also insisted upon the Chinese Government depositing a large sum of money in the Russo-Chinese bank, for indemnity in case of depredations by natives with whom all foreigners are unpopular. This gives the Chinese Government a direct financial interest in maintaining the strictest order. Manchuria will now doubtless become the field of active evangelistic effort. There are twenty-four millions of Chinese in the province, and nearly all are polygamists. In a district covering eleven hundred miles in extent, Mr. Friede encountered only two Christian missionaries, both of whom were Frenchmen. The province has been practically neglected by the great American and English missionary evangelists because of its innaccessibility and the danger to those who introduce innovations. In one village which Mr. Friede visited, no white man had ever been seen before his arrival. Children ran shrieking from him, thinking him an evil apparition, and even the women and old men fled. They are idolators and extremely superstitious. With fertile valleys and splendid wheat-growing uplands, they ought to be prosperous; but they are in reality very primitive and very poor.

MR. SERGEY FRIEDE—THE PORT OF VLADIVOSTOK, TERMINUS OF THE RAILROAD

Mr. Friede confidently expects to be able to travel from London across Europe and Siberia to the borders of China in eight or ten days, as soon as the great 8,000-mile railroad is finished. He also believes the present generation will see the present heathen natives of Manchuria reading their Bibles and their newspapers, without the aid of teachers. Its new line of steamships will soon be plying on the Pacific between Port Arthur and San Francisco. These will fly a combination Russo-Chinese flag and will enable a traveler to circle the globe in from thirty-five to forty days, using the Siberian route from London.

This uniting of the great peoples of the East and the West must necessarily have a powerful Christianizing influence. Heathen darkness will disappear before the light of Gospel civilization. Three other railways are now in course of construction in Central and Southern China backed by English, German and American capital. These districts already have been largely won over to a knowledge of the Gospel, there being in the Mongolian province alone no less than 103 missionary stations.

It is impossible to over-estimate the importance to the world at large of the great movements that are now progressing in the ancient East. The tribes of Siberia, and the benighted millions of Mongolia and Manchuria, are destined soon to feel the benefits of a change which cannot be fraught with other than beneficent possibilities. China's dominion, old as the pyramids, is breaking to pieces, and her empire, shattered by the forces of modern civilization, will shortly be thrown open to the whole world. There are some who claim to see in these events, the foreshadowing of the ancient prediction that Russia would yet be the ascendant power in both Europe and Asia; but the wisest minds are not apprehensive. In the present situation in the East they foresee no menace, but rather a prospective blessing to millions of the human race. Russia's road of iron, stretching from the old city of Peter on the Neva, to Vladivostock, the new and wonderful seaport, born amid the snows and glaciers of the Gulf of Peter the Great, may carry troops and munitions of war; but it will also bear rich freight of progress and prosperity to every land it traverses.

With all these "open doors" in darkest Asia, it will be wonderful indeed if the glorious Truth of the Gospel be not speedily admitted to its innermost recesses, and blessed to the saving of its millions.

TYPES OF THE MANY RACES TO BE FOUND AT THE NEW CITY OF CHULAUCHEN

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Splendor and Woe of Great Cities

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Prov. 1: 20, . . . Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets.

WE are all ready to listen to the voices of nature—the voices of the mountain, the voices of the sea, the voices of the storm, the voices of the star. As in some of the cathedrals in Europe, there is an organ at either end of the building, and the one instrument responds musically to the other, so in the great cathedral of nature, day responds to day, and night to night, and flower to flower, and star to star, in the great harmonies of the universe. The spring time is an evangelist in blossoms preaching of God's love; and the winter is a prophet—white bearded—denouncing woe against our sins. We are all ready to listen to the voices of nature: but how few of us learn anything from the voices of the noisy and dusty street. You go to your mechanism, and to your work, and to your merchandise, and you come back again—and often with how different a heart you pass through the streets. Are there no things for us to learn from these pavements over which we pass? Are there no tufts of truth growing up between these cobblestones, beaten with the feet of toil, and pain, and pleasure, the slow tread of old age, and the quick step of childhood? Aye, there are great harvests to be reaped: and now I thrust in the sickle because the harvest is ripe. "Wisdom crieth without: she uttereth her voice in the streets."

In the first place, the street impresses me with the fact that this life is a scene of toil and struggle. By ten o'clock every day the city is jarring with wheels, and shuffling with feet, and humming with voices, and covered with the breath of smoke-stacks, and arush with traffickers. Once in a while you find a man going along with folded arms and with leisurely step, as though he had nothing to do: but for the most part, as you find men going down these streets on the way to business, there is anxiety in their faces, as though they had some errand which must be executed at the first possible moment. You are jostled by those who have bargains to make and notes to sell. Up this ladder with a hod of bricks, out of this bank with a roll of bills, on this dray with a load of goods, digging a cellar, or shingling a roof, or shoeing a horse, or building a wall, or mending a watch, or binding a book. Industry, with her thousand arms and thousand eyes, and thousand feet, goes on singing her song of work! work! work! while the mills drum it, and the steam-whistles fife it. All this is not because men love toil. Some one remarked: "Every man is as lazy as he can afford to be." But it is because necessity with stern brow and with uplifted whip, stands over you ready whenever you relax your toil to make your shoulders sting with the lash.

Can it be that passing up and down these streets on your way to work and business that you do not learn anything of the world's toil, and anxiety, and struggle? Oh! how many drooping hearts, how many eyes on the watch, how many miles traveled, how many burdens carried, how many losses suffered, how many battles fought, how many victories gained, how many defeats suffered, how many exasperations endured—what losses, what hunger, what wretchedness, what pallor, what disease, what agony, what despair! Sometimes I have stopped at the corner of the street as the multitudes went hither and yon, and it has seemed to be a great pantomime, and as I looked upon it my heart broke. This great tide of human life that goes down the street is a rapid, tossed, and turned aside, and dashed ahead, and driven back—beautiful in its confusion, and confused in its beauty. In the carpeted aisles of the forest, in the woods from which the eternal shadow is never lifted, on the shore of the sea over whose iron coast tosses the tangled foam sprinkling the cracked cliffs with a baptism of whirlwind and tempest, is the best place to study God; but in the rushing, swarming, raving street is the best place to study man.

Going down to your place of business and coming home again, I charge you to look about—see these signs of poverty, of wretchedness, of hunger, of sin, of bereavement—and as you go through the streets, and come back through the streets, gather up in the arms of your prayer all the sorrow, all the losses, all the sufferings, all the bereavements of those whom you pass, and present them in prayer before an all-sympathetic God. In the great day of eternity there will be thousands of persons with whom you in this world never exchanged one word, will rise up and call you blessed: and there will be a thousand fingers pointed at you in heaven, saying: "That is the man, that is the woman, who helped me when I was hungry, and sick, and wandering, and lost, and heart-broken. That is the man, that is the woman," and the blessing will come down upon you as Christ shall say: "I was hungry and ye fed me, I was naked and ye clothed me, I was sick and in prison and ye visited me: inasmuch as ye did it to these poor waifs of the streets, ye did it to me."

Again, the street impresses me with the fact that all classes and conditions of society must commingle. We sometimes culture a wicked exclusiveness. Intellect despises ignorance. Refinement will have nothing to do with boorishness. Gloves hate the sunburned hand, and the high forehead despises the flat head; and the trim hedgerow will have nothing to do with the wild copsewood, and Athens hates Nazareth. This ought not so to be. The astronomer must come down from his starry revelry and help us in our navigation. The surgeon must come away from his study of the human organism and set our broken bones. The chemist must come away from his laboratory, where he has been studying analysis and synthesis, and help us to understand the nature of the soils. I bless God that all classes of people are compelled to meet on the street. The glittering coach-wheel clashes against the scavenger's cart. Fine robes run against the peddler's pack. Robust health meets wan sickness. Honesty confronts fraud. Every class of people meets every other class. Impudence and modesty, pride and humility, purity and beastliness, frankness and hypocrisy, meeting on the same block, in the same street, in the same city. Oh! that is what Solomon meant when he said: "The rich and the poor meet together: the Lord is the maker of them all."

I like this democratic principle of the Gospel of Jesus Christ which recognizes the fact that we stand before God on one and the same platform. Do not take on any airs: whatever position you have gained in society, you are nothing but a man, born of the same Parent, regenerated by the same Spirit, cleansed in the same blood, to lie down in the same dust, to get up in the same resurrection. It is high time that we all acknowledged not only the Fatherhood of God, but the brotherhood of man.

Again, the street impresses me with the fact that it is a very hard thing for a man to keep his heart right and to get to heaven. Infinite temptations spring upon us from these places of public concourse. Amid so much affluence, how much temptation to covetousness, and to be discontented with our humble lot! Amid so many opportunities for over-reaching, what temptation to extortion! Amid so much display, what temptation to vanity! Amid so many saloons of strong drink, what allurement to dissipation! In the maelstroms and hell-gates of the street, how many make quick and eternal shipwreck! If a man-of-war comes back from a battle and is towed into the navy-yard, we go down to look at the splintered spars and count the bullet-holes, and look with patriotic admiration on the flag that floated in victory from the masthead. But that man is more of a curiosity who has gone through thirty years of the sharp-shooting of business life, and yet sails on, victor over the temptations of the street. Oh, how many have gone down under the pressure, leaving not so much as the patch of canvas to tell where they perished! They never had any peace. Their dishonesties kept tolling in their ears. If I had an axe and could split open the beams of that fine house, perhaps I would find in the very heart of it a skeleton. In his very best wine there is a smack of poor man's sweat. Oh! is it strange that when a man has devoured widows' houses he is disturbed with indigestion! All the forces of nature are against him. The floods are ready to drown him, and the earthquake to swallow him, and the fires to consume him, and the lightnings to smite him. But the children of God are on every street, and in the day when the crowns of heaven are distributed, some of the brightest of them will be given to those men who were faithful to God and faithful to the souls of others amid the marts of business, proving themselves the heroes of the street. Mighty were their temptations, mighty was their deliverance, and mighty shall be their triumph.

Again, the street impresses me with the fact that life is full of pretension and sham. What subterfuge, what double-dealing, what two-facedness! Do all people who wish you good-morning really hope for you a happy day? Do all the people who shake hands love each other? Are all those anxious about your health who inquire concerning it? Do all want to see you who ask you to call? Does all the world know half as much as it pretends to know? Is there not many a wretched stock of goods with a brilliant show-window? Passing up and down the streets to your business and your work, are you not impressed with the fact that society is hollow, and that there are subterfuges and pretensions? Oh, how many there are who swagger and strut, and how few people who are natural and walk! While fops simper and fools chuckle and simpletons giggle, how few people are natural and laugh! The courtesan and the libertine go down the street in beautiful apparel, while within the heart there are volcanoes of passion consuming their life away. I say these things not to create in you incredulity or misanthropy, nor do I forget there are thousands of people a great deal better than they seem: but I do not think any man is prepared for the conflict of this life until he knows this particular peril. Ehud comes pretending to pay his tax to king Eglon, and while he stands in front of the king, stabs him through with a dagger until the haft went in after the blade. Judas Iscariot kissed Christ.

Again, the street impresses me with the fact that it is a great field for Christian charity. There are hunger and suffering, and want and wretchedness, in the country: but these evils chiefly congregate in our great cities. On every street crime prowls, and drunkenness staggers, and shame winks, and pauperism thrusts out its hand asking for alms. Here, want is most squalid and hunger is most lean. A Christian man, going along a street in New York, saw a poor lad, and he stooped and said: "My boy, do you know how to read and write?" The boy made no answer. The man asked the question twice and thrice: "Can you read and write?" and then the boy answered, with a tear plashing on the back of his hand. He said in defiance: "No, sir; I can't read nor write, neither. God, sir, don't want me to read and write. Didn't he take away my father so long ago I never remember to have seen him? and haven't I had to go along the streets to get something to fetch home to eat for the folks? and didn't I, as soon as I could carry a basket, have to go out and pick up cinders, and never have no schooling, sir? God don't want me to read, sir. I can't read, nor write neither. Oh, these poor wanderers! They have no chance. Born in degradation, as they get up from their hands and knees to walk, they take their first step on the road to despair. Let us go forth in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ to rescue them. Let us ministers not be afraid of soiling our black clothes while we go down on that mission. While we are tying an elaborate knot in our cravat, or while we are in the study rounding off some period rhetorically, we might be saving a soul from death, and hiding a multitude of sins. O Christian laymen, go out on this work. If you are not willing to go forth yourself, then give of your means; and if you are too lazy to go, and if you are too stingy to help, then get out of the way, and hide yourself in the dens and caves of the earth, lest, when Christ's chariot comes along, the horses' hoofs trample you into the mire. Beware lest the [illegible] the destitute of your city, in the last great day, rise up and curse your stupidity and your neglect. Down to work! Lift them up! One cold winter's day, as a Christian man was going along the Battery in New York, he saw a little girl seated at the gate, shivering in the cold. He said to her: "My child, what do you sit there for, this cold day?" "Oh," she replied, "I am waiting—I am waiting for somebody to come and take care of me." "Why," said the man, "what makes you think anybody will come and take care of you?" "Oh," she said, "my mother died last week, and I was crying very much, and she said: 'Don't cry, dear; though I am gone and your father is gone, the Lord will send somebody to take care of you.' My mother never told a lie: she said some one would come and take care of me, and I am waiting for them to come." O, yes, they are waiting for you. Men who have money, men who have influence, men of churches, men of great hearts, gather them in, gather them in. It is not the will of your Heavenly Father that one of these little ones should perish.

Lastly, the street impresses me with the fact that all the people are looking forward. I see expectancy written on almost every face I meet. Where you find a thousand people walking straight on, you only find one man stopping and looking back. The fact is, God made us all to look ahead, because we are immortal. In this tramp of the multitude on the streets, I hear the tramp of a great host, marching and marching for eternity. Beyond the office, the store, the shop, the street, there is a world, populous and tremendous. Through God's grace, may you reach that blessed place. A great throng fills those boulevards, and the streets are arush with the chariots of conquerors. The inhabitants go up and down, but they never weep and they never toil. A river flows through that city, with rounded and luxurious banks, and the trees of life laden with everlasting fruitage bend their branches into the crystal. No plumed hearse rattles over that pavement, for they are never sick. With immortal health glowing in every vein, they know not how to die. Those towers of strength, those palaces of beauty, gleam in the light of a sun that never sets. Oh, heaven! beautiful heaven! Heaven, where our friends are! They take no census in that city, for it is inhabited by "a multitude which no man can number." Rank above rank. Host above host. Gallery above gallery, sweeping all around the heavens. Thousands of thousands. Millions of millions. Blessed are they who enter in through the gate into that city. Oh, start for it to-day! Through the blood of the great sacrifice of the Son of God, take up your march to heaven. "The Spirit and the bride say, Come, and whosoever will, let him come and take the water of life freely." Join this great throng marching heavenward. All the doors of invitation are open. "And I saw twelve gates, and the twelve gates were twelve pearls."

Malcontents in Porto Rico

Gen. Eaton Writes of the Obstacles they are Placing in the Path of Progress

GOING TO MARKET

A PORTO RICAN FARMER

A FAMILY IN ITS TRAVELS

A NATIVE LABORER

IN his letter from San Juan, just received, and printed below, Gen. Eaton gives some highly important information concerning the hostile attitude of a certain faction toward American rule on the island. He also describes the religious and social situation in a clear and masterly manner which can readily be understood by all who read his most interesting letter. He writes as follows.

SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO.

To the Editor of "The Christian Herald":

DEAR SIR: All interests here are bound together in the same bundle with partisan feeling, which is very bitter. Attempt any movement, social, industrial, commercial, educational, or religious, and you soon encounter the adverse influences of partisan bitterness. Strangely enough, this arose out of Spanish conditions, and remains after the conditions have disappeared, but it is naturally cultivated by those who wish to use it to keep themselves in power and control the spoils of office. Our Roman Catholic brethren, who seek to bring their church here up to the standard in America, about which many of them are extremely anxious, find it in the way of their efforts. Protestants are coming, ably representing the Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, United Brethren, Episcopalians and Methodists, and all encounter it. It must be studied and understood before any of these great efforts can realize the fullest success. The denominational differences common in the United States may be expected here, but the American methods of each will be opposed by partisan leaders, who resist American tendencies. Not only will each denomination have its own preferences, and so far fail of the heartiest co-operation in what is common to all—the desire to introduce the American Sabbath and American freedom of conscience—but there will be the general assistance of those forces not ready to see improvement.

There are those ready for the American Sabbath School; there is a movement among Catholics to introduce it, but it is opposed by the spirit which clings to the past. Those who would aid in movements intelligently may well look into recent events, which illustrate what may be expected from adverse influences of partisan spirit. Parties are known as liberal and radical. At the surrender, the liberals were in power, and although their leader was bitter against the United States up to the last moment, he took the oath, and he and his Cabinet and the Alcaldes and Councils of the seventy-one municipalities were mostly continued in power. Especial effort was made by American commanders to allow affairs to go on by their own self-direction. The military suppressed the banditti and preserved order, interfering as little as possible, save in most essential matters, such as sanitation, etc., but reports of evils increased. An Alcalde and Council were removed and martial law established.

The lesson was most wholesome.

More and more it was evident that local evils had their nexus in the Cabinet. The condition of one department was so serious that the resignation of that secretary was called for and his duties assigned to the next in rank, and two of the most important divisions of the department put in charge of two Americans to report to him, and Gen. Henry went further and ordered that there be no Cabinet meetings save when he presided, and that each secretary should attend to his own duties. This was so nearly fatal to all their bad schemes that they all resigned, acknowledging in writing that the general was so far right, but demanding that he should go further, and permit the election of a legislature, which could not be permitted in view of the danger of partisan violence, and without permission from Washington. Gen. Henry appointed new secretaries, requiring each to attend to the duties of his department, and forbidding their meeting save when he presided, and introducing American experts as aids in important parts of the service. The Alcaldes were in close touch with the spirit which ruled the Cabinet, and that spirit hoped to control the action of the General here, or, failing in that, to secure a general resignation of Alcaldes, bring on a catastrophe, appeal to Washington, and thus secure its ends; but the Alcaldes had learned a lesson by the removal of one of their number, and the great body of people were more than satisfied.

SUMMER RESIDENCE OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AT SAN JUAN

All beneficent movements must not only encounter the evils arising from this bitter partisan feeling, but its unfair methods. General Henry issued an order delaying the destructive foreclosure of mortgages, which had to go through the hands of the Secretary of State, and when it was published an important section had been so changed as to defeat its purpose, and to bring it into contempt. Since the resignation of the Cabinet its master has written a letter calculated to check the general movement towards Americanism and to defy American authority. He now proposes to go to America, and his friends claim that he will take $30,000 with him, and return to assume control of affairs here. As the representative of an agricultural committee, he asks a letter of introduction to the President. Pretending to be a friend of Gen. Henry, he declares this "a military despotism," and that, if it continues, the feeling of attraction will become one of repulsion. He is himself the special leader of those who would delay the coming in of the American spirit and institutions. He claims that the great body of Porto Ricans are with him, which is far otherwise. All the lower classes are substantially united with the body of the sensible property holders in looking to America for improvement.

Those who come here, representing the piety of the United States, or its beneficent plans, in spite of the above adverse influences, will find it an inviting field. They should so locate their work apart from each other as to avoid differences among themselves. In illustration of these views, the "Society for the Benefit of Children" may be mentioned. It brought together, regardless of party differences, a considerable group of the ablest and best men, who addressed themselves at once to the improvement of schools and the cultivation of patriotic sentiment among the children. There are no amusements for children here, and they began to secure a park for them. They arranged the celebration of the ratification of the treaty of peace, in which several thousand participated, marching with United States flags to patriotic music, and having appropriate addresses by Gen. Henry and some leading citizens. They also planned and carried out the observance of Washington's birthday. Bands played on the streets and in the plazas. Schools marched with the American flag to the theatre, each seated there about its banner. Many of the best citizens joined in the demonstration.

Every space was occupied, hundreds standing up. The army and navy added to the enthusiasm by firing salutes and throwing their colors to the breeze. In the theatre, soldiers and sailors united in presenting two tableaux. Music was furnished by two Porto Rican bands, one composed of orphan boys from the asylum. American flags were abundant; the United States coat-of-arms was conspicuous, and the portrait of Washington, appropriately draped, was well placed on the stage. A speaker, who was eloquently introduced by the Secretary of the Interior, told in five minutes, points in his life as boy and public man, closing with: "God bless the mothers and fathers; God bless the children of Porto Rico." The bands, as if realizing their new-found liberty, struck up the "Borinka," the Porto Rican national air, which they had not been allowed to play under Spanish rule. Indeed, under that rule, no such voluntary expression of sentiment had been allowed. In the evening, the elite of the city, invited by card, gathered in the Athenæum and listened to music, and poems, and well-prepared speeches by able men, doing honor to the life and character of Washington. A few leading men, entering fully into the spirit of the occasion, furnished refreshment for the children, some two hundred orphans being first served.

Mrs. General Henry has wisely led in an organization of American and Porto Rican ladies in aid of the suffering poor; a most needed work, and promising great good. Rev. Mr. Smith feeds from one to two hundred daily; thus the beneficent principles of the United States are beginning to operate.

The Raising of Lazarus

S. S. Lesson for April 2. John 11: 32-45
Golden Text, John 11: 25

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

In his healing of the man born blind, it was as "the Light of the world," that our Lord manifested himself (John 9: 5), but in the raising of Lazarus, as "the Resurrection and the Life." In all that the Scripture tells us of the life of our Lord, every incident and every parable serves to bring out what he is; only so much is told as is needed for this purpose. "The Scriptures . . . are they which testify of me" (John 5: 39). Thus, Lazarus was, in himself, only a certain man; Bethany was only the town of Mary and Martha, and only named because it was that Mary which anointed the Lord with oil, etc. But they all had their place in the life of Jesus, for "Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus."

Lazarus was sick: "Therefore his sisters sent unto Jesus, saying: Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." When Jesus heard that, he said: "This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby." A sickness for the glory of God? How should sickness glorify him? It is not said that Lazarus should glorify him by his patience and resignation. Without doubt he was both patient and resigned to the will of God, but this was not the purpose of the sickness. It was not to show what Lazarus was, but what Jesus was; "that the Son of God might be glorified thereby."

His disciples were absorbed with the danger to Jesus of going into Judea again; the sisters of Lazarus were absorbed with their personal loss; but Lazarus himself, in whose body the Son of God was to be glorified, simply died. Because Jesus loved the family at Bethany, "therefore" he put them to the test (John 11: 5, 6). But while to them he seemed indifferent, he knew and told the disciples what had taken place, and they, too, could not understand what he said until he explained. And then Thomas, although Jesus had said, "I go that I may awake him out of sleep" (verse 11), said, "Let us also go that we may die with him!" (verse 16).

When Jesus came upon the scene, he found that Lazarus had lain already four days in the grave, and the sisters were surrounded with the usual accompaniments of a Jewish death—mourning men and mourning women (Jer. 9: 17; 16: 7). What had become of his Word, "This sickness is not unto death"? What had become of their faith in his word? Things had turned out so contrary to their expectations: they thought Jesus would surely come and heal their brother: the message reached him, for he had sent word, "This sickness is not unto death," and yet Lazarus had died. They were disappointed in Jesus; his word seemed to mock them; all seemed to go wrong.

When they heard that Jesus was come, energetic Martha went out to meet him, and not waiting for any word from him that could throw light on the situation, she vented the bitterness of her heart in the reproach, "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died," and added, "But I know that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee." Had she, even now, some hope that he who had raised the widow's son and Jairus' daughter, might overcome death in the case of her brother Lazarus? "Thy brother shall rise again." Without waiting to take in all that the words meant and to connect them with the message, "This sickness is not unto death," Martha had an answer ready. "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." "I am the Resurrection and the Life: he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believeth thou this?" "Yea, Lord," was her answer. "I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world." But it was an inoperative faith.

What had Jesus said? "He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live!" Did this refer to Lazarus? Had he died believing that his sickness was not unto death, and that the Son of God would be glorified in raising him from the dead. It seems so. But what a lesson for us in these days to accept the last extremity in whatsoever circumstances God may suffer us to come, that the Son of God may be glorified in a people who are not moved from their confidence when even the very word of God seems for the moment to fail, until God shall explain himself. He looks for a people who will trust him through and through.

Then Martha came and called Mary secretly with the glad news: "The Master is come and calleth for thee." What a relief to leave the Jews who came to comfort her for the presence of the Lord! And yet Jesus was no more glorified in Mary than in Martha: the same reproach as Martha's came from the grief-stricken sister, and "Jesus groaned in spirit and was troubled." What was it that burdened Jesus? Was it not that he found none on whom he could count in the few solemn hours which remained to him? And then he wept, going with the sisters and the Jews to the place of burial, while he overheard them saying, "Could not this Man which opened the eyes of the blind have caused that even this man should not have died?" Oh how much greater were his thoughts than theirs! Why did not the sisters believe and honor their Lord, by saying with calmness: "Our brother is going to be raised from the dead?" Why do not we, in moments of crisis, remain calm and sure in our God, that he may glorify himself in our circumstances?

Groaning in himself again, our Lord came to the grave. Between the living one and the dead was an impediment. "Take ye away the stone," which tells how you expect death to hold your brother. Martha, the very Martha who had said, "I believe thou art the Christ, the Son of God which should come into the world" now acts as though Jesus was no more than another man.

Then he looked up: he never was disappointed there. "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me, and I know that thou hearest me always, but because of the people which stand by I said it, that they might believe." And then with a loud voice he proved his authority over death: "Lazarus, come forth." And the dead awoke and came forth: he had believed and he lived. The grave clothes were unbound and he went free.

A TOMB IN BETHANY, SAID TO BE THE TOMB OF LAZARUS

LESSON POINTS

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

JESUS was probably in the Perean country, east of the Jordan, when he received the message from Martha and Mary, telling him of their brother's illness. His motive for going there, we can understand. He must have seen enough of the malignity of the chief men of his nation, during his visit to Jerusalem at the feast, to realize that the end of his life and his work was at hand. He therefore retired to Perea with his disciples, that he might give them such advanced teaching as would fit them for the arduous task they must undertake when he was removed from them. The teaching reported by Luke in chapters 14 to 17, was probably given during that period. While he was so engaged, the message from the sisters came. They evidently hoped that he would come to them at once in their trouble, but for some reason Christ delayed. Perhaps he wished to make this sickness an occasion for working a miracle, which should be the culmination of all that had gone before. Martha was doubtless right when she said, "If thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." There would then have been the record of another case of healing, instead of the miracle, which everyone, who believes in the Gospel at all, recognizes as a proof of Christ's divine power. We may echo Christ's own words, and be glad that he was not there. There had been already two instances of the dead being raised. Christ had raised the son of the widow of Nain (Luke 7: 12–15), and the daughter of Jairus (Luke 8: 49–55). But in those cases, death had been so recent that modern sceptics have contended that they were only cases of suspended animation. No such theory, however, can apply to the resuscitation of a man who had been in the tomb four days. The significance of the miracle has therefore been recognized by believers and sceptics alike. We would have liked to learn more about it. Had Lazarus no [illegible] during those four days? His evangelist is silent on that subject and was content, as we must be, to point to him whose voice could call the dead to life, and also has promised that they who believe in him, though they were dead, yet shall they live.

Jesus wept. We wonder why. He knew that he was about to give the dead man back alive to his friends. Why should he weep? Perhaps it was sympathy, which in his sensitive nature brought him into unison with the sorrowing sisters. A minister had in his congregation a lady who gave away large sums every year in charity, yet he was astonished to find how few people spoke well of her. He was curious to ascertain the reason. Visiting a widow, one day, who had received, as he knew, several handsome gifts from her, he introduced the lady's name. "Yes sir," said the widow, she has been very generous. I am grateful to her. The money was very welcome." There was no enthusiasm. But when he mentioned the name of another lady, the widow's countenance lighted up. "Oh," she said, I love her. She must have a good heart." The minister noticed the contrast and said, "But she never gives you anything. She is too poor." The widow had no difficulty in explaining. "She came and cried with me, and was sorry for me, and, badly as I needed the money, I needed the sympathy more."

Take ye away the stone. The tomb was probably like other tombs belonging to wealthy families in Palestine, a chamber natural or artificial, hollowed out of a rock. To prevent the jackals and other animals getting access to the bodies which were simply laid on shelves, a heavy circular stone was rolled against the entrance, closing it. This must be rolled away. Of course, the Being who could call the dead to life, could have removed it by the word of his mouth, but he would not. Human hands must perform that work. Christ will not do for men what they can do for themselves. "Why do you spend your money in this way?" a minister asked of a philanthropist who had spent thousands of dollars in building model homes for the poor. "It would have been better to spend it in Bibles and tracts." The philanthropist answered: "I must do my work in my own way. These people could not hear the Gospel or give any thought to religion while they lived in their miserable dens, reeking with fever-germs and pestiferous smells. I am giving them a chance. You can take the Gospel to them now with some prospect of their listening." How many souls there are who might hear Christ's life-giving voice, if the stones were removed which society and their hard lot have interposed between them and the Saviour!

He that was dead came forth. "I cannot believe in the resurrection," said an undertaker, who had seen many dead bodies. "When I look at some corpses that come here, I cannot believe that even Almighty power can make living beings of them again." The person to whom he was talking said: "Is it more difficult to believe than that there is life in these dead beans? Yet I set some of them in my garden and they grew. I cannot understand it, but I know and you know that it is so. They look dead now, but under the right conditions they have a new life."

That they may believe. Annie Trumbull Slosson tells a beautiful story of a woman who was heart-broken over the loss of a child. At length she found some relief in attending to her garden and watching the habits of insects. One beautifully marked caterpillar attracted her attention. She kept it on a potted plant and took care that it had the leaves it liked to feed on. But one day she saw it burrow into the soil and hide itself. She uncovered it and saw that it looked as if it was dead. But sometime afterward she noticed that the soil was disturbed and the empty skin of the caterpillar was exposed. She had cherished such an affection for the creature that she covered it lovingly again with the soil. But, looking up at the plant above it, she saw a beautiful butterfly. It had not come into the room from without. It must have come out of the caterpillar's skin. Then her thoughts flew to her dead boy. "Dear Lord," she cried, "if thou canst do this with a poor caterpillar, canst thou not do it with my dead boy?"

An Apostle to the Red Men

Prof. W. R. King and His Missionary Work Among Indians and Whites in our New Territories—A Great Christian Educator in a New Field of Duty

THE appointment has been announced of President King, of Henry Kendall College, Muskogee, I. T., as Superintendent of the Southwestern District of the American Sunday School Union, and successor of the late Rev. W. P. Paxson, D. D., well known to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. William Robert King was born in Rotherwood, Hawkins County, Tenn., January 12, 1868, of Scotch-Irish parents. His early years were spent on his father's farm, a few months being spent in the country public schools during winters, until the autumn of 1886, when, with $1.25 in his pocket, he entered Washington College, Washington County, Tenn. He graduated with the class of 1889, having literally worked his way through. In September of that year he entered Union Theological Seminary, New York. His spare time was spent in mission work in New York city. On Sundays, during his last two years in college, he supplied a pulpit in a suburban town. After graduation in 1892 he set his face toward the Home Mission fields of the Southwest, and accepted a call from a mission church in Tahlequah, I. T. Having been licensed by the Presbytery of Holston in May, 1892, he was transferred to the Presbytery of the Cherokee Nation (now Sequoyah) and ordained to the Gospel ministry in October, 1892, his work at Tahlequah having begun in June of that year.

In October, 1893, he was surprised to find himself unanimously elected Synodical Missionary of the Synod of Indian Territory. It was no sinecure which had been thrust upon him. Both Oklahoma and Indian Territories—an area of more than 70,000 square miles, were included in his field, and over these he had to be almost continually traveling; the most of the time in a buggy, often out of sight of civilization, with not even a trail to follow; his only guide being a compass and his good judgment. In some of these drives, it was necessary to make as much as ninety miles in a single day.

The mission schools of the Presbyterian Church also had to be looked after by Mr. King. In connection with this part of his work, he founded Henry Kendall College in 1894, in Muskogee, Indian Territory. In June, 1896, he was called to the presidency of that institution, and in October of that year he resigned the office of Synodical Missionary, and entered into his new work with characteristic zeal, performing the duties not only of president, but also of professor and manager. He soon afterward secured a new location for the college—a commanding site of twenty-six acres just within the corporate limits of Muskogee. Here the necessary buildings were erected, including main college building, chapel recitation-rooms, library, reading-room, society halls, music-rooms and dormitories, all substantially equipped.

From this work, President King has now been called to the Superintendency of the Southwestern District of the American Sunday School Union. His connection with the Union will be a valuable addition to its already strong working force. Professor King's striking personality and kindly face always compel attention. Courteous and interesting in conversation, he is a pleasant companion. As a preacher, his ability was marked while yet in college. His sermons are practical and doctrinal, setting forth clearly and forcibly the fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion. His discourses, although marked by a keen theological and philosophical insight, are helpful to all classes. As a student, he is thorough and well-balanced, and though progressive, yet he is thoroughly orthodox. His spirituality is very marked, and he recognizes the leading of the Divine hand in all things. In his whole life can be traced the words, "By the grace of God I am what I am."

The Southwestern District of the American Sunday School Union, in which Mr. King will operate, includes the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Arizona. Much of his work in the new field will be among the red men.

Our illustrations on this page, from photographs taken on the mission field by workers of the American Sunday School Union, and furnished exclusively to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, show, perhaps more convincingly than mere words, the substantial progress of the Indian toward civilization. They are mainly photographs of the Creeks, a tribe among whom the Union's teachers have labored long and diligently, and to excellent purpose. These people are all under Christian influence. Their progress gives promise of still brighter things for the red man of the future.

Sunday Bull-Fights in Mexico

American visitors to Mexico have been frequently surprised and even shocked at the prevalence of Sunday bull-fighting. This brutal sport has recently become the subject of a very animated discussion among the leading newspapers of Mexico, and not a few have boldly denounced it as an indecency wholly unfit to be tolerated by the intelligent population of a modern and progressive republic.

New interest has been added to the discussion by the publication of the following resolutions recently adopted by the Mexico Conference of the M. E. Church:

RESOLVED: That we will employ all our influence in pulpit and press and school, against the cruel and barbarous practice of bull-fighting.

RESOLVED: That respectfully and from our very hearts we beseech Christian tourists visiting Mexico to refrain from attendance at that sport, for we regard it as prohibited by the Word of God and we also consider the presence of our fellow countrymen at such resorts as being highly damaging to the cause of Christ in this land.

RESOLVED: That we regard attendance upon this barbarous and cruel diversion, by Christians, especially on the Sabbath, as nothing short of treason to the cause of Christianity.

CHARLES C. MCCABE, President.
H. A. BASSETT, B. N. VELASCO, Secretaries.

This, being published as an open letter, aroused the rabid antagonism of a portion of the Mexican press. The Correo Espanol (Spanish), by way of retaliation, attacked various brutal forms of sport, which are prevalent among Americans, and accused the bishop of being a "Hispanophobe," in attacking a diversion purely Spanish. It added: "If the 800 odd tourists now in Mexico do not go to the bull fight on Sunday afternoon, where will they go?" El Imparcial, the leading journal in Mexico, condemned the attack of the Correo, and vigorously defended Bishop McCabe. It drew a sharp distinction between the respectable and sensible Mexicans, and the class for whom the Correo was the avowed spokesman.

There is, unquestionably, a strong and representative element in Mexico who are heartily sick of bull-fighting, and who feel that their country, which is rapidly making an honored and exalted name among nations, should no longer be disgraced by such brutal public displays. To this class, the open letter of Bishop McCabe more directly appeals. The Herald, the most influential English paper in Mexico, takes strong and dignified ground in opposition to the violent defenders of the brutal sport.

The Correo, in the course of its abuse, has referred to the attendance of American tourists at the Sunday bull-fights. It is undeniable that if such visitors would withdraw their patronage, the horrible custom would ultimately fall into disuse.

Said a well-known American, now in Mexico: "The argument employed by such visitors is that they go 'only for this once,' and that they 'want to see life in Mexico.' There are so many thousands of tourists who go to Mexico from the United States that if all were to go even once, the result would be to keep up the obnoxious sport indefinitely. The folly and wickedness of such a course do not seem to be apparent to many who, under ordinary circumstances and in thoughtful moments, would shrink from the mere suggestion of attending such a hideous carnival of blood and slaughter. Would that there were a Henry Bergh in Mexico! He would find abundant opportunity for the exercise of philanthropic care for the helpless animals, and he would indisputably receive the moral support of the best element in the Southern republic."

Bishop McCabe is by no means waging a hopeless fight, notwithstanding the rancor of a portion of the Mexican press. Wherever enlightenment goes, brutality disappears, and soon the day will come when the cruel spectacle of the bull-ring, with its wanton and revolting brutalities, and its frenzied crowds of blood-maddened spectators, will have vanished forever in obedience to the demands of civilization.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Dr. Talmage Resigns his Pastorate

The following letter, which was presented by Rev. Dr. Talmage to the Session of his church, in Washington, recently, explains itself:

"1400 MASSACHUSETTS AVE.,
"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 9, 1899.

"To the Session of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington.—Dear Brethren: The increasing demands made upon me by religious journalism and the continuous calls for more general work in the cities have of late years caused frequent interruption of my pastoral work. It is not right that this condition of affairs should further continue. Besides this, it is desirable that I have more opportunity to meet face to face in religious assemblage those in this country and other countries to whom I have, through the kindness of the printing-press, been permitted to preach week by week, and without the exception of a week, for about thirty years. Therefore, though very reluctantly, I have concluded, after serving you nearly four years in the pastoral relation, to send this letter of resignation.

"I ask you to join me in a petition to Presbytery for the dissolution of the pastoral relation between myself and the First Presbyterian Church of Washington, D. C.

"For the uniform kindness shown me by yourselves and the church you represent, I wish to make hearty acknowledgment. I expect to continue residence in your city, and hope to have many opportunities of meeting you.

"That the blessing of God may ever abide upon our beloved church is the prayer of your friend and pastor.

"T. DE WITT TALMAGE."

The Departed Lord Chancellor

THE world laments the going of Lord Herschell. I often met him at the banquets which the citizens of Washington gave the "Joint High Commissioners." On my first meeting him, I asked the question which every American would like to have answered. Are you a descendant of Herschell, the astronomer? He said he was not. Indeed, he had enough honors of his own without needing any inheritance of fame. The last I saw him, he was in bed suffering from a fall upon the ice. He was very cheerful, and remarked upon the relation of good spirits to speedy recovery. He gave several instances showing how much the mental condition has to do with the physical condition.

When I called to his mind the satisfaction he ought to feel in the fact that his wound was received while in patriotic and international service, he replied that he was engaged in the discharge of his duty when the accident befell him. When I said "Good-by" to him as I was about to be gone for ten days, I had no idea that he would never rise from that pillow.

What shining marks Death has been aiming at, this season! What an inscrutable Providence that so many useless people live on, and so many upon whom the church and the world depend are taken! But God is always right, and what we know not now, we shall know hereafter.

Hypnotism

THROUGH the associated press went a story of a case of hypnotism, which was truthfully reported as coming under my own observation. It is time that all moral and religious teachers should express themselves on the subject of hypnotism. It is a word older than a Noah Webster's dictionary, but the ancient definition, which says that it is a somnambulism produced by means of animal magnetism, is as much out of time as the coal scuttle bonnets of your great grandmothers were different from the dainty head-covering of a modern lady. Hypnotism, as now believed in, is the spell that one person holds over another, compelling him or her to surrender all power of will and self-control, and do as the operator pleases. Indeed, a celebrated case came into the courts of Paris, where an offender of the law was adjudged innocent and set free because he could not help committing the crime, he having been hypnotized. The only case that has come under my observation is the one to which I refer as seen in all the newspapers. A lady called at my house and desired to see me on important business. She appeared refined, intelligent, and pleasing. There was nothing in her appearance to indicate anything unusual. She began by saying that she was from the West; that she had come to secure my interference in her behalf. She said her uncle had died a little while before. He had been slain through a spell put upon him by his wife. The uncle had suffered from a long and distressing disease. His wife had, through hypnotic influence, compelled him to decline the taking of food. A physician had been called in, and the wife had also hypnotized him, so that he gave the wrong kind of medicine or no medicine at all. My informant said that this baleful influence was continued until the invalid went down under it and finally expired. The lady talking with me had complained of the treatment of her uncle, and had pronounced it a case of murder, and, as a result, the woman who had slain her husband had, in a revengeful spirit, cast the same spell upon her, my informant. To escape these influences she had gone clear out to Oregon, but distance had no relaxing effect, and she could endure this malign pursuit no longer, and she had come to request me to employ attorneys in her behalf, and have her wrongs and those of her deceased uncle ventilated in the courts of law.

Although the recital of the incident may to you, who did not confront the case, seem bordering on the facetious, to me the conversation was a fearful tragedy. I could see no sign in her face of mental aberration. There was nothing like an enlargement of the pupil of the eye that generally indicates intellectual shipwreck. After she had done speaking, I said:

"Madame, I am very sorry for you, but why do you not try to have your wrongs righted in the place of your residence, where there are as skilful lawyers and as good judges of court as we have here?"

"Oh," she replied, "they say that I am not responsible; that I am insane, and I could get no justice done me there, and I have come all this distance confident that you would help me out from this awful influence which haunts me day and [illegible]

I said: "Madame, I am very clear as to what is the best thing for you to do. Will you take my advice if I frankly give [illegible]

She said: "I think I will."

Then I said: "My advice is for you to take the first train for home. Your uncle is dead; no amount of fuss in the courts will restore him to life. There is only one person that you have to look after, and that is yourself. I do not say that the people of your town are right when they declare you insane, but I tell you plainly that unless you get off this track you are now on you will be insane. Now go straight home and seek out a good family physician who will give you some medicine to tone up your nervous system and quiet your brain. There is no spell upon you; you are under a dreadful hallucination. If you will accept a doctor I will get one, but not a lawyer. Go right [illegible]

With the close of that conversation ended my acquaintance with the case until the newspapers informed us a few days after that that unfortunate lady had been arrested, deadly weapons taken from her, and she sent to the insane asylum. There have no doubt been cases of more or less malignancy coming under your observation. I think it is a new phase of an old superstition called in the last century "the evil eye," a capacity by glance of the eye to afflict with sickness or strike with death any one who came under the observation.

No Grog for Jack

THE canteen never had a more complete fling than when Secretary Long forbade the sale of intoxicants on ships of war and in naval stations. Public men are apt to interpret law according to their own tastes. John D. Long has been a consistent abstainer for twenty-five years, and he never allows an opportunity of smiting alcoholism to pass unimproved. Too many ships have been wrecked by drunken captains and crews to allow the canteen an easy circulation among our shipping. But we have not had many Secretaries of the Navy who would have dared to issue anything like this "General Order No. 508." Hereafter we may feel that those who stand behind the guns on men-of-war are competent. Rum fills a man with the spirit of fight, but never gives him power of execution.

Animal Cruelty of the Klondikers

THE lust for gold is one of the most exhaustive and cruel passions of human nature. The Klondikers had staked their all on success. They made all dispatch for the gold fields. It was the gambler's chance. And so they strained every nerve, and put the heaviest burdens on their poor animals—horses, goats, dogs—to accomplish their end. One rough frontiersman says: "It was a trail of blood from Stikine City to Glenora." These daring miners and speculators were some of them ignorant, more of them careless, and more still greedy for gold. Another writer thus describes them: "Every kind of a dog was bought or stolen in the States, and brought up in midwinter on the open steamer decks, where the half-fed creatures were crowded together in sleet, snow, rain and bitter winds, without shelter or drink. Tied in strings to the fences, they were left to howl the nights out at Fort Wrangell, and were in poor condition to pull the cruel loads; when driven off over snow and ice, sure to be beaten, clubbed and kicked as long as they could stand in the harness. All animals were treated as cruelly—horses and oxen brought to Fort Wrangell without food or drink on the way and left uncared-for on the river steamers till the captains themselves interfered and compelled the men to care for them."

[illegible] wholly beside themselves. There is often a great sacrifice of animal comfort and animal life in the ordinary methods of accumulating property. The societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals usually work within the confines of civil[illegible] grieve over and to amend. A few years ago there was a great horse epidemic in the city of Boston. The city came to a standstill; business was paralyzed. Steam and electricity can do wonders for us, but still we require the kind and faithful offices of the horse. Indeed, we need animals, which are dependent upon us, to keep up in our bosoms benevolent instincts. The tender mercies of the Klondikers—alas! they are cruel. There the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain.

Missionary work in Madagascar is being done by the Society of Friends. Some of its missionaries are [illegible] the capital of the island, about seventy miles in [illegible] put under their care. This district now contains more than 140 schools, which are periodically visited by missionaries, who hold examinations and "normal extension classes." In compliance with the wishes of the French government, agricultural and industrial education is given in connection with the schools.

The work of the missionaries in India in relieving the famine through the aid sent them by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other Christians, is receiving recognition. In reviewing a work on the famine, the New York [illegible] says: "[illegible] missionaries in India have never come to the front, as in these years of scarcity. Their praise is in the mouths of English officials who [illegible] except the missionaries are in touch with those [illegible] famine stricken must. None are at all fit to be wardens of orphans now more numerous than ever. None can make a little money leaven so vast a mass. No class can be so safely trusted as honest and wise almoners of bounty."

A Sad Anniversary

ON February 15, the American colony in Havana, celebrated, in a reverent and patriotic manner, the first anniversary of the loss of the battleship Maine and a large portion of her crew in Havana harbor just a year ago. Early in the morning, the auxiliary cruiser Resolute sent a boat's crew of sailors to decorate the wreck of the Maine, which is still visible in the bay. The solitary standing mast was wreathed with laurel, and the fighting-top was hung with festoons of greens, tied with red-white-and-blue ribbon, while over all floated the nation's flag. A solemn religious service was held in the Merced Church in the forenoon, which many military and naval officers attended, and in the afternoon a vast assemblage gathered at Colon Cemetery, to witness the ceremony of decorating the graves of the victims who perished on the Maine. It was the original purpose to give the decoration ceremony a distinctly naval character, but the soldiers were also permitted to lay their floral tributes on the graves, which were thickly covered with wreaths and blossoms in a great variety of beautiful designs. An entire wagonload of floral pieces was presented by the American ladies in Havana, and there were also many from local societies. Each American sailor and marine gave some little floral token in loving memory of the men of the Maine. The procession from the city was composed of marines and sailors from the Brooklyn and Resolute, Major-General Ludlow's staff, American women in ambulances, American visitors in carriages, a troop of U. S. cavalry and one Cuban society. As it entered the cemetery to the mournful music of the Brooklyn's band, the scene was a pathetic one, and while the work of decoration was taking place, the great crowd of spectators looked on in unbroken silence, many of them kneeling and showing deep emotion. The occasion undoubtedly made a great impression on Havana and its people. It must have convinced these people that this republic is not so ungrateful as to forget the men who perished in its service. We most earnestly hope that our rule in Cuba will be of such a character as to convince them also, that it is not of our dead sailors only that we are mindful but that the memory of him who died for the whole world so abides with us as to control our principles and our lives and govern our conduct:

Ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God because of the reproach of our enemies (Neh. 5 : 9)?

"MAINE DAY" IN HAVANA—THE FLORAL DECORATIONS ON THE GRAVES OF THE VICTIMS

Aguinaldo's Last Stand

Our war in the Philippines, which had been conducted on a conservative plan while General Otis was awaiting reinforcements, was suddenly infused with amazing energy, when our troopships arrived during the second week in March. On the 13th inst., at early morning, an American "flying column," under General Wheaton, consisting of the Twentieth and Twenty-second Infantry regiments, two battalions of the First Washington Infantry, seven companies of the Second Oregon Infantry and Troops E, I, and K, Fourth Cavalry, and Scott's battery, made a swift advance, cutting Aguinaldo's forces in two and severing communication between the north and south wings of the Filipino army. This movement was executed with entire success. The strong "flying column," supported by a gunboat, which shelled the rebels along the river, cut a wedge into the enemy, capturing the three villages of Guadaloupe, San Nicolas and Pasig in rapid succession, and compelling the insurgents to retreat at every point. Three American soldiers were killed and fourteen are reported wounded, but the loss of the Filipinos was very heavy, over seventy being killed, and 1,000 wounded, sixteen being killed in the sharp fighting at Pasig alone. Gen. Wheaton now occupies a bluff commanding the villages of Pasig, Pateros, and Taguig. He has passed the obstruction in the way of his reaching Laguna de Bay, and believes he will be able to prevent a junction between the two wings of Aguinaldo's army. He will continue the aggressive movement by our troops until the country between Manila and Malolos, Aguinaldo's capital, is clear of insurgents, by which time it is expected that the Filipinos will be convinced of the futility of further resistance and ready to sue for peace. One cannot but grieve over the necessity for this bloodshed. If the people only understood that our rule would be beneficent and would lead to their peace and prosperity, they would surely close their ears to the deceits of Aguinaldo and his ambitious associates. It is a pity that none among them address to them the inquiry the prophet put to his people:

Why should ye be stricken any more (Isa. 1 : 5)?

Shocked by Electricity

An extraordinary escape from a terrible death is reported. One of the employees in the power-house of the Lexington Avenue Railroad, in New York, was at work a few days ago, when he accidentally placed his hand on a switch and received a current of two thousand volts. Ordinarily, a current of much less intensity is fatal, but this man lived and except for a few burns does not appear to have suffered injury. In explaining the matter afterward, he said he must have made a short circuit by placing his hand on the switch. He remembered having paused in his work for a moment and rested his hand on the switch nearest to him. As he did so, he said, a bolt of electricity burst from the switch, striking him in the chest. He was hurled back about ten feet, and the next thing he recalls was that he was wildly tearing the burning clothes from his limbs. He seemed to be on fire, clothing and flesh. The light blinded those near by for a moment. One of his fellow-workmen threw him to the floor, while others covered him with cloths. The fire was extinguished quickly and an ambulance summoned. The clothing had been nearly all torn off from the waist up, and the breast, arms, side, shoulders, and face were blackened and seared as with a hot iron. It is inexplicable that a current which would set fire to the man's clothes, and even melt the metal pegs in his shoes, should yet have left him alive. The theory is advanced that the very intensity of the current saved him, and that a weaker current would have killed him. Only electrical experts can settle that question, but we know that such a principle does apply in the spiritual world. Little sins, small temptations and troubles are frequently more fatal to spiritual life than some crushing calamity that drives a man to seek God with all his heart.

When he slew them, then they sought him, and they returned and inquired early after God (Ps. 78 : 34).

Tied Himself with Ropes

A remarkable discovery was made recently on a farm in Nassau County, L. I. The owner of the farm lives in New York, and during the winter employs a caretaker to look after the farm house. The man gets no wages, but in return for his services has free lodging in the farm house and a credit at the grocery guaranteed by the owner of the farm. During the severe weather at the end of February, there were no signs of the caretaker's presence in the house. Passers-by noticed that there was no fire, and no one had seen the man coming out or going in. It was supposed that the storm had caused him to go to the city. But when the brighter weather set in and the man did not return, there was some uneasiness about him. Finally a man who had some acquaintance with him, forced a way into the house. Then the body of the care-taker was found in a condition which showed that he had been dead for several days. The strangest feature of the case was that there was a belt around the waist which was secured by a strong cord to the post of the bed, and ropes were attached to his ankles which were also fastened to the post. It was thought at first that a murder had been committed; but further examination showed that the man had tied the ropes himself. A doctor who examined the corpse gives the opinion that the man had been very ill and had been delirious. He thinks that in one of his lucid intervals he had realized that he had been delirious, and fearing that if he again lost his senses he might wander out into the storm and be frozen to death, he tied himself to the bed so that he could not go outside the room. It was a pathetic thing to thus deprive himself of the power to run into harm. There would have been no need for it if some friend had been at hand who could have been trusted to restrain him. There are some sufferers from the malady of sin who are conscious of needing such restraint. They know that when temptation assails them they will fall and do the things that they would not. For all such there is a sure resource in Christ:

Unto him that is able to keep you from falling (Jude 24).

A Creditor's Hard Conditions

An Iowa journal publishes a copy of a note which was signed by a citizen of De Mars, Ia., some months ago. It was drawn up by a lawyer who was weary of continual applications for loans by men who did not repay. By the note, the borrower agreed that if it was not paid at maturity, his creditor might levy on everything he possessed, and might sell it, "down to my last suit of clothes, the school-books and food of my children, with the coffin, or coffins, in which any of my family may be buried, and if after everything I possess has been sold, there still remains a balance due on the note, I agree that the services of myself and family shall be sold until such time as the demands of the note are satisfied. I further agree to live on corn bread and sorghum molasses until the demands of the note are satisfied." When any one came to the lawyer to borrow money, this note was offered him to sign, and the lawyer says that many of the borrowers actually signed it. Some signed without reading, and were horrified when it was read over to them. It must be that they were in very urgent need of money before they would consent to such conditions, but there were some who did not care what the conditions were so long as they could get the money for present indulgence. There are too many such men who are now under the power of evil. By committing sin, they have incurred penalties which keep them in bondage, from which only the power of Christ can deliver them.

He that pursueth evil pursueth it to his own death (Prov. 11 : 19).

Getting a New Skin

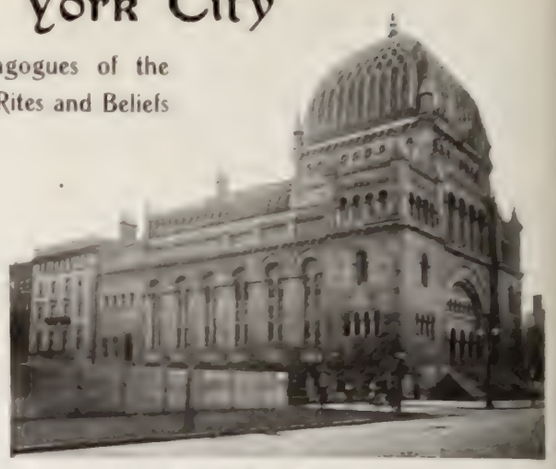
A correspondent of the New York Times gives a remarkable explanation of a phenomenon, which, he says, has puzzled the members of the exclusive circle of society in the city. It was the changed appearance of a lady who at the close of last season was looking aged and haggard, but has come back this season, after several months' absence, plump and blooming. Her friends scarcely knew her. The wrinkles, and lines radiating from the corners of the eyes had disappeared, and she looked younger by twenty years than when she left New York in the spring of 1898. With this improvement, however, there was a curious change of expression. Her face now resembles a wax image in its peculiar lack of animation. Its placidity is almost like that of a corpse or an image of Buddha. It has been learned through the indiscreet talking of her maid that she placed herself in the hands of a Swedish masseuse, who applied acids to her face. For ten days it was swathed in linen coverings and all nourishment was taken through a tube. At the close of that period the skin was removed, and there was an interval of treatment during which a new skin appeared. Then for several weeks the patient went through a system of massage. Twice daily the face was manipulated until there was a growth of the muscles and the hollows were filled. Then there was a treatment with cosmetics, and finally the finished article was produced, and the lady returned to her social circle in the world of fashion to startle her friends with her recovered juvenility. The suffering the lady went through to attain this result is said to have been severe, and it does not appear to have been satisfactory. According to the account, she does not appear to have regained her youthfuiness, but only the appearance of youth. This is a very dubious reward for so much pain and trouble. The Apostle's prescription is far better:

"For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day (II Cor. 4: 16).

Modern Judaism in New York City

Quaint Passover Ceremonies — the Synagogues of the City—How Reform has Affected Ancient Rites and Beliefs

TEMPLE EMANU-EL IN FIFTH AVENUE



TEMPLE BETH-EL IN FIFTH AVENUE

ONE of the most impressive evidences of the historical truth of the Bible is the festival which will be celebrated next Sunday in every Jewish home the world over. It is the festival of Pesach, or the Passover, which commemorates the deliverance of Israel from Egypt more than thirty centuries ago. The quaint ceremonies with which the Jew observes the festival in this year of grace have only to be compared with the directions given in the book of Exodus to show that it is no mere myth or legend which has survived so long a time and is perpetuated by annual observance. In spite of exile, in spite of persecution in many a land in the past, and of social obloquy in some lands to this day, Passover has not been forgotten; but every year the Jew has gathered his family and friends around his board and commemorated that weird night when the angel of the Lord was slaying the firstborn of Egypt, but passing over the houses where the blood-stained lintels of the doors told that a Hebrew family lived within. Like our own Independence Day, this festival is the birthday of the nation — the day on which the nation shook off its bondage and went forth a free though a suffering people.

PARENTAL BLESSING ON THE EVE OF ATONEMENT DAY

The celebration commences with the sunset of the thirteenth day of Nisan. Then the head of the Orthodox Jewish family lights a wax taper and makes a search of the house for leaven, for on Passover there must be neither leavened bread nor fermented liquor in the house. If any leaven is found (and there is generally some provided for the purpose), it is solemnly burned. At the Passover meal, the following articles must be placed on the table: three matzoth, or thin unleavened cakes, each wrapped in a napkin, so that they do not touch one another; a piece of lamb roasted over the fire; bitter herbs to be dipped in "charoseth," a compound of almonds, apples and other fruit emblematic of the lime and mortar used when the Israelites built treasure cities for Pharaoh (Ex. 1:11); a cup with salt water, a boiled egg unbroken, and four cups of wine.

At the appointed hour, the family gather around the table, and the prescribed prayers are read. One of the matzoth is broken, and then the youngest of the children, who has been taught, asks the meaning of the strange feast. This is to afford the head of the family an opportunity to explain the meaning of the symbols, and to relate the history of the Egyptian oppression and the miraculous deliverance. He begins: "My father was a wandering Aramean, and went down into Egypt with a few people, and sojourned there, few in number, and he became a nation," etc. Then a hymn is sung, and the wine is poured out. Two cups more are solemnly drunk at prescribed periods of the feast, and a specific blessing is said before and after each. Near the close of the meal, a cup is filled for the Prophet Elijah, and the door of the room is set open for the entrance of the harbinger of the Messiah. There is silence for a minute or two, as if in expectation of his coming. Then certain passages of Scripture are recited, and with the fourth cup, or "cup of blessing," the singing of Psalms, and a prayer for the rebuilding of Jerusalem, the solemn ceremony is brought to a conclusion.

Religious differences affect these household services as they do the services in the synagogues; but in the main features, the observance in all Jewish households is alike. There are three great divisions in the religious attitude of the Jewish community, and probably they are all more strikingly represented in New York than in any other American city. The Orthodox Jew clings to ancestral traditions, carefully observes the laws regulating diet, looks for the appearance of the Messiah, and expects to return to Palestine. The Conservative Jew admits changes in the synagogue worship, allows some parts of the service to be conducted in English, instead of in Hebrew, and recognizes the spiritual meaning of certain rites as being of more importance than their literal observance. The Reformer rejects the ancient traditions, is not scrupulous in the observance of the dietary laws, cherishes no desire to return to Palestine, and has no expectation of a personal Messiah.

A SYNAGOGUE CONGREGATION DISPERSING

INTERIOR OF SYNAGOGUE, SHOWING WOMEN'S GALLERIES

Synagogues representing every degree of difference in these divisions are to be found in New York. The synagogues in Hester, Eldridge, Chrystie, Norfolk and Pike Streets, pictures of which appear on these pages, are those of the Orthodox branch and there are many others; for the Jews of New York number about a quarter of a million and even those who have abandoned nearly every principle of Judaism, wish to attend the synagogues at some times, such as the day of Atonement, which occurs in the Fall. The more imposing houses of worship, such as Temple Emanu-el and Temple Beth-el, are of the reform school. The greater part of the service there is in English and the women sit in the same pews with the men, which is a shock to the Orthodox mind. In the Orthodox synagogues, the women must sit in the galleries behind curtains and only the males appear on the floor. The men wear their hats during the service, the covering of the head being, in their view, a mark of reverence. An innovation of the more radical Reformers which is just now causing considerable discussion, is that of causing the synagogue to be closed on Saturday—the Jewish Sabbath—and holding services on Sunday. The Reformers hold that as in America the Sunday is not a business day, the attendance on that day would be larger, as many Jews are in business on the Saturday and, therefore, as long as the synagogue is closed on Sunday, they get no religious teaching. Dr. Kohler of Temple Beth-el, and Dr. Wise of Cincinnati, are the leaders in this movement.

One of the most interesting scenes in the synagogue is a wedding ceremony. The ceremony usually begins about five in the evening, when the rabbi or assistant minister chants the Psalm of Thanksgiving. At its conclusion the officials walk in procession to the door to await the coming of the bride and bridegroom. On their arrival they return and take their places under the "Chuppah," a canopy of embroidered silk supported by a slender pole at each corner. The ritual is read or chanted, the bride and groom sip from a cup of consecrated wine and an address on the duties of matrimony is delivered by the chief rabbi. In the Orthodox synagogues, the rabbi recites the seven benedictions, and the bride and bridegroom, having drunk from a second cup of wine, the goblet is put on the floor, and the bridegroom crushes it with his foot, in token of his determination to crush the evils that might pollute the new life on which he is entering.

A WEDDING IN A JEWISH SYNAGOGUE

The feature of Jewish life which most impresses the Gentile observer is its charities. These are abundant, and are administered with the organizing skill characteristic of the race. Chief among them are the Mount Sinai Hospital and the Home for Aged and Infirm Hebrews. The mere names of other organizations controlled by the Board of United Hebrew Charities would fill a large space. Their beneficent effect is seen the scarcity of Hebrew beggars on the streets, while the results of parental training in the home and the religious teaching in the schools renders the Hebrew physiognomy a rare appearance in our courts and prisons.

It is a remkarable fact that there is none of the antipathy between the Jewish religious schools which often exists between the Christian sects. While the Reformed Jew has no respect for the doctrines and practices and prejudices of the Orthodox Jew, he has none but the most kindly feeling for the man, himself. The great bulk of the vast sum, subscribed in New York for the support of the Hebrew charities, comes from the Reformed school, while the beneficiaries are nearly all of the Orthodox school. No needy Jew commends himself to the managers of these charities, or advances his interests by renouncing the traditions of his race. The Russian Jew, who is generally ultra orthodox, sometimes fears that when he comes to America he will be expected to adopt the tenets of the Reformed school, in order to secure the assistance of his wealthy brethren, but he learns that no such sacrifice is required of him, and that his observances are freely tolerated by those who have abjured them.

"Little Fourth-Comer"

The Kidnapped China Boy of Amoy Who Was Restored to His Home Through Prayer

IN the following letter from Rev. Dr. Talmage's niece, a missionary in Amoy, China, a wonderful story of child experience and prevailing prayer is related which cannot fail to interest our Home Circle readers:

"Would you like to hear about a small mite of a boy of three who was stolen, and how he was found again because, wee though he was, he prayed?

"The child I am going to tell you about is the son of Mr. Tan, who lives in the city of Chin-chin, about sixty miles from Amoy, China. As soon as the child was stolen, Mr. Tan's pastor wrote a notice telling of the loss of the child and describing his appearance. This notice he sent here to be put in the Chinese Church paper. The paper had gone to press, but the editor hurried down to the printer's and was just in time to take out the last article of the paper and in its place insert the pastor's notice of the missing child. It read much as follows:

"'There is a brother member of my [illegible] named Kit Tan, who lives in Chin-chin City, who has a small son four years old whose name is Fourth-comer (probably so named because he is the fourth child). His head is shaped like a mud fish. In the middle of his forehead are little indentation scars left by boils. On his right arm are four vaccination marks, and on his instep are scars. On the top of his head is a little queue. He wore a new blue flowered jacket and green trousers. At three o'clock in the afternoon of the twelfth day of the tenth moon, he went out of the house to play, and at five he could not be found anywhere. He certainly has been carried off by some evil person. This person may change the child's clothes and queue, but the marks on the body will be difficult to efface. I beseech the whole body of brethren and sisters that if any one knows or hears of any one near or far who has bought a son, that he or she will at once investigate the matter, and if the above traces are found that a letter may be quickly sent to me so that I can at once inform the parents. That all the church members may imitate the heart of Christ, rejoicing and sorrowing together, and that the child may not fall into the hands of the world and the devil is my heart's desire.'

"About this time a heathen family in Amoy (one of bad reputation), bought a little boy for one hundred and sixty dollars. A Christian neighbor, after reading the notice in the church paper, saw the child, and thought his appearance corresponded with the description. Word was sent to the pastor, who, with Mr. Tan, at once came down to Amoy. The father watched for the child secretly; for, had the family known there was danger of losing the boy, they would have hid or disposed of him in some way. The child had been with them a month and they had grown very fond of him, beside which they had spent one hundred and sixty dollars for him. This custom is common in China.

"Before Mr. Tan had a chance of seeing the child, he heard that the family along with the neighbors were much interested in what they thought was a very curious thing about the small boy. This was that at meal times he shut his eyes and repeated a prayer before eating, saying to the others, 'I worship God.' When Mr. Tan heard this, he felt sure the child was his.

"The family were preparing to make a great feast for their adopted son, according to Chinese custom, and he was taken to a barber's shop to have his head shaved for the occasion. The father followed. The boy at once recognized and called to him. The father then seized him and carried him off. He was immediately pursued by men from the shop, who, thinking he was a child-stealer, beat him and took away the child. The matter was at once brought before the mandarin. Mr. Tan was kept in custody and the child sent for.

"When the little boy was taken away, the other children in the house said, sadly: "Now we will have no one to liam Siong-te (literally 'repeat God') to us."

MR. TAN AND HIS LITTLE SON, WHO WAS KIDNAPPED

"The child, on seeing his father again, at once ran to him. The mandarin decided the case in Mr. Tan's favor. So the father received back his little son again, because he trusted in God, and God heard the prayers of the father, of his little child, and of the church. It was prayer that saved the child. When Mr. Tan took home his boy, the heathen neighbors thought the story very wonderful, and said, 'The God you worship must be a very powerful God.'"

Loubet's Wife and Mother

The mother of the President of France lives in an old farmhouse in the department of the Drome, where her son was born. When he visits her, he eats dishes flavored with garlic, a luxury that he must deny himself in the Palace of the Elysee. Madame Loubet is eighty, manages the farm and is very wealthy, [illegible]. She has never been to Paris, nor dislikes her head [illegible] Loubet when a boy, wanted to be a farmer, but his father, seeing his fondness for books, put him in training to be a lawyer. M. Loubet is kindly, good-natured, fond of music and classical literature, cares nothing about the fit of his clothes or the cut of his beard, has no taste for display, loves the meadows of Marsanne better than the boulevards of Paris. Madame, his wife, is like her husband, a provincial; she loves the country and a simple life better than the grandeur of the Elysee. She sometimes grumbles over the fact that Loubet is President of France, and that he is pestered by office-seekers.

The City Garden

Count Tolstoi, the great Russian writer and philanthropist, says that the Biblical command, "In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat thy bread," should be accepted literally, and that every one should by actual manual labor make bread enough to eat: that every one is healthier, happier, and better for spending with nature time and labor enough for that purpose. The good Count's conclusion is not always [illegible] city people are so situated, many of them, that they hardly see mother earth's brown breast for the paving of streets and courts. But if you have only a "pocket handkerchief of a back-yard," go out and potter about in it an hour or two each day. Watch things come up; [illegible] keep weeds out. [illegible] familiar with mother earth. And let the children help you. It will help them in many ways.

Pussy's Queer Baby

An owl and a cat are queer companions, but a story, vouched for as strictly true, is of a baby owl, a gray, fluffy little fellow, which fell into the hands of a kindly plumber, and was turned over by its captor to the care of a cat. This cat the year before had accepted a young squirrel in the place of her dead kitten. She stroked the forlorn owlet with her tongue after considering him awhile, and he, being frightened, flattened his feathers close to his body, so that he covered up his eyes and beak and took on a resemblance to a gray kitten, at the same time uttering a strange little sound which pussy perhaps misconstrued into a purr. At any rate she took him into her heart, adopted him, encouraged him to eat, and brought him mice and ground moles, for which he had as great a fancy as if he had been a cat. When last heard from, the pair were living together in happy fellowship.

Little Things

One little act of kindness done,
One little kind word spoken
Has power to make a thrill of joy
E'en in a heart that's broken.
Then let us watch these little things,
And so regard each other
That not a word or look or tone
Shall wound a friend or brother.

Saved Her Childhood's Toys

NEAR Annapolis, Ind., there lives a lady [illegible] years old, Mrs. Elizabeth A. Seymour Coffin, who has kept almost everything that was given her from childhood's days, including toys and innumerable collections of varied play things and [illegible] baby dress and [illegible] shoes and stockings. She has a library of books that date back hundreds of years — indeed [illegible] them so old [illegible] she keeps them wrapped in muslin and cloth to prevent them crumbling to dust. One book is a Testament, dated 1792, given to her by Naomi Hale, of Boston, sister of Nathan Hale.

She has a tea-pot, ornamented with characters of the flood, which was used by the Revolutionary soldiers. A good-sized room is set apart as her museum; and here you find shells and pebbles from every ocean, and flowers and plumage of birds from every clime. The walls are hung with paintings by her own hand, some of them scenes from recollection of her childhood's home.

She gives much time, when household duties are done, to painting wild roses of the West and water-lilies. Her eyesight is remarkable, her nerves steady, and she spends long evenings with her pencil and brush. She is neat with the needle, and delights in embroidery, tracing her own designs. She is an intelligent conversationalist and a constant reader. None of her faculties are impaired. She can entertain one right royally with past history. She has a way of looking on the bright side of life, and always has a good word and smile for everybody. She was born in Berkshire, Mass., near the old historic town of Great Barrington, where in 1774 occurred the first open resistance to British rule. She was baptized by the eminent divine, Rev. David Fields, father of Cyrus, the Chief Justice, and of Rev. Henry and Jonathan Edwards Fields. Her parents were wealthy; she received a good education, was thrown with prominent people, and her reminiscences are interesting.

Wilhelmina and Woman's Work

A most interesting, and for Holland, unique exhibition, was opened at the Hague in connection with Wilhelmina's inauguration, and was viewed with sympathetic interest by her. "Women and their Work" is the name borne by this exhibit, which it is said may be of large results. It was planned and carried out in all its details, by Dutchwomen, the woman editor of a Dutch magazine being leader. The carrying and wheeling of burnt and moulded bricks is done by women in Holland, and a woman sculptor showed this in a piece of statuary. There were pictures showing fish-wives and women engaged in oyster culture; and there was a real woman shoemaker making shoes and providing thereby for her babies. A Frisian straw-mat-plaiter sat busy at her trade in a cozy little kitchen. A lot of rosy, merry lassies were engaged in weaving the beautiful carpets for which Holland is famous, their peculiar methods of pulling the levers resembling vigorous and graceful gymnastics. Diamond cutting was illustrated and numberless forms of industry. There was also a Congress of Mothers, at which mothers and educators met and talked over music, nursing, physical culture, education, work, morals, religion, etc. This was one of the most interesting and best patronized features of the inauguration week. The results of the exhibition are beginning to show in many ways that the young queen's advent is to have a marked influence it is believed on the work of Dutchwomen.

CHAPTER XXIII

New Quarters

SOME hard thinking was done by John Randolph during the weeks which followed Richard Trueman's death. It was no light task which he had so cheerfully imposed upon himself. The boy was constitutionally delicate and fretted so constantly after his father that his health began to suffer, and it grew to be a very pale face which welcomed John with a smile when he returned from the office. The style of living was bad for him. He was alone all day except for an occasional visit from the good-natured German woman who kept their rooms, and, although he was a voracious reader of children's books, the doctor had forbidden all thought of study for a year, even had there been a school near enough for him to attend, where John would have been willing to send him. He ought to be where the air was pure and the surroundings cheerful. John would have preferred to put up with the discomfort of his present quarters and lay by the addition to his salary towards the more speedy realization of his day-dream, of some day studying medicine, but John Randolph had never found much time to think of himself: there were always so many other people in the world to be attended to.

"Dick, my boy," he said cheerily one evening after they had finished what he pronounced a sumptuous repast, "I have a presentiment that this month will witness a turning point in our career. I believe you and I are going to become suburbanites."

The boy's sad eyes grew wide with wonder.

"What do you mean, John?"

"Well, you see, Dick True, it is this way. As soon as I get my degree—earn the right to put M. D. after my name, you know—I am going to take two rubber bags, fill one with sunshine and one with pure air, full of the scent of rose leaves and clover and strawberries—ah! Dick, you'd like to smell that, wouldn't you?—and carry one in each pocket, then when when my patients come to me for advice, the first dose I shall give them will be out of my rubber bags, and in nine cases out of ten I believe they'll get better without any drugs at all. You see, Dick True, the trouble is our Father has given us a whole world full of air and sunlight to be happy in, and we poison the air with smoke and shut ourselves away from the sunshine in boxes of brick and mortar, only letting a stray beam come in occasionally through slits in the walls which we call windows. So you see, Dick True, as it is a poor doctor who is afraid of his own medicine, I am going to prescribe it first of all for ourselves, and we will go where unadulterated oxygen may be had for the smelling and we can draw in sunshine with every breath."

The pale face brightened. "Oh, that will be lovely! I do get so tired of these old streets. But, John, why do you keep calling me Dick True all the time?"

John laughed. "Just to remind you that you must be a true boy before you can really be a True-man, Dick. I want you to be in the best company. Jesus Christ is the truth, you know, Dick."

"Jesus Christ," repeated the boy thoughtfully. "I wish I knew him, John, as well as you do."

"If you love, you will know," said John with the light which the boy loved to watch creeping into his eyes. "He is the best Friend we will ever have Dick, you and I."

Day after day John searched the papers in vain until it seemed as if a suburban residence was the one thing in life unattainable. But the long lane of disappointment had its turning at length, and he hurried home to Dick, paper in hand.

"Dick, Dick True, we've found it at last! Listen:

"Two gentlemen can be pleasanly accommodated at 'The Willows'. Address, Miss Chillingworth, University P. O. Box 123."

"The University Post Office is just near the college, you know, Dick, so it is in a good location. Two gentlemen—that means you and me, Dick; and 'The Willows' means running brooks—or ought to, if they are any sort of respecta ble trees."

The boy clapped his hands. "When can we go, John?" John laughed. "Not so fast, Dick? There may be other gentlemen in Marlborough on the lookout for a suburban residence."

"But John," said the boy ruefully, "we're not gentlemen. You don't wear a silk hat, you know, and I have no gentleman's clothes."

"Oh ho! Dick, so you're pining for frills, eh? Well, if it will make you feel more comfortable we'll go down to Stewart's and get fitted out to your satisfaction. But don't forget that you can be a gentleman in homespun as well as broadcloth, Dick. Real diamonds don't need to borrow any lustre from their setting—only the paste do that."

The next afternoon John strode along in the direction of "The Willows" to the accompaniment of a merry whistle. It did him good to get out into the open country once more, and he felt sure it would be worth a king's ransom to Dick: but when he came in sight of the house he hesitated. There must be some mistake. This was not the sort of house to open its doors to boarders. "Poor Dick," he soliloquized, "no wonder you felt a premonitory sense of the fitness of frills! Well, I'll go and enquire. They can only say 'No,' and that won't annihilate me."

He was ushered into the presence of Miss Diana Chillingworth, the owner of "The Willows." On the instant he forgot everything but Miss Diana herself. Before he realized what he was doing, he had explained the reason of his seeking a suburban home, and, drawn on by her gentle sympathy, was telling her the story of his life. Miss Diana had a way of compelling confidence, and the people who gave it to her never afterwards regretted the gift. With the straightforwardness, which was a part of his nature, he told his story. It never occurred to him that there was anything peculiar about it, yet when he had finished there were tears in his listener's eyes.

When at length he rose to go, everything was settled between them. John's eyes wandered round the room and then rested again with a curious sense of pleasure upon Miss Diana's face.

"I cannot begin to thank you," he said gratefully, "for allowing us to come here. I never dared to hope that my poor little Dick would have such an education as this home will be to him, but I feel sure you will learn to like Dick True."

Miss Diana held out hand with a smile. "I think I shall like you as well as Dick," she said.

So it proved. It was some weeks before John learned why Miss Diana Chillingworth wished to take boarders. But confidence begets confidence and one evening, about three months after John and Dick had settled at "The Willows," Miss Diana told him her story. She had inherited the pretty home from her father, whose books and pictures she cherished as her most precious possessions. She had also inherited from him a sum of money, the interest of which enabled her to live in comfort and do a good deal of charitable work. But the company in which her little fortune was invested had failed, and more than half her income was swept away. Something had to be done to eke out the remainder; for she could not bear the idea of selling "The Willows" and going to live in the city, as her lawyer advised. Finally, after many talks with Unavella, her valued old servant, she decided to advertise for two boarders. She and Unavella did not need much to live upon and they could be more economical than of yore. So the advertisement was inserted that brought John Randolph and his young charge to "The Willows."

The arrangement was mutually agreeable, and Unavella, who had proposed the scheme was delighted. CHAPTER XXII

The Secret of Rest

Marion entered Evadne's room one glorious winter's morning and threw herself on the lounge beside her cousin with a sigh.

"I don't see how you do it!" she exclaimed.

"Do what?" asked Evadne.

"Why, keep so pleasant with Isabelle. She works me up to the last pitch of endurance, until I feel sometimes as if I should go wild. It is no use saying anything, mamma always takes her side, you know, but she does aggravate me so! Even her movements irritate me—just the way she shakes her head and curls her lip, she is so self-satisfied. She thinks no one else knows anything. It must be a puzzle to her how the world ever got along before she came into it, and what it will do when she leaves is a mystery!"

"She is good discipline," said Evadne.

Marion gave her an impetuous hug. "You dear Evadne! I believe you take us all as that! But I don't think the rest of us can be quite as trying as Isabelle. She does seem to delight in saying such horrid things. She was abominably rude to you this morning at breakfast, and yet you were just as polite as ever. I couldn't have done it. I should have sulked for a week. I know you feel it, for I see your lips quiver—you are as susceptible to a rude touch as a sensitive plant—but it is beautiful to be able to keep sweet outside."

"You mean to be kept, Marion," said Evadne, softly, "by the power of God. I have no strength of my own."

Marion sighed dismally.

"Oh, dear! I don't know what I mean except that I'm a failure. It is no wonder Louis thinks Christianity is a humbug, though he must confess there is something in it when he looks at you. You are so different, Evadne! I should think Isabelle would be ashamed of herself, for I believe half the time she says things on purpose to provoke you. She doesn't seem to get much comfort out of it, anyway. I never saw such a discontented mortal. Don't you think it is wicked for people to grumble the way she does, Evadne? It is growing on her, too: she finds fault with everything—even the snow came in for a share of her disapprobation this morning, because it would spoil the skating, as if the Lord had no other plans to further than just to give her an afternoon's amusement! She is so self-centred!"

Evadne looked out at the street, where the freshly fallen snow had spread a dazzling carpet of virgin white.

"He is going to let me give an afternoon's amusement to Gretchen and little Hans," she said. "Uncle Lawrence has promised me the sleigh and I am going to take them to the Park. Won't it be beautiful to see them enjoy it! Hans has never seen the trees after a snowstorm."

"That is you all over, Evadne! It is always other people's pleasure, while I think of my own! Oh, dear! I seem to do nothing but get savage and then sigh over it. I know it is dreadful to talk about my own sister as I have been doing—they say you ought to hide the faults of your relations—but it is only to you, you know. Do you suppose there is any hope for me, Evadne?" she asked, disconsolately.

Evadne drew her head down until it was on a level with her own. "Let Christ teach you to love, dear," she whispered, "then, 'charity will cover the multitude of sins.'" She opened the book she had been reading when her cousin entered and took from it a newspaper clipping. "Read this," she said. "Aunt Marthe sent it in her last letter. If we follow its teachings I think all the fret and worry will go out of our lives for good."

And Marion read: "To step out of self-life into Christ-life, to lie still and let him lift you out of it, to fold your hands close and hide your face upon the hem of his robe, to let him lay his cooling, soothing, healing hands upon your soul, and draw all the hurry and fever away, to realize that you are not a mighty messenger, an important worker of his, full of care and responsibility, but only a little child with a father's gentle bidding to heed and fulfill, to lay your busy plans and ambitions confidently in his hands, as the child brings its broken toys at its mother's call: to live in him and for him, to be a clear and facile medium for his life-tide to shine and glow through—this is consecration and this is rest."

The Mastery of the Tongue

Amelia Barr Discusses the Evil Habit of Gossip and Tale-Bearing Prevalent Among Both Sexes

IF we wish to diminish our own happiness, one of the best of ways is to set about to spoil that of our neighbors. Some persons are naturally spiteful. They say unpleasant things for the mere pleasure of saying them. They like to probe a wound, to give pain, in order to see how a human being behaves under such free handling. They are spiteful on purpose. They delight in drawing mean portraits and in picking holes in good actions, and they are glad to hear of a neighbor's misfortune.

But such a temper soon sets a mark on its possessor's face—a mark that says plainly, "Beware!" For spite broods and molds the features into sympathy with the inner mind, and gives a malevolent cast to the eyes and lips. Novelists are too apt to represent conversation as being made bright and sparkling by spiteful remarks. But this is a libel on humanity, the fact being that a spiteful person soon suffers a social ostracism. Courtesy cannot be done without, whatever novelists say. If Dr. Johnson lived to-day, his great genius would not excuse his sharp tongue.

Another crime of the tongue is tale-bearing, especially the habit of repeating to one dear friend the things said by another dear friend. Of course no character can be discussed without much being said that no praise is compensation for. "Ifs" and "buts" curdle our faint praise, and hints of frailties take all the savor and sparkle out of our guarded commendations. Analysis is a cold, hard process, and by the time we have got through analyzing the finest character, very little is left to admire. We are all guilty in this matter. Which of us does not thus discuss our friends? And which of us is not annoyed when we find that we ourselves have been the subjects of such discussion?

However reluctantly, we must admit that in this sin women are the great transgressors. They are good at inventing an evil report, and they are very good at repeating it. As somebody says, they blab, as men whistle, for want of thought. Such women may perhaps be helped by the prayer of a little girl of six years old, who was, in spite of her youth, conscious of this natural fault: "Bless my dear papa and mamma, and help me to cure my tell-tale-tit-ness."

This bad habit of gossip and of tale-bearing is one out of which the world does not grow. The increase of civilization, the march of intellect, the more personal character of our Christianity, have only added new forms and varieties to its methods and manners. In spite of sermons, in spite of criticism and evil results, it holds its ground; even among people who would call dancing an immorality; and the theatre a deadly sin. In the church itself, it is an unconquerable crime; and one many ministers find it hard to fight against. Many a time, and many a time again, gossip and tale-bearing have split congregations in two, and negatived all the good that the most clear and honest-hearted service could render. In the apostle's day, as well as at the present time, there were idle men and women going about dropping slander as they went; for though women are the chief offenders, men are not blameless.

If we love, we shall not readily see faults; we shall remember that every one has them. Suppose we all resented petty slights, and passing tempers, and hasty rudenesses, and small selfishness, we should all find this world an intolerable dwelling-place. But Love makes allowances and excuses; it will not listen to that liar Suspicion, or that coward Doubt. It understands, because it sympathizes. It is a guilty conscience, and a sense that we, also, are transgressors that makes us hard on each other. But Christ is merciful, because he was without sin.

There is, also, a mighty adjunct to the conscious exercise of Good-Intent: it is the conscious exercise of Good-Restraint; the practice of compelling our tongues to say nothing at all, if they cannot say good, wise, and kind words. Then, if this admirable quality of Good-Restraint is added to the great quality of Good-Intent—of loving, because God loves; of blessing man, because no one can curse man and bless God; of speaking good, instead of evil; we shall assuredly gain that mastery over the Tongue, which bridles the whole body; which will add to life the crowning graces of Love and Friendship.

WEAK LUNGS

Dr. Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, has just published a new book on which explains all about Consumption, how it arises, the symptoms by which it is known, how it can be prevented, and the only treatment by which it can be cured. He also describes

"The Lungs and Their Diseases,"

THIS BOOK is of such great importance and interest to all who have weak lungs or are threatened with any form of lung disease that it has been decided to issue an edition of 50,000 copies in paper covers for free distribution. Dr. Robert Hunter is the oldest Lung Specialist of this country, and acknowledged throughout the world as the greatest living authority on all diseases of the breathing organs.

From the New York Herald: "It seems after many disappointments and false rumors of the cures for consumption, that the treatment as discovered and practiced by Dr. Robert Hunter, 117 West 45th St., New York, has accomplished results so satisfactory that this dread disease need no longer be classed among the incurable."

From the New York Sun: "Dr. Hunter's recent book on Consumption and its wonderful cures that have been reported, effectually remove all doubt as to the curability of this dread disease."

A Prayer for Divine Compassion Country Girls in the City—Health as Capital, etc.

FOR any bowed beneath the cross
In lonely agony,
This day we lift, oh! Lamb of God,
Our earnest prayer to thee,
For all who tread with bleeding feet
The steep and stony way.
Oh! blessed Saviour, we entreat
Thy strength to be their stay.

For widowed wives and orphaned babes
Alone and like to die,
This day we crave, oh! gentle Christ,
Thy watch-care from on high.
For all whose anguished eyes implore
A gleam of hope Divine,
Who see no friendly open door,
Low, on their darkness shine.

For all who bear a shameful cross
Up any Calvary,
Oh! pitying Saviour, Lamb of God,
We send our cry to thee.
For mothers spent with grief and dread,
O'er children gone astray,
Whose living trouble bows the head,
Oh, comfort such we pray.

For those whose cup was never full;
Whose lot was ever hard,
Whose empty sky by flaming light
Of joy was never starred;
For breaking heart and aching brow,
For long and desperate pain,
In sweet compassion hasten now,
Dear Christ, return again.

Thou, who did'st fainting drag the Cross
Up Calvary's mournful hill;
Thou, God! to us mere mortal men,
Stoop low in mercy still;
Rough-hewn and heavy was Thy Cross,
Thou, yet the Mighty One;
And weak are we, through pang and loss,
Who breathe "Thy will be done."

The shadows gather thick and cold,
The noon is as the night,
The huddling birds forget their songs,
Wan shapes walk, thin and white;
God-man, triumphant on thy Cross,
Behold us racked on ours;
Christ look on us; refine our dross,
Revive our wasting powers!

I AM often asked by clever and ambitious young women if they may not safely come from their homes in the country to pursue some branch of art or science in a great city, trusting to Providence to find enough employment, when once there, to pay their way. Of course, the thing might be done by some persons, but it is not a step I can advise. To come to a big town, full of strangers, without any money, with no resources behind you, is a very foolish proceeding fraught with untold risks. The sad and bitter and terrible stories which I know would make any prudent young woman hesitate could she hear them. I remember one case in which a well-educated girl, refined and beautiful, losing the ill-paid place she was at first able to secure, actually spent five nights out of doors, creeping from place to place in open parks, without shelter, until in very desperation she went to a friend of mine, a benevolent and motherly woman, who advanced the money to take her back to her friends. Organizations do all that they can. The Young Women's Christian Association is a very haven of safety, but with all that is done, the case of a girl, without friends or protectors or funds in a strange city is very pitiful. Where a girl feels a strong desire and an inward call to study for a profession, she should, before she leaves her home, be assured of the means of a livelihood. Often her home people or her church can in some way assist her, or she can secure a scholarship and so have teaching fees remitted, but she should never leave home without some money. The case of a penniless young man is sufficiently trying; that of a woman is a hundred times worse. Few women, let me say, are strong enough to take a place as companion or nursery governess, and fulfil its duties, studying at the same time, nor, in most instances, can the hours for such double work be conveniently arranged.

Granting a little money, and a large amount of pluck and perseverance, the bright young woman who seeks a living-chance in a city will probably not fail in her attempt.

N. I. S. For the position of which you speak, you would need as a primary requisite excellent health. An invalid could not give satisfaction, your health may improve however. Can you not do something at home which will bring you in a little regular income? Is there a woman's exchange near you? If so, can you not become a consignor to that? Your case interests me, but I am too far off to give you any really practical assistance.

The Valdes Life Trail

A Traveler's Experience Among the Gold Hunters and the Lesson He Learned

A FEW months ago a member of a Christian organization made a picture for this journal of a band of miners whom he accompanied to the mining regions of Alaska by way of the Valdes Trail. The picture was taken immediately after the glacier on the summit of the pass had been surmounted. The forlorn band had reached the Valdes Valley on their return to the regions of repose and civilization. They had been detained many days on the summit by the irresistible power of the driven snow. When the wind calmed they renewed their terrible battle with the elements, and in a short time reached the tranquil valley where they were shown in the picture. The artist described the change from the glacier to the valley as a literal passage from a death trail to an Eden. In the glacier the only repose was in the sleep of death. Fortunately, none of the band met that fate, but many others took their last sleep there. The birds were singing merrily in the leafy trees, and the vale was covered with a robe of flowers, brighter and a thousand times more beautiful to them than the reflected sunlight upon the glacier. The "golden ore" was not for them, and they were homeward bound, poorer but wiser men. The faces of the members of the organization were the only ones that showed any signs of animation, called out by the cheering scene. They prospected for the gold that could be delved out of a grateful heart, and the value of their treasure was great indeed.

As I viewed the peaceful scene I could but think how like this trail is the Valdes Trail of life. The men who were portrayed in that picture were safe, though discouraged. Not so with a poor boy in another company, who was following his father through that ice-bound region. Exhausted and frozen, he sank down in the snow, and, removing part of his garments, handed them to his father and begged him to save himself, but he must die there. The father reached the valley, but, being terribly frozen, suffered agonies of pain more terrible than death.

The trail of life is not one attended with unlimited flowers of happiness to all. Many, like the poor freezing boy, lie down in the last sleep in the glacier of trial and disappointment.

But there are many who avoid the glacier of life, or else they remain in the flowery section of the Valdes. They "eat the bread that perisheth not;" they drink of the living water; they seek that which is better than gold.

How peaceful is the Valdes! They may totter under the weight of years and infirmity, but their sunset wears the peacefulness of the autumn sunset of hope. Their physical strength may be broken, but their hearts and spirits are bounding onward to greet him who said: "Come unto me all ye that are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." A. S. YOUNG.

A Wonderful Remedy Discovered For the Cure of

CATARRH AND DEAFNESS

Deaf Ears Unstopped — Headache Banished, Eyes, Nose, Throat, Lungs and Stomach Freed From Disease.

"After being deaf for five years, one box of your Catarrh Cure cured me."

The above was written to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son by Mr. Paul Rupert, of Saltillo, Pa., and is only one out of hundreds of similar letters. The remedy is applied in the form of a medicated smoke-vapor inhaled from a pipe. By a simple process, which we explain in the directions accompanying the remedy, the medicine is made to enter the middle ear and every passage and cavity in the head, removing the disease from every affected part.

If you wish a sample and full particulars, testimonials, etc., write at once to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

We have put Slayton's Electric Switch Glass Bed Casters to the severest possible test—that of sending them out on a trial before asking payment. Thousands of sets have been sold, and every one after proving its merit. They show great power over rheumatism, sleeplessness, pains in muscles and bones, neuralgia, cramps, weakness of internal organs, and lessened vitality.

Slayton's Electric Switch Glass Casters are the application of the famous Dr. Brown-Sequard's teaching that these ills arose from an excessive flow of electricity from the body to the earth. They offer the only means of stopping or regulating this weakening loss. They are daily doing great good to sufferers. Is it worth your while to try them?

THE SLAYTON ELECTRIC CASTER CO.

Gentlemen:—I have been benefited by your Casters. I am better than I have been for six months. Enclosed $2 to pay for them. Yours, JOHN A. CHATTEN.

AVON LAKE, O., Feb. 4th, 1899.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed $2 for Casters. My wife had had a lame back for six months or more. After sleeping on the bed fitted with the Casters, three nights, it all disappeared, and she hasn't felt any since. I will send for more soon, and sell them for you. Yours, J. M. CONKLIN.

WESTBORO, MASS., Feb. 18th, 1899.

Gentlemen:—The Casters came all right. I certainly have felt better. I was recovering from an attack of the Grippe, and did not feel very strong, but soon felt as if my energies had been revived, and the tired feeling is gone. Please send another set of the Casters for my sister. MRS. A. E. MARSH.

CLAYTON, MICH., Nov. 19th, 1898.

THE SLAYTON ELECTRIC CASTER CO., Tecumseh, Mich., A. W. SLAYTON, Mgr.

Dear Sir:—About four weeks ago I bought a set of your Electric Casters. I had not slept a night for two months on account of rheumatism. The first night I had them I slept good, and have ever since. Would recommend them to any one that is troubled with rheumatism. Yours, GEORGE LEFFERTS.

OXFORD, PENN., Dec. 8th, 1898.

THE SLAYTON ELECTRIC CASTER CO.

Gentlemen:—I saw your ad. in The Literary Digest, sent for your rollers and put them under my wife's bed without her knowledge. The next morning she reported having enjoyed the best night's sleep for many weeks. She has continued to be benefited. Cannot return them, so send you the money herewith enclosed. Yours. REV. F. B. HARVEY.

RIDGEWAY, MICH., Dec. 9th, 1898.

THE SLAYTON ELECTRIC CASTER CO.

Gentlemen:—I am happy to say that your Casters have completely cured me of my neuralgia, which I had had some six weeks. The fourth night I had them on my bed it all left me, and I am now completely cured of the neuralgia and headache. I do hope they will help others as they have helped me. Truly yours, J. W. BAKER.

TIPTON, MICH., Nov. 24th, 1898.

THE SLAYTON ELECTRIC CASTER CO., Tecumseh, Mich., A. W. SLAYTON, Mgr.

Dear Comrade:—It is with pleasure that I recommend the Casters. They are worth more than their weight in gold to me. I have tried them and know that they have helped me, and I have been helpless for three months at a time, and had to be lifted from the bed to the chair and from the chair to the bed, and I can say now that I haven't felt any rheumatism since I tried your Casters. Yours truly, D. J. PRESTON.

FREE TRIAL FOR ONE WEEK. We will gladly send anyone mentioning this paper a set of Slayton's Electric Switch Glass Casters on receipt of 17c. for postage. Try them for one week according to directions. If they do not help you send them back by mail and no charge will be made. If they do help you, send us $2.00 in full payment. We make this offer because we can trust the readers of this paper, and because we know the great self-proving power of our treatment. In ordering be sure to mention whether for metal or wooden bedsteads.

Birthday of Hope

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for Apr. 2. I. Peter 1 : 1-9

HOW many of us would account the promise of immortality a boon, if it meant only the continuance of the present life? It is conceivable that to many it would be very tiresome to go on living the same life of trial and weariness and pain and trouble. The time comes to many aged people when death is welcome and is even desired. It is not this that the Apostle describes as a living hope. Christ's resurrection, which, he says, produces this hope, is not of this character. Paul longed to know the power of it, not for existence, but for life. Nor does it beget the hope of another life beyond the grave, which might be as burdensome and troubled as this life often is. The life which Peter says is begotten by the resurrection of Christ is a new and present life which will never end. It is a life implanted now, by regeneration, a new birth; a life which is to be lived now and will go on developing and maturing until when the body is sloughed off it will fructify and expand under the new conditions. The new life is the life of new men. In some countries, as in Madagascar, it is the custom to place annually in a tomb the dainties that the dead loved during life, and much of our own thinking runs on a similar principle. It is not the life of the body that is renewed after death; it is the eternal life implanted in the soul that goes on living when the body is laid in the grave. This is the living hope which Christ's resurrection begets.

Christ emphasized this fact with his most impressive utterances. The man who believeth, he said, hath, not will have, eternal life. He has it in possession. Feeble as the spark may seem, covered and beclouded as it often is by the vigor of the life of the flesh, it is there, and the death of the body will not extinguish it. It is like Christ's own life, and therefore he said, "Because I live, ye shall live also." That kind of life never dies. It may exist alone; it may abide in a new habitation; but it cannot die. It passes through the death of the body unharmed and goes on a living entity into the ages. On this Easter day we celebrate the beginning of the only specimen of that postmortem life on which men have ever gazed. "I am he that liveth and was dead," he said to John in Patmos. It was not a new life, it was that glorious, beneficent life that he lived in the flesh going on in new conditions. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," said the same apostle, "but we know that we shall be like him." To get firm hold of this truth, to realize it and to let it permeate our being is to know the power of his resurrection.

A GODSEND TO ALL HUMANITY

Invention of An Ohioan That Promotes Health, Strength and Beauty by Nature's Method, and Relieves Without Drugs, All Nervous Diseases, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Kidney Troubles, Weakness and the Most Obstinate Diseases

Those Who Have Used It Declare It To Be the Most Remarkable Invigorant Ever Produced for Man, Woman or Child

An inventive genius, of Cincinnati, Ohio, has patented and placed on the market a Bath Cabinet that is of great interest to the public, not only the sick and debilitated, but also those enjoying health.

It is a sealed compartment in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and with only the head outside, may have all the invigorating, cleansing and purifying effects of the most luxurious Turkish bath, hot vapor or medicated vapor baths at home for three cents each, with no possibility of taking cold, or in any way weakening the system.

IN OPERATION—DOOR CLOSED

FOLDED

A well-known physician of Topeka, Kansas, L. L. Eaton, M. D., gave up his practice to sell these Bath Cabinets, having found that they were all the invalids needed to get well and keep well, as they cured the most obstinate diseases often when his medicine failed, and we understand he has already sold over 600. Another physician of Chicago, Dr. John C. Wright, followed Dr. Eaton's example, moved West and devotes his entire time to selling these Cabinets. Many others are doing likewise.

Hundreds of remarkable letters have been written the inventors from those who have used the Cabinets, two of which referring to

RHEUMATISM AND LA GRIPPE

Will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated by rheumatism when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use of it entirely cured me, and have never had a twinge since. My doctor was much astonished and will recommend them." Mrs. S.S. Noteman, Hood River, Ore., writes that her neighbor used the Bath Cabinet for a severe case of la grippe and cured herself entirely in two days. Another neighbor cured eczema of many years standing and her little girl of measles. A. B. Strickland, Bloomington, Idaho, writes that the Bath Cabinet had done more good in one week than two years' doctoring, and entirely cured him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble and dropsy, while those who had been afflicted with disorders of stomach, heart, lungs, liver, blood and nerves seem to be its devotees. But the long sought for means of curing rheumatism, la grippe, Bright's disease, nervous prostration, sciatica and ultimate affections has been found. The

of [illegible] S. C. Rev. R. L. Paul, highly recommends this Cabinet, as also does Mrs. Kendricks, Princ. of Normal [illegible] Ind. [illegible] Eaton, of Topeka, Kansas, and [illegible] of the Cincinnati Conference, many prominent ministers and numerous other well-known people.

REDUCES OBESITY

It is important to know that the inventor guarantees [illegible] reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book issued by the makers. To

CURE BLOOD AND SKIN DISEASES

[illegible] and assist Nature to act, they would have a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

THE GREAT FEATURE

Of this Bath Cabinet is that it gives a Hot Vapor Bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands and forcing out by Nature's [illegible] matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart kidneys and the lungs and cause disease, debility and [illegible]. A Hot Vapor Bath opens the pores, [illegible] and makes you look and feel years younger. With the bath, if desired, is a

HEAD AND COMPLEXION STEAMER

In which the face and head are given the same vapor treatment as the body. This produces the most wonderful [illegible] eruptions and

CURES CATARRH AND ASTHMA

L. B. Westbrook, Newton, Ia., writes: "For 45 years I have had catarrh and asthma to such an extent that it had eaten out the portions between my nostrils. Drugs and doctors did me no good. The first vapor bath I took helped me and two weeks' use cured me entirely, and I have never had a twinge since."

WHATEVER WILL HASTEN PERSPIRATION

Every one knows, is beneficial. Turkish baths, massage, hot drinks, stimulants, hot foot baths are all known to be beneficial, but the best of these methods become crude and insignificant when compared to the [illegible] curative power of the Cabinet Bath referred to above. The Cabinet is know as the

QUAKER FOLDING THERMAL

Vapor Bath Cabinet was patented May 18, 1897, and is made only in Cincinnati, O. This Cabinet, we find, is durably made of best materials. It is entered and vacated by a door at the side. The Cabinet is air-tight, made of the best hygeinic water-proof cloth, rubber-lined, and a folding steel-plated frame supports it from top to bottom. The makers furnish a good alcohol stove with each Cabinet; also valuable [illegible] and formulas for medicated baths and ointments, as well as plain directions.

[illegible] is that it folds [illegible] small a space that it may be carried with trave[illegible] weighs but five pounds.

People don't need bath-rooms, as this Cabinet may be used in any room. Thus bathing [illegible] has been denied since the invention of the Cabinet, as it gives a far better bath for cleansing purposes than soap and water. For the sick room its advantages are at once apparent. The Cabinet is amply large enough for any person.

The Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only [illegible] article of its kind that will [illegible] years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user and the

MAKERS GUARANTEE RESULTS

They assert positively and their statements are backed by a [illegible] of testimony from persons of [illegible] that their Cabinet will cure [illegible] troubles and debility, clear the skin, purify the blood, cure rheumatism. They offer $50 reward for a case that [illegible] the [illegible] Copper Sweater, the [illegible] a grippe, [illegible] obesity, neuralgia, female [illegible] gout, sciatica, piles, dropsy, blood and skin disease, liver and kidney troubles. It will

CURE A HARD COLD

With one bath, and break up all symptoms of la grippe, [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] a [illegible] It [illegible]

CLEANSING AND INVIGORATING BATH

known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, but its great value lies in its marvelous power to draw out of the system the impurities that cause disease, and for this reason is really a godsend to all humanity.

HOW TO GET ONE

All readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease or are afflicted should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low, space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and curative properties. Write to the World Manufacturing Co., 81 World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their pamphlets and circulars describing this invention. The regular price of this Cabinet is $5. Head Steaming Attachment, if desired, $1 extra, and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much real genuine health, vigor and strength.

Write to-day for full information, or better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be deceived or disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money if not just as represented. They are reliable and responsible, and fill all orders as soon as received.

Don't fail to send for booklet, as it will prove very interesting reading.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to good agents, both men and women—upon request.

To Toplady's Memory

IN a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD there was printed a very remarkable photograph. It was a representation of the original rock, in Somerset County, England, which Augustus Montague Toplady immortalized in that sweetest of all modern Christian hymns—"Rock of Ages." In the cleft of that mighty cliff he had found shelter during a severe thunderstorm, and there the inspiration came to him which led him to pen the verses.

In the town of Broadhembury, England, a beautiful tablet has just been erected to Toplady's memory. The tablet, which is shown in the photograph, states that Rev.

THE TOPLADY MEMORIAL TABLET

Augustus Montague Toplady, B.A., was Vicar of Broadhembury from 1768 to 1778. He died on Aug. 11, 1778, in his 38th year. The tablet, expresses appreciation of the service he rendered to the Christian world, and places a high estimate on his "personal piety, brilliant gifts, sanctified learning, and uncompromising advocacy of the Gospel of the Sovereign Grace of God."

FORMULAE OF DR. SLOCUM

Crowning Discovery of the Century.

Do you cough?
Do your lungs pain you?
Is your throat sore and inflamed?
Do you spit up phlegm?
Does your head ache?
Is your appetite bad?
Are your lungs delicate?
Are you losing flesh?
Are you pale and thin?
Do you lack stamina?

These symptoms are proof that you have in your body the seeds of the most dangerous malady that has ever devastated the earth—consumption.

Consumption, the bane of those who have been brought up in the old-fashioned beliefs that this disease was hereditary, that it was fatal, that none could recover who were once firmly clasped in its relentless grip.

But now known to be curable, made so by the world-stirring discoveries of that man whose name has been given to this new system of treatment.

Now known to be preventable and curable by following and practicing his hygienic teachings.

The New System of treatment will cure you of consumption and of all diseases which can be traced back to weak lungs as a foundation.

It is not a drug system, but a system of germ destruction and body building.

Not guesswork, but science.

Not a step backward, but a stride out of the old ruts.

Made possible only by Pasteur's, Virchow's, Metchnikoff's and Slocum's latest discoveries in bacteriology, hygiene and therapeutics.

The system consists of Four Preparations, which act simultaneously, and supplement each other's curative action.

WRITE TO THE DOCTOR.

You are invited to test what this system will do for you, if you are sick, by writing for a FREE treatment to the Slocum Laboratories, New York City.

Send your name and full address to Dr. T. A. Slocum, 98 Pine St., New York, and the Four Free Preparations will be forwarded you with full directions for use in any case.

The system is a positive cure for lung consumption, that most insidious disease, and for lung troubles and disorders complicated by loss of flesh, coughs, catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, etc. Thin, pale weak people become fat and hearty.

The test is to try it.

When writing the Doctor, please tell him you read this article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Fordhook and Penrose "Combination" "Dollar Novelty Collection" for 1899.

Six New Plants and Seven Packets of Rare Seeds for $1.00.

"PENROSE" [illegible] to lovers of [illegible] plants, and FORDHOOK is to planters of seeds

As a novel feature for 1899 we offer this Special "COMBINATION" Collection of Six Superb New Plants and Seven Packets of Flower Seeds for One Dollar, which if purchased separately would cost more than double.

"ROSETTE." A Peerless Bedding Rose. [illegible] originated at the PENROSE NURSERIES, Now First Introduced. and as it is the first seedling sent out by MESSRS. ROBERT SCOTT & SON, we give their description: "For years past we have been impressed with the great usefulness of Clotilde Soupert as a garden rose, as it combines freedom of bloom, hardiness, and perfectly formed flowers. Desiring to increase this type we made more than one hundred crosses, using Clotilde Soupert as the seed parent; from these seedlings 'ROSETTE' is the best, and we feel sure will be a welcome addition to any garden. It is a cross between Clotilde Soupert and the crimson hybrid, Ulrich Brunner. Its growth is strong and vigorous, with light-green foliage. The flowers are very double and of medium to large size. Color is a deep pink, but the petals are bordered with rose. It is entirely hardy.—The flowers are perfectly formed, and so double that it is almost impossible to count the petals.—It is a constant bloomer.—All the blooms are produced singly on long stems, and therefore will be useful for cutting.—It has the rich fragrance of the Hybrid Perpetuals."—We control the entire stock, and "ROSETTE" cannot be purchased elsewhere. Desiring that all should give this Rose a trial, we have placed it in this "COMBINATION COLLECTION" and offer it separately at a very moderate price. 25 cts. each; 3 for 50 cts.; 7 for $1.00, by mail, postpaid.

Rose, Perle des Rouges
New French Polyantha. Growth is dwarf and compact, with perfectly double flowers of rich crimson [illegible] It is always in bloom and is likely to be hardy. 25 cts.

Geranium, Mad. Jaulen.
[illegible] offered for many years. It [illegible] regards form and color. The plants are of dwarf growth and perfect bedders. Immense trusses of beautifully [illegible] a delicate pink bordered with white. Equally valuable for pot culture as for bedding. [illegible]

Canna,—Gloriosa.
[illegible]

Carnation,—Flora Hill.
[illegible] to date. The flower is of enormous size and rounded build; it is the most prolific [illegible]

Chrysanthemum,—Rose Owen.
The best early pink. It is a clean, neat grower with a perfect stem and bright, waxy foliage. The color is a clear, bright pink with a slight tracing of white. Form of flower perfect; large to extra large. 25 cts. each.

In New and Rare Seeds

this Dollar "Combination" Collection contains one packet each of—

GIANT WHITE BRANCHING COMET ASTER, described on page 110,—a half-size packet each of the new FREE-FLOWERING BEDDING BEGONIAS, [illegible] page [illegible] of PENROSE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1899, and the superb mixture of NEW GIANT-FLOWERED GLOXINIAS, illustrated on page 113,—a full-size packet each of SUNSET LARGE-LEAVED COLEUS, described on page 126,—our unequaled LEMOINE'S GIANT HELIOTROPE, illustrated on page 131,—BURPEE'S LARGEST-FLOWERING DEFIANCE PETUNIAS,—illustrated on page 146,—and the NEW MAMMOTH WHITE VERBENA, named in the list of "Advance Novelties" on page 28 of THE FARM ANNUAL. ☞ At regular prices these seven packets of seed alone amount to $1.10. All are of finest quality, and with exception of the Aster and Verbena are EXCLUSIVELY OF OUR OWN GROWTH AT FORDHOOK FARMS.

The seeds will be wrapped in oil-paper and sent with the plants, if you want all at once,—or the [illegible] With [illegible] we send our two Booklets,—one "On the Care of Plants," the other "Rare Flowers from Seed."

New Dwarf Canna, GLORIOSA.

Amateurs and florists generally agree in the opinion that GLORIOSA is the most beautiful dwarf Canna ever introduced. Never before have we had a Dwarf Canna with such long trusses or such large individual florets. Although first introduced by us last year, we have grown an immense stock, so that all our customers, who desire, can plant liberally of this "Best of All" Cannas.

The plants, while vigorous and healthy, grow only from eighteen inches to two feet high, with broad, musa-like leaves of a light, rich green. The magnificent trusses of bloom, measuring from nine to ten inches in height and from twenty to twenty-four inches in circumference, are borne upon short, sturdy stalks. We have counted from fifty to sixty buds and flowers on a single truss. The individual flowers are from four to five inches in diameter. The illustration shown herewith was engraved from a photograph, but can convey only a slight idea of the real beauty of this distinct novelty.

The magnificent flowers are of a rich scarlet-crimson, with a distinct golden band around each petal. Although these colors are distinct, yet they seem to blend and harmonize so thoroughly that, as an enthusiastic admirer remarked, they form "a perfect symphony of crimson and gold."

Price 20 cts. each; 3 for 50 cts., or 7 for $1.00, postpaid. By express: Good, strong roots securely packed at the low price of $1.50 per dozen, or $10.00 per hundred.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

S. J., Lyonshall, Mass. 1. Is the night skating rink a proper place for a minister of the Gospel to attend regularly? 2. Should professing Christians play cards, attend dancing parties, and make a practice of Sunday visiting?

[illegible] likely to lose whatever influence he possessed in his church by such a course. 2. Professing Christians might do so, but no real Christian who strives earnestly to make spiritual progress would indulge in such practices.

J. D. S., Maxwell, Ont., a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, writes us, sending some arguments against dancing, apropos of a recent letter in THE MAIL-BAG. He says:

The dancing mentioned approvingly in the Bible was carried on by the sexes separately, and generally as a religious act. Mixed dancing has caused much immorality; familiarities are permitted in the dance which would not be tolerated in a sitting-room, and many lost girls have acknowledged this amusement as the beginning of their downfall. Dancing and piety do not go hand in hand. When a professor of religion is known to be a dancer, his influence for good is lost. All worldly people believe dancing to be inconsistent with a Christian profession. The most pious persons, in every church, oppose dancing. No one goes to the ball-room to glorify God, and we are told whatsoever we do should be for his glory.

Reader. Where is the largest printing-press in the world; what is its capacity; who made it and what [illegible]?

The largest printing-press in the world, according to information kindly furnished by Messrs. R. Hoe & Co., New York City, is one recently built and set up by them in the press-room of the New York World. It stands thirteen feet, eight inches high, and occupies a ground space of twenty-five feet, six inches by eleven feet eight. It will turn out printed, folded and counted in an hour: 96,000 four, six, or eight-page papers, 72,000 ten-page papers, 60,000 twelve-page papers, or 48,000 sixteen-page papers.

B. R. J., Jersey City, N. J. Why is the yew tree so frequently associated in English prose and verse with the idea of a churchyard?

In ancient times, English yeomen made their long bows of wood of the yew tree, which possessed in greater measure than that of other trees the virtues of strength, durability and elasticity. As the material for weapons of warfare and instruments of hunting at a time when wars were many and men lived largely on game, there was danger of the yew becoming exterminated, and in order to preserve it, its cultivation in graveyards was commanded. The Fothergill yew, near Aberfeldy, in Perthshire, is said to be the oldest tree in Great Britain; Dr. Guthrie speaks of it as "being a sapling when David was a boy," and its age is estimated to be between 2,500 and 2,600 years.

Our friends are still sending us letters which show many to be owners of rare old Bibles. John Herst, Berlin, Ont., writes:

I have an old Bible, printed in Frankfort-on-Main, Germany, 1633, translated by Luther. Contains Old and New Testaments, Apocrypha, Concordance, lists of names and places, Calendar of daily readings for a year, etc. Size, 18 x 12 x 6 inches, and weighs 20 pounds. It is bound in half-inch wooden boards, covered with heavy leather, and ornamented with numerous brass-headed nails, and has brass clasps.

E. H. Mildon, St. John, N. B. I have a key to the Bible, by Francis Roberts, printed in London [illegible].

W. A. Wilcox, Westerly, R. I. I have a King James' Bible, printed in 1611 and 1612, in very good condition.

M. J. Covell, Berlin, Vt. I have in my care the second volume of an old Bible, with notes, printed in London in 1700.

Subscriber, Cocoa, Fla. How would the law divide a woman's property at her death if she owned real estate in Florida and Connecticut, and also some railroad stock, and if she has lived part of the year in each State; a husband (but no children) and brothers living?

The disposition of the real estate of a married woman who dies intestate depends on the law of the State where the property is situated. Her personal property is distributed, in case of intestacy, according to the law of the State where she is domiciled at the time of her death. The husband's domicile would determine the wife's. When a person goes from State to State, staying a short time in each, the question of domicile may be difficult to ascertain. What place is regarded as home? Where does the husband vote? What is the intention? To what place does the traveler intend to return ultimately as his home? "Subscriber" may settle the question by having he) may prefer as their domicile. As to what the particular law may be in different States, lawyers practicing in those States should be consulted. Generally speaking, the husband has the use of his wife's real estate as long as he survives her, provided a child was born alive during the marriage. Otherwise, the real estate will go to the woman's heirs, in this case to the brothers. Personal property, all if there be no children surviving the wife, one-third or some other fraction if there be such children, goes to the husband. The best thing for the wife to do is to make a will. Every State gives effect to the provision of a married woman's will.

Sympathy, Dansville, N. Y. Is it true that the Lee Orphanage, in Havana, which was closed during the blockade, has not since been re-[illegible]?

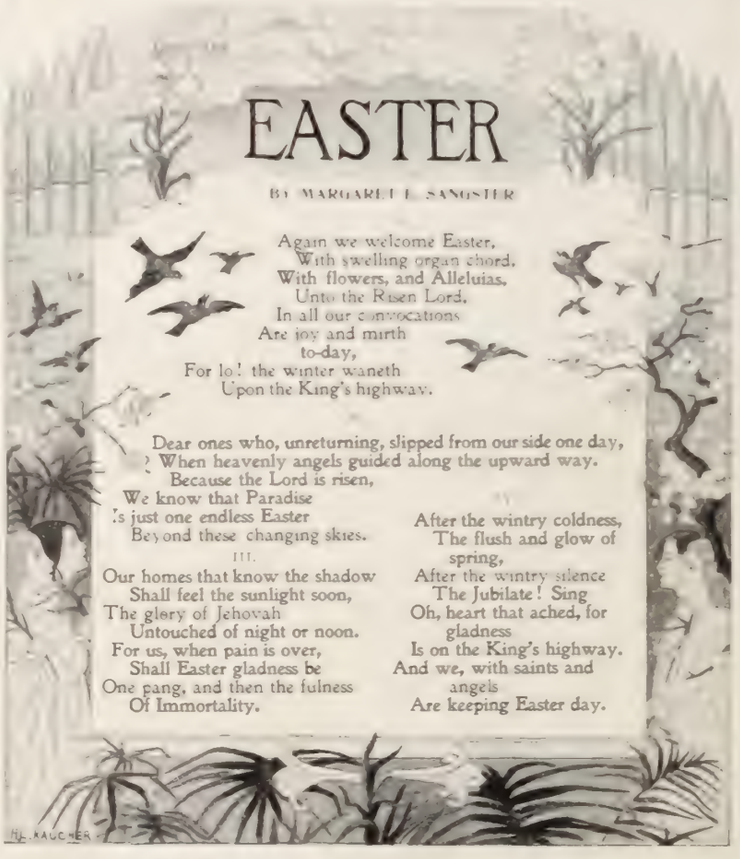
It is not true, and we know of no reason why any one should make so absurd a statement. The Lee Orphanage, which was temporarily closed during the blockade, was re-opened after the cessation of hostilities, and has been and still is supported by regular remittances from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, representing contributions by its readers. We have repeatedly published reports from the Orphanage management in these pages since it re-opened. On another page of this issue, we print a facsimile of a letter from Gen. Lee, which states the condition of the Orphanage work at the present time.

W. L. H., Sparta, Wis. What has been the effect of the late war on missions?

Its direct and inevitable effect upon Protestant missions has been to give them a decided stimulus. It has opened up among the seven millions of souls in the Eastern archipelago, a field which, through Spanish misgovernment and the indolence of the Romish church, has been little better than a heathen one for centuries past. Within a very short time, almost all the leading Protestant missionary organizations will be represented there. In Cuba and Porto Rico, the same conditions have prevailed, though in lesser degree, and the mission-[illegible] assist those already at the front. As to the effect the war has produced upon those at [illegible] foreign missionary energy, it is yet too early to determine. It is to be hoped, however, that they will appreciate the great opportunities before them, and extend generous help to the missionaries in their efforts to preach the Gospel to the neglected races.

[illegible] months old. I am about five feet and a-half in height. I do not want to grow any taller. I weigh about one-hundred and forty pounds, and [illegible] without doing me any great injury, any food help to stop my growth? If so, kindly in your

Your height, for a girl of seventeen, is not excessive, and the weight would indicate that the growth is not disproportionate in any degree. While it is true that the average young woman at your age is shorter and lighter, it is also true that there are thousands of instances of similar development. Statisticians tell us that the average American woman of our day is taller and heavier than her predecessors, and also that the rising generation of women promises to be still taller. A fine physique is a matter for congratulation rather than commisera-



EASTER
BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER
Again we welcome Easter,
With swelling organ chord,
With flowers, and Alleluias,
Unto the Risen Lord.
In all our convocations
Are joy and mirth to-day,
For lo! the winter waneth
Upon the King's highway.
Dear ones who, unreturning, slipped from our side one day,
When heavenly angels guided along the upward way.
Because the Lord is risen,
We know that Paradise
Is just one endless Easter
Beyond these changing skies.
III.
Our homes that know the shadow
Shall feel the sunlight soon,
The glory of Jehovah
Untouched of night or noon.
For us, when pain is over,
Shall Easter gladness be
One pang, and then the fulness
Of Immortality.
After the wintry coldness,
The flush and glow of spring,
After the wintry silence
The Jubilate! Sing
Oh, heart that ached, for gladness
Is on the King's highway.
And we, with saints and angels
Are keeping Easter day.

A. M. R., Peniel, O. Please give me information about the Council of Nice, of whom composed, [illegible] ner of procedure and the work it accomplished.

Two church councils have been held at Nicæa (or Nice) in Asia Minor, but the first of these is the more important in ecclesiastical history. It was convened by the Emperor Constantine in A.D. 325, and consisted of 318 bishops, who remained in session two months. Constantine's object convoking the council is variously represented as having been (1) political, and (2) intended to restore quiet to the church and unite all its factions on the great Trinitarian question. The president is supposed to have been Hosius, Bishop of Cordova. Much time was devoted to the discussion of Arian views. The council finally drew up a new confession of faith, which became the basis of what is now known throughout Christendom as the Nicene Creed. Only eleven copies of the confession made at the time are now extant.

A GENUINE BARGAIN

Last year we purchased a large number of War Souvenir Spoons, which we sold at $1.00 per set. Each set consisted of six spoons. We have now a number of broken sets, only five designs, and these broken sets of five spoons each we will send postpaid to any purchaser on receipt of 50 cents. Remember, 50 cents buys the five spoons, all charges prepaid.

The designs of the entire set were as follows:

Spoon 1—Pres. McKinley and the American Flag.
Spoon 2—Mrs. McKinley and the White House.
Spoon 3—General Miles and Chickamauga.
Spoon 4—Lieut. Hobson and the "Merrimac."
Spoon 5—Admiral Dewey and the "Olympia."
Spoon 6—Gen. Fitzhugh Lee and Morro Castle.

Remember, these are broken sets, and we furnish only five of the six designs.

These spoons were manufactured by one of the most celebrated silversmiths in the country. They are made with the greatest care, [illegible] perfect in finish, and are plated with pure coin silver, oxydized antique silver finish, fully guaranteed. They are not little after-dinner coffee [illegible] regular, good sensible full-size teaspoons. Remember, a broken set of five, all charges prepaid, for 50 cents. We can supply 117 sets, and they will soon be sold out. Address to-day,

Life in Quaint Old Tabreez

Quaint Customs of the Ancient Persian City—A Ramble Among the Bazaars—Missionary Hannah G. Yoseph's Letter

URMI, PERSIA, JAN. 10, 1899.

IN the Persian tongue, the words that signify bazaar (alish verish) mean literally, "giving and taking." Merchants also say: "Sugar has a good bazaar"—that is, it sells high; or, "Wood and coal have bad bazaar"—that is, they sell low.

PERSIAN MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

An Oriental bazaar consists of a series of dokans (shops) where alish verish is done, and is generally situated in the centre of the city. In addition to this, there are other maydans (squares), large and small, where public meetings gather and where fanatical dervishes cry themselves hoarse and Persian fakir-magicians play their tricks. A large shop in Tabreez is four yards square and two yards high. The smallest is about one yard high and one and a half yards square.

If you wish to see the Orient and Orientals of the past and present, visit a bazaar on the novios (new day), when people that have come from distant places congregate there. The bazaars are decorated on such a day with many-colored handkerchiefs hanging here and there, gay Persian skull-caps, shining little pocket-mirrors, and many kinds of tempting fruits and fanciful sweetmeats and candies exposed to view. One novios a woman friend and myself, enveloped in borrowed native costume, went together to the bazaar. We started early, but already the streets were packed with loaded camels and donkeys, and drivers were constantly calling: "Khabardar! Khabardar!" (look out—look out!). We stop in front of the shop of an acquaintance, who is sitting Turkish-fashion on a beautiful rug. "Salaam alakum, Hajy Hasan" (peace be to you), we say. "Aloca Salaam" (to you peace be), he replies, adding: "Khanimlar boyrin" (ladies, come up). In order not to be trodden down by the multitude, we go up into the shop, which is about two feet high from the street, and sit facing the rows of shops on the opposite side.

The sight of so many bright costumes moving to and fro looks like woods in autumn moved by winds. We see men of all races; their style of head-dress is a distinguishing mark. Men with big black sheepskin caps and skeepskin coats and bandaged feet and legs are the keepers of camels—"the Persian railway." The common people, who till the ground and make it "smile into harvest," wear small round felt caps. Wearers of the tulip-like red hat have come from the Sultan's country, and there are Europeans in Western costume.

Mollas (priests) are conspicuous with their snow-white turbans, snow-white stockings, golden yellow slippers and flowing robes. Large dark-blue turbans, dark-green girdles and cruel countenances, mark the descendants of the Arabian prophet, the sayids, who rule the country. Here also are dervishes in cone-shaped hats, disheveled hair, untidy flowing robes; some crying loudly, others muttering to themselves. One hands a clove to Hajy Hasan and in return receives a few copper coins. Here comes a son of Zoroaster, with no hat on at all, a band of ragged handkerchief tied around his head, barefooted, and carrying in his hands an immense mace literally covered with tacks and nails. Here and there are horsemen, skilful, graceful and ferocious-looking; these are the Kurds of whom it is said they would as soon kill a man as to look at him. The black pipe hat of the official class is in evidence, their many brass buttons and trimmings of red, showing signs of royal favor.

My friend is earnestly talking with Hajy Hasan, and is saying, "Well, then, what is the price of it?"

Hajy Hasan answers "Khanim (lady), this piece is brought right from Frangistan; is equal to broadcloth; it would last a lifetime; it is worthy of your admiration." My friend pleads "Please tell me what is the price of it?" Hajy Hasan: "Khanim, for you ooch panabats" (thirty cents). She: "Our neighbor bought the same goods from this shop for eighteen cents a yard." Hajy: "Imam hackichin! (by the truth of Imam!) we have ourselves bought it for 29 cents, and I am asking you only one cent a yard profit." She: "Well, then, we will have to try some other shop." Hajy: "Bah! (sign of surprise) come back it is a pushkash (gift) to you, take it home, I will have nothing to say" throwing the goods at our feet. Taking his iron measure he begins to measure and count the gift. "How many yards shall you command me to measure?"

She: "Two."

Hajy: "Two yards of this beautiful goods, and only 25 cents a yard!"

She: "Please don't cut it for that price. I told you I would buy it for 18 cents a yard. I see it in the opposite shop, and we will go there." We both try to leave.

Hajy: "Why are you leaving. Is not my shop a pushkash for you? Here, take it. I will be ruined!" At the same time we caught him whispering in Persian to his neighbor: "Four cents a yard for profit is not bad, is it?"

SHOPPING IN PERSIA—UNCLE SHELEMON AND HIS CUSTOMERS

And this is the wearisome, soul-sickening process that must be undergone to buy anything here. With the traveling pedlar who calls at your house with his wares it is the same. "Uncle Shelemon" (uncle and aunt are bestowed as titles of respect on elders) goes around with his load of everything, from silks to chewing gum, and sells them just as he pleases—there is no rule to his prices. His coming is announced by barking of dogs, calls, crying of children, and much noise and confusion. He says:

"Shlamalokhoon." (Peace be to you.) Flings his load down at my feet and begins to show goods. "I have such varieties," he says, "of facial soaps. Jewish ladies use them, that is why they are so beautiful; won't you call in your neighbors?" He calls them. "I have brought some herbs for your Sultan Khanim, (Mohammedan) neighbor, which will cause her husband to always love her. Smell this," (a mirror box which contained leaves of flowers, etc.). "It is a charm which makes everybody love you. Last spring Sarah's husband was divorcing her; he not only did not divorce her, he even did not bring a goony (a second wife) over her. I gave her the charm."

"Uncle Shelemon, show me some material for curtains," I asked. He: "By Moshy Raban! (Moses' teacher) I have got such a beautiful piece of goods, fresh from Stamboul." "Please, let me see it," I ask. "Have you made fresh bread?" he inquires, "there is a delicious smell of fresh bread." "You shall have some, after I see the goods," I say. He: "Stamboul never produced such beauty before, by the holy turban of Moshy Raban! there is not a yard of it in the whole bazaar. Besides, common people never know the difference between it and silk;" exposing at last a material with large bunches of large red roses printed upon it. "You shall have a spring garden in your rooms the year round," he says.

"How much a yard?" He: "Well, Khanim, how much will you give for this beautiful goods?" "Its regular market price is from 20 to 25 cents a yard, I say." He: "Allah destroy my house if I am lying! the price that you speak of will cause me to lose."

Our neighbors have gathered in. In spite of all I can do, the young women pay whatever price he asks for his charms; and because they do not want to be found out by their mothers-in-law, some did not examine what they bought, but ran out as quickly as they came. His charms and cosmetics make more profit than anything else he sells. "Uncle Shelemon, are you ready now to wait upon me?" I plead. Before he answers, a young woman who had bought a mirror-box supposed to contain charm-powder, came almost crying and said, "Uncle Shelemon, there is no charm-powder in my mirror!" He: "You must have overturned it." She: "No, some one near me bewitched it." He: "Give me five cents more and I will put some powder in your mirror-box." She: "I have but two cents." He: "For this Khanim's sake I will give you a little." She, crying: "To-morrow I will make fresh bread and I will fold some and put it in the hole near the gate, and when you pass on your rounds you can take it." He: "I forgot to tell you about two expensive charms; they are some kind of precious stones; to-night tell your husband about them. Tell him also that if they are sewn on the children's clothes, it will protect them from the influence of evil eye, and he must give me three kirans profit." She: "Come to-day; you will, I fear, sell them to some one else." He: "No, you tell your husband about them to-day, and I will come to-morrow."

I asked to see the charms, and found them nothing but the colored portion of the eye of a china doll, and I told him so.

"No, Khanim," he protested; "they are from a genii's toe-nail! How many yards of the cloth shall I measure you? Thirty cents a yard to you, because I have had profit in your house."

I paid him 26 cents a yard. On leaving, he said: "I thought you were going to give me a piece of fresh bread and some pickles." I gave them to him.

This description of shopping in the East will give Western readers some idea of the superstition, falsehood and cheating that pervades Oriental life in all transactions and relations; of the difficulties in the missionary work and of the need of true Gospel teaching.

Our Fresh-Air Work

AS the season approaches for opening our Fresh-Air work again, letters multiply showing that the friends of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home are both working and praying for tenement waifs. This blessed labor for children has accomplished so much good that it strongly commends itself to all who love little ones. Many a man and woman of the future will look back to the sweet Christian influence which surrounded them in this Home, as the starting-point of a noble life and Christian character. Hundreds of feeble little waifs have been restored to health and happiness; many a tenement mother's burden has been so lightened that it became tolerable; kind missionaries came in and bore some of the poor little suffering waifs off to the cool, sweet country, clothed them in clean garments; the grateful mothers could find no language save tears and sobs in which to express their thankfulness to the generous friends whose gifts had brought so much pleasure and benefit.

Here is a letter from a new friend, who lives in Keewaskum, Wis., sending $6 "to give to an institution which takes in poor forsaken children and teaches them Christian principles." "One who loves little children," in Marshfield, Ind., sends $2.15; "To be used in sending little suffering children to the country this summer. Please take it, and help some poor little sufferer to regain its health and strength." The Junior Epworth League of Fallston, Md., sends $4.50 for the Children's Home and "best wishes for its success." Another contributor writes: A little boy (aged nine), sends 50 cents. "Among the many good works THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is helping, none I think, can be dearer to the hearts of mothers than that which gives the little ones a happy home and Christian teaching." L. C., $2: "A Sunday School collection. We wish it used where it can do the most good for Christ's little ones." All contributions will be promptly acknowledged. The following have been received:

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

. . . Life's Acidities . . .

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, John 19: 30. . . .

When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar

THE [illegible] had done their work. It was almost sundown, and Jesus was dying. Persons in crucifixion often lingered on from day to day—crying, begging, cursing; but Christ had been exhausted by years of maltreatment. Pillowless, poorly fed, flogged—as bent over and tied to a low post, his bare back was inflamed with the scourges intersticed with pieces of lead and bone—and now for whole hours, the weight of his body hung on delicate tendons, and, according to custom, a violent stroke under the armpits had been given by the executioner. Dizzy, nauseated, feverish—a world of agony is compressed in the two words: "I thirst!". O skies of Judea, let a drop of rain strike on his burning tongue! O world, with rolling rivers and sparkling lakes, and spraying fountains, give Jesus something to drink! If there be any pity in earth or heaven or hell, let it now be demonstrated in behalf of this royal sufferer.

The wealthy women of Jerusalem used to have a fund of money with which they provided wine for those people who died in crucifixion—a powerful opiate to deaden the pain; but Christ would not take it. He wanted to die sober, and so he refused the wine. But afterwards they go to a cup of vinegar and soak a sponge in it, and put it on a stick of hyssop, and then press it against the hot lips of Christ. You say the wine was an anæsthetic and intended to relieve or deaden the pain. But the vinegar was an insult.

In some lives the saccharine seems to predominate. Life is sunshine on a bank of flowers. A thousand hands to clap approval. In December or in January, looking across their table, they see all their family present. Health rubicund. Skies flamboyant. Days resilient. But in a great many cases there are not so many sugars as acids. The annoyances, and the vexations, and the disappointments of life overpower the successes. There is a gravel in almost every shoe. An Arabian legend says that there was a worm in Solomon's staff, gnawing its strength away; and there is a weak spot in every earthly support that a man leans on. King George of England forgot all the grandeurs of his throne because, one day, in an interview, Beau Brummel called him by his first name, and addressed him as a servant, crying: "George, ring the bell!" Miss Langdon, honored all the world over for her poetic genius, is so worried over the evil reports set afloat regarding her, that she is found dead, with an empty bottle of prussic acid in her hand. Goldsmith said that his life was a wretched being, and that all that want and contempt could bring to it had been brought, and cries out: "What, then, is there formidable in a jail?" Correggio's fine painting is hung up for a tavern sign. Hogarth cannot sell his best painting except through a raffle. Andrew Delsart makes the great fresco in the Church of the Annunciata, at Florence, and gets for pay a sack of corn; and there are annoyances and vexations in high places as well as in low places, showing that in a great many lives are the sours greater than the sweets. "When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar."

It is absurd to suppose that a man who has always been well can sympathize with those who are sick, or that one who has always been honored can appreciate the sorrow of those who are despised, or that one who has been born to a great fortune can understand the distress and the straits of those who are destitute. The fact that Christ himself took the vinegar, makes him able to sympathize to-day and for ever with all those whose cup is filled with the sharp acids of this life. He took the vinegar.

In the first place, there was the sourness of betrayal. The treachery of Judas hurt Christ's feelings more than all the friendship of his disciples did him good. You have had many friends; but there was one friend upon whom you put especial stress. You feasted him. You loaned him money. You befriended him in the dark passes of life, when he especially needed a friend. Afterward, he turned upon you, and he took advantage of your former intimacies. He wrote against you. He talked against you. He microscopized your faults. He flung contempt at you when you ought to have received nothing but gratitude. At first, you could not sleep at nights. Then you went about with a sense of having been stung. That difficulty will never be healed, for though mutual friends may arbitrate in the matter until you shall shake hands, the old cordiality will never come back. Now I commend to all such the sympathy of a betrayed Christ. Why, they sold him for less than our twenty dollars! They all forsook him and fled. They cut him to the quick. He drank that cup to the dregs. He took the vinegar.

There is also the sourness of pain. There are some of you who have not seen a well day for many years. By keeping out of draughts, and by carefully studying dietetics, you continue to this time: but oh, the headaches, and the sideaches, and the backaches, and the heartaches which have been your accompaniment all the way through! You have struggled under a heavy mortgage of physical disabilities; and instead of the placidity that once characterized you, it is now only with great effort that you keep away from irritability and sharp retort. Difficulties of respiration, of digestion, of locomotion, make up the great obstacle in your life, and you tug and sweat along the pathway, and wonder when the exhaustion will end. My friends, the brighest crowns in heaven will not be given to those who, in stirrups, dashed to the cavalry charge, while the general applauded and the sound of clashing sabres rang through the land; but the brightest crowns in heaven, I believe, will be given to those who trudged on amid chronic ailments which unnerved their strength, yet all the time maintaining their faith in God. It is comparatively easy to fight in a regiment of a thousand men, charging up the parapets to the sound of martial music: but it is not so easy to endure when no one but the nurse and the doctor are the witnesses of the Christian fortitude. Besides that, you never had any pains worse than Christ's. The sharpness that stung through his brain, through his hands, through his feet, through his heart were as great as yours certainly. He was as sick and as weary. Not a nerve or muscle or ligament escaped. All the pangs of all the nations of all the ages compressed into one sour cup. He took the vinegar!

There is also the sourness of poverty. Your income does not meet your outgoings, and that always gives an honest man anxiety. There is no sign of destitution about you—pleasant appearance and a cheerful home for you; but God only knows what a time you have had to manage your private finances. Just as the bills run up the wages seem to run down. You may say nothing, but life to you is a hard push; and when you sit down with your wife, and talk over the expenses, you both rise up discouraged. You abridge here and you abridge there, and you get things snug for smooth sailing, and by [illegible] there is a [illegible] doctor's bill to pay, or you have lost your pocketbook, or some debtor has failed, and you are thrown abeam-end. Well, brother, you are in glorious company. Christ owned not the house in which he stopped, or the colt on which he rode, or the boat in which he sailed. He lived in a borrowed house; he was buried in a borrowed grave. Exposed to all kinds of weather, yet he had only one suit of clothes. He breakfasted in the morning, and no one could possibly tell where he could get anything to eat before night. He would have been pronounced a financial failure. He had to perform a miracle to get money to pay a tax-bill. Not a dollar did he own. Privation of domesticity; privation of nutritious food; privation of a comfortable couch on which to sleep; privation of all worldly resources! The kings of the earth had chased chalices out of which to drink, but Christ had nothing but a plain cup set before him, and it was very sharp and it was very sour. He took the vinegar.

There were years that passed along before your family circle was invaded by death, but the moment the charmed circle was broken everything seemed to dissolve. Hardly have you put the black apparel in the wardrobe before you have again to take it out. Great and rapid changes in your family record. You got the house and rejoiced in it, but the charm was gone as soon as the crape hung on the door-bell. The one upon whom you most depended was taken away from you. A cold marble slab lies on your heart to-day. Once, as the children romped through the house, you put your hand over your aching head and said: "Oh, if I could only have it still!" Oh, it is too still now. You lost your patience when the tops, and the strings, and the shells were left amid floor: but oh, you would be willing to have the trinkets scattered all over the floor again, if they were scattered by the same hands. With what a ruthless ploughshare bereavement rips up the heart! But Jesus knows all about that. You cannot tell him anything new in regard to bereavement. He had only a few friends, and when he lost one it brought tears to his eyes. Lazarus had often entertained him at his house. Now Lazarus is dead and buried, and Christ breaks down with emotion, the convulsion of grief shuddering through all the ages of bereavement. Oh, yes, yes! He knows all about the loneliness and the heartbreak. He took the vinegar!

Then there is the sourness of the death-hour. Whatever else we may escape, that acid-sponge will be pressed to our lips. I sometimes have a curiosity to know how I will behave when I come to die: whether I will be calm or excited: whether I will be filled with reminiscence or with anticipation. I cannot say. But come to the point I must and you must. An officer from the future world will knock at the door of our hearts, and serve on us the writ of ejectment, and we will have to surrender. And we will wake up after these autumnal and wintry and vernal and summery glories have vanished from our vision: we will wake up into a realm which has only one season, and that the season of everlasting love.

But you say: "I don't want to break out from my present associations. It is so chilly and so damp to go down the stairs of that vault. I don't want anything drawn so tightly over my eyes. If there were only some way of breaking through the partition between worlds without tearing this body all to shreds! I wonder if the surgeons and the doctors cannot compound a mixture by which this body and soul can all the time be kept together? Is there no escape from this separation? None: absolutely none. Christ knows what it is to leave this world, of the beauty of which he was more appreciative than we ever could be. He knows the exquisiteness of the phosphorescence of the sea: he trod it. He knows the glories of the midnight heavens, for they were the spangled canopy of his wilderness pillow. He knows about the lilies: he twisted them into his sermon. He knows about the fowls of the air: they whirred their way through his discourse. He knows about the sorrows of leaving this beautiful world. Not a taper was kindled in the darkness. He died physi- [illegible] dizziness and hemorrhage and agony, that have put him in sympathy with all the dying. He goes through Christendom, and he gathers up the stings out of all the death pillows, and he puts them under his own neck and head. He gathers on his own tongue the burning thirsts of many generations. While heaven was pitying, and earth was mocking, and hell was deriding, he took the vinegar!

To all those to whom life has been an acerbity—a dose they could not swallow, a draught that set their teeth on edge and a-rasping—I preach the omnipotent sympathy of Jesus Christ. The sister of Herschel [illegible] of her time polishing the telescopes through which he brought the distant worlds nigh: and it is my ambition now, this hour, to clear the lens of your spiritual vision, so that looking through the dark night of your earthly troubles you may behold the glorious constellation of a Saviour's mercy and a Saviour's love. O, my friends, do not try to carry all your ills alone. Do not put your poor shoulder under the Apennines when the Almighty Christ is ready to lift up all your burdens. When you have a trouble of any kind, you rush this way and that way: and you wonder what this man will say about it, and what that man will say about it: and you try this prescription, and that prescription, and the other prescription. O, why do you not go straight to the heart of Christ, knowing that for our own sinning and suffering race he took the vinegar!

There was a vessel that had been tossed on the seas for a great many weeks, and been disabled, and the supply of water gave out, and the crew were dying of thirst. After many days they saw a sail against the sky. They signalled it. When the vessel came nearer, the people on the suffering ship cried to the captain of the other vessel: "Send us some water. We are dying for lack of water." And the captain on the vessel that was hailed responded: "Dip your buckets where you are. You are in the mouth of the Amazon, and there are scores of miles of fresh water all around about you, and hundreds of feet deep." And then they dropped their buckets over the side of the vessel, and brought up the clear, bright, fresh water, and put out the fire of their thirst. So I hail you to-day, after a long and perilous voyage, thirsting as you are for pardon, and thirsting for comfort, and thirsting for eternal life: and I ask you what is the use of your going in that death-struck state, while all around you is the deep, clear, wide, sparkling flood of God's sympathetic mercy. O, dip your buckets and drink and live forever. "Whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely."

Yet, there are people who refuse this Divine sympathy: and they try to fight their own battles, and drink their own vinegar, and carry their own burdens; and their life, instead of being a triumphal march from victory to victory, will be a hobbling-on from defeat to defeat, until they make final surrender to retributive disaster. O, I wish I could to-day gather up in my arms all the woes of men and women, all their heart-aches, all their disappointments, all their chagrins, and just take them right to the feet of a sympathizing Jesus. He took the vinegar. Nana Sahib, after he had lost his last battle, in India, fell back into the jungles of Iheri—jungles so full of malaria that no mortal can live there. He carried with him also a ruby of great lustre and of great value. He died in those jungles: his body was never found, and the ruby has never yet been recovered. And I fear that to-day there are some who will fall back from this subject into the sickening, killing jungles of their sin, carrying a gem of infinite value—a priceless soul to be lost forever. O, that that ruby might flash in the eternal coronation! But, no. There are some, I fear, who turn away from this offered mercy, and comfort, and Divine sympathy: notwithstanding that Christ, for all who would accept his grace, trudged the long way, and received in his face expectorations of the filthy mob, and for the guilty, and the discouraged, and the discomforted of the race, took the vinegar. May God Almighty break the infatuation, and lead you out into the strong hope, and the good cheer, and the glorious sunshine of this triumphant Gospel!

A Bishop of the Arctic

His Diocese Lies in the Frigid Zone, and He Travels Thousands of Miles Yearly—Faithful Labors in Polar Lands

NOT all the heroic labors that are undertaken in the Master's service are performed in temperate and torrid climes. In these pages, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has at different times related the stories of the suffering and endurance of those brave missionaries who are carrying the Gospel to the benighted peoples of the remote north—the Eskimos the Greenlanders, the Icelanders, and the natives of the bleak Alaskan shores.

Right Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe is the Bishop and head of the Episcopal diocese of Alaska. His territory is a vast one, and involves almost constant traveling on sledges, in rowboats and afoot. In the course of his preaching and diocesan duties he has travelled between 6,000 and 7,000 miles a year regularly since his appointment. He is quite a young man, being only thirty-five years of age, and prior to his elevation to his present position, three years ago, he was Episcopal rector at Sault Ste Marie, Mich.

Bishop Rowe is now in the Western States on a brief furlough, and will return to his field in May. In a recent interview, he made some very interesting statements concerning his work. He will cruise among the Alentian Islands during the coming summer, visiting Indian settlements, and in the fall will come down to St. Michael and spend next winter visiting the missions in the interior along the Yukon. While traveling he wears the regular Eskimo dress of reindeer skin. With regard to the healthfulness of the Arctic regions, he says the natural hardships incident to life in such an inclement latitude, together with the lack of a wholesome variety in the food, are responsible for nearly all the sickness to be found there. With these conditions improved or instigated the climate is beautiful.

"The field for spiritual work in Alaska," he added, "is boundless, for in addition to natives, upward of 100,000 white men have gone into the country lately. We had three missions three years ago, but now we have twelve. Polygamy prevails among the Eskimo on the Asiatic side, but it has nearly died out in Alaska. At our mission at Anvik, on the Yukon, one of the last Indians who practiced polygamy was shown the error of his ways in a forcible fashion last winter. He attempted to discipline one of his four wives, and the other three joined forces with her and attacked him until he became convinced of the evils of polygamy."

In his latest report of the progress of the missions under his charge, Bishop Rowe gives some instructive facts. He has eight clergymen engaged in active work, two medical missionaries, one teacher, six women (nurses and teachers), exclusive of the faithful, helpful wives of missionaries, two licensed lay-readers, five native catechists—twenty-five workers in all. The population has, within the three years, probably doubled. Educational work has progressed amazingly and the schools are rapidly extending. Last year's work by the Bishop included visits to Sitka, Juneau, Douglas Island, Ketchikian, Skaguay, Dyea, points on the trail to the interior, Eagle City, Circle City, Fort Yukon, Fort Hamlin, Rampart City, Fort Adams, Copper River, Valdes, Orca, Unalaska, &c. He made two visitations through Southeastern Alaska, one to the interior of Alaska, traveled by steamer, small boat and on foot 8,000 miles; held 155 public services; preached ninety-eight sermons and fifty-seven addresses; officiated at forty celebrations, one marriage, five burials, five baptisms, one ordination, eight confirmations, and licensed two lay readers.

Of his visit to the native settlement at Ketchikian, where he has a mission station, Bishop Rowe writes:

The Indians, to the number of about 200, were holding a "pot-latch," and invited me to visit them. I did so and spoke to them, being replied to by several chiefs. They thanked us with many words that we had come to teach them and their children and hoped we would not leave them. Cape Fox John, of Fort Tongas, whom I confirmed, said that he had asked God to send some missionaries to teach their children, knew that God would do so, and now his heart seemed full of light and joy. The Indians are disposed to gather round the mission, build homes, etc., for they are anxious on account of their children. I am very thankful that God has led us to minister to these poor scattered Indians, who had begun to feel that "no man careth for our souls."

His graphic description of the scenes witnessed on the great gold trail will be appreciated by many who have friends among the multitudes of gold-seekers:

It is almost impossible to describe the vast number of the men on this trail. I estimated it at 20,000, but 40,000 would be more correct. I chose this way of going in for this reason: It gave me an opportunity of getting close to these men as I could get in no other way, I think I fairly succeeded. It was a surprise to them that I should be sharing their life, and for no other object than to tell men the story of God's love. Working by their sides, talking to them around their camp-fires or in their tents, and holding services, I sought these men for Christ's sake; and some of these scenes will live long in my memory. One such occurs to me. We were camped in the midst of many others, waiting for the ice to break. From many points on the river men visited my tent and invariably asked, when leaving, "What time on Sunday will services be held?" As the hour approached men came from their tents, dropped down in their boats, or sat on logs outside my tent and waited. The books were distributed, and the service went on. Sing! I never heard such a choir! Into the steady gaze of 150 men I looked and preached the Word of God. With tears in their eyes, men stepped up and thanked me—men from many States—and said it recalled home and the dear ones, and they had never expected on the trail such a happy privilege!

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

A Plea for the Cuban Orphans

Headquarters Seventh Army Corps.

-:- Camp Columbia -:-

near Havana, Cuba, February 23rd. 1899.

Mr. L. Klopsch,

The Christian Herald,

New York City.

My dear Mr. Klopsch:

I am glad to be able to inform you that the Orphan Asylum here, which some of the good people originally called the "Lee Orphan Asylum" is in excellent shape, and I hope that the good work being done there can be continued. You will remember that the children at this Asylum are "reconcentrado" orphans, and that after their fathers and mothers died of starvation, I had them picked up out of the streets and saved their lives by having them placed in a building where they were given food and medicine. There are now in the asylum some fifty five little children, and thanks to the generosity of yourself and others, there is money enough to take care of them for the present; but there are some back bills owing, which were made during the war when there was no communication between the United States and Havana, that should be paid; the gross amount being about $1800.

I am very anxious to get some little thin uniforms for these children. Is there any way that could be accomplished in the U.S? The dresses should be very thin, as the climate here is hot, and for children ranging from two years to eight years old. I know you take great interest in all schemes for the benefit of the poor and needy, and therefore I do not hesitate to bring to your attention the interests of these poor little orphans.

Very truly yours,

Fitzhugh Lee

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, on receipt of Gen. Lee's urgent letter, immediately purchased fifty-five suitable uniforms and forwarded them to him at Havana, for the use of the little inmates of the Lee Orphanage.

Soldiers Greet the Gospel

Christian Work in Cuba and Porto Rico—Notes of Progress

OUR faithful laborers in the new West Indian field, are making highly encouraging progress, as the letters received during the past week conclusively show. Mr. A. E. Moody, Secretary of the Army and Navy International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., writes from Buena Vista, Havana Province:

We are just closing the second month of our work with the Seventh Corps, and God has been with us in winning men to Christ, so that we have the sweet mixed with the bitter. Our work is now established in eight regiments and two division hospitals, and has never been more appreciated than at the present time. One of our secretaries says that boys crowd around his desk to talk to him concerning their spiritual life.

I have never seen men go into such wild excesses as I have witnessed here during the last few weeks. I am glad, however, that my observation leads me to think that drunkenness in this corps is on the decrease, as many are keeping themselves from strong drink.

I have recently visited five regiments in the interior and have also made visits to the battleships in the harbor, supplying the men with stationery and reading matter. At present our troops in Havana are scattered so widely that it seems impossible to do work with them along our regular lines. I expect, however, that they will be put in barracks shortly. Our hospital work is very much appreciated by the men. In addition to an immense quantity of papers, magazines, books and Testaments which have been issued, over one hundred thousand note-heads and forty-five thousand envelopes have been distributed.

Mr. F. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Secretary at San Juan, Porto Rico, writes:

In judging of the effectiveness of Christian work among the soldiers in Porto Rico, it is not possible to use the ordinary standards because the conditions are so different here. It is an impossibility to produce the same enthusiasm, in either our social or religious work, that was possible in the Southern camps when the men were expecting to be assigned to active duty at the front. Our work now must be steady, helpful, manly assistance along the lines which will touch daily lives. Our restaurant, with the addition of our reading, writing and game rooms, enable us to meet the demands of the case, as nothing else could. Our restaurant is nicely arranged, small tables, chairs and furnishings new and attractive, with well-cooked American food, will enable us to reach men, and to finally organize Bible classes and evangelistic services, making our building the centre of religious influence on the island, from which we can touch the different posts in the interior, providing them with helpful literature and organizing them for religious work. We should have in addition to the equipment already provided, at least $500 to invest in furnishings and embellishments, and so make our rooms the most attractive that are open to men in San Juan. We are praying that some men in the homeland will provide this special fund.

Our work at the theatre and barracks continues very helpful. We have been able to reach not only a number of soldiers, but also the native population, numbers of whom have been led to attend. The services at the theatre last Sunday were well attended. At the barracks I moved our stand to the Guard House and addressed a crowd of prisoners. They joined heartily in the service. Much good was done at this meeting. As we were leaving, a burly fellow, who had been sentenced for six months, called after me and said: "This is what you get for serving your country." I replied: "You are wrong, my man; you get it for serving the devil and drinking rum." The rest of the prisoners cried out: "You're right; we are going to quit." At the close of the service we hurried to the wharf and found a boat waiting to carry us aboard the Vicksburg. Rev. H. P. McCormick, of the Baptist Home Mission Society, accompanied us. The captain had prepared a good place amidship on deck, and the boys were seated on benches. A table covered with bunting had on it the Bible and a glass of water, and we immediately began singing "Jesus Saviour Pilot Me," followed by other hymns, the boys heartily joining in the music.

Yesterday was the "Carnival." The streets were crowded with merry-makers, dressed in grotesque fashion, wearing masks and forming in procession, accompanied by musicians playing native instruments. These were joined by the multitude, who mingled with them and followed them through the principal streets. The balconies were crowded with women, who shouted to the maskers and squirted cologne on their friends; also throwing long streamers of paper, colored red-white-and-blue across the street and around the persons of passers-by. Others scattered great handfuls of papelejo (little round bits of colored paper) over their friends and neighbors, filling their hair and clothing. It was a jollification in which rich and poor joined heartily.

The Anointing in Bethany

S. S. Lesson for April 9. John 12: 1-11
Golden Text, Mark 14: 8

IT was the day previous to his entry into Jerusalem, in the triumph of meekness foretold in Zech. 9: 9, that Jesus came to Bethany, where in a little family of three members he had already so greatly triumphed. "Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus" (John 11: 5). Therefore, he took such pains with their education, and suffered each of them to be so tried. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth (or educateth) and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth (Heb. 12: 6). Martha had learned the deep lesson that her service to the Lord, however devoted, however constant, if it were service for which he had not called her, was esteemed by the Lord nothing more than an anxiety and trouble which she had brought upon herself, and which hindered her from doing that which he willed, i. e., that she should sit at his feet with Mary, and learn of him. She had learned that such service had been compatible with harsh and unjust judgment of her sister, who was more in the mind of the Lord than she, and whom Jesus himself justified so fully when he said: "One thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her."

Mary also had learned the deeper lesson. She understood now that Jesus also must die, as her brother had died, and that he should rise again as Lazarus was raised. Therefore Mary was ready to anoint Jesus for his burial, and this hearing woman must take precedence in faith of the apostles, and in the true understanding of her Lord. Lazarus had learned his lesson: Though he were dead yet he lived, a proof that he had believed, according to John 11: 25. Thus, the death and resurrection of Lazarus served the Lord's purpose, and became through the jealousy and enmity of the Jews an occasion for, but also a rehearsal of the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus.

"Jesus came to Bethany where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raised from the dead. There they made him a supper and Martha served—in a very different spirit, however, from that in which her self-conceit could suffer her to blame her sister—but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with him." What a company! How typical! Mary, a type of such as are now, by God's grace, understanding the signs of the times, while they themselves are not understood; and Martha, typical of the earnest, devoted workers whom the Lord when he comes will find ready, occupying till he come: Lazarus, a type of those who shall then be raised from the dead: the first resurrection!

It was a special occasion: the disciples were there, but the hearing ear which Mary had, had not been found in them: they were yet without understanding. Deeds go farther than words. While Martha served, and Jesus, "the Resurrection and the Life" communed with him who had passed through death, as he was about to do: Mary arose, and without a word took a pound of ointment of spikenard, very precious, or "costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair, and the house was filled with the odor of the ointment." Not a word, but the action was full of significance. She, who understood now that the Son of God was glorified in the death and resurrection of her brother, saw in the words which had always been misunderstood by the disciples, that the Son of God should be glorified in his being delivered unto the Gentiles: in his being mocked, and shamefully entreated, and spit upon, in his being killed, and rising again the third day. A light had gone forth in her soul, and in this action Mary anointed the great Sin-offering. She entered into the thought of Christ in this action as no other human being did.

Now she knew why she must pass through the test of faith in her brother's death, and her testing times was by no means ended. One of the disciples—Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray him—said: "Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence and given to the poor?" A would-be philanthropist, but really a thief, robbing the slender resources which maintained Jesus and the twelve!

Such an one, who had always an eye to the earthly and to himself, could not understand the outlay of so much money only to do honor, as it seemed to him, to the person of Jesus. The Lord took up Mary's cause against Judas as he had formerly defended her against Martha: "Let her alone: against the day of my burying hath she kept this." What must it have been to Jesus in such an hour to have one human being who understood him! He, the Word which was from the beginning, who was with God, who was God, by whom all things were made and who had yet really taken upon him "the likeness of sinful flesh," and was on the eve of becoming "obedient unto death, even the death of the cross" (II. Phil. 8), and yet not one even of the chosen twelve realized the tremendous sacrifice he was about to make! And this one woman understood! Mary counted the value of the death of Jesus at the highest price—nothing was too much to show forth her adoration and her gratitude. He who died for her and the world of sinners whom she represented should have her best. "Ye have the poor with you always: and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: but Me ye have not always (Mark 14: 7).

The quiet Mary, with her speechless but significant action, filled the whole house with "the odor of the ointment." When we have the privilege to cede to Jesus that which costs us much, especially if our own ideas are subverted by it, the very brokenness which comes with such a breakdown of all confidence in one's self makes it possible that the savor of Christ may fill the house, the church, the mission field, where we are. It is not our savor, but his savor, escaping from the alabaster box which is perceptible. The great lack of the present day is Christians with the savor of Christ. So many carry their own atmospheres, their own savor, with them wherever they go; and it is Christ, not his messengers, who can meet the needs of a lost world. But his savor is found only in broken vessels. Until, like the family in Bethany, Christ has succeeded in conquering us, his savor, his love, his power, his holiness, does not reach the world through us.

CHRIST IN THE HOME OF MARTHA AND MARY, AT BETHANY

LESSON POINTS

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

ALL the Evangelists tell the story of a woman anointing Jesus with costly ointment, but Luke places the incident much earlier in our Lord's ministry than do the other three. As Luke was not one of the twelve and must have collected the materials for his Gospel from others, it is possible that he may have misplaced the incident. If he did not, we must conclude that there were two anointings. There are other difficulties in the narrative, but they are only such as might arise from four independent witnesses describing an event, especially when, as in this case, they were men intent on teaching spiritual lessons rather than on presenting an historically accurate biography. We gather from John's account that Christ, knowing perfectly well that his death was near at hand, went to Jerusalem to keep the Passover. On his way he stayed at Bethany, a village on the Mount of Olives, about two miles from the city. He probably desired a day of rest among friends before entering on the period of anguish, suffering and death which lay before him. We can imagine how warm a welcome he would receive from the family there with whom he would stay. Lazarus and Martha and Mary had apparently entertained him before this; but now, in the restoration of Lazarus, they had a new reason for making his visit the occasion of a celebration. They made him a supper—evidently a more elaborate repast than usual. Matthew and Mark say it was given in the house of Simon the Leper. Who he was we are not told, but it is suggested that he may have been the father of the family, or possibly the husband of Martha, or again that he was some village magnate, who, having a larger house than that of the three friends of Christ, permitted them to hold their feast there. We find them in the places that our previous acquaintance with them would lead us to expect. Martha, as before, is preparing the meal: Mary is thinking how best she can show her love to her Lord, and Lazarus is at the table in the position befitting his distinction of an unparalleled experience. During the feast Mary approached him with her costly gift and at the opportune moment poured the ointment on his head, attracting the attention of the whole company on herself. There would be a moment or two of distress while she was being blamed, but when he for whom she had sacrificed her treasure came to her defence and commended her act, her heart would be filled with grateful love.

Martha served. She was in her usual place. The time had been when she had felt it as a grievance that her sister left the duty to her (Luke 10: 40); but doubtless the lesson Christ taught her on that occasion had removed all such feelings. Her part was good, and it, too, was an expression of affection, but Christ said the part Mary had chosen was better. Both had the spirit of service—the desire to do what they could. The Emperor of Austria was one day walking in the suburbs of Vienna unattended, as his custom was. A hack-driver passed him and a few yards further on came to a sudden stop. His horse balked, and when the driver whipped him he began to kick. Francis Joseph instantly went to the man's assistance and aided in subduing the vicious animal. When the horse was again in motion, the driver, who had no property in the world but his horse and hack, was anxious to show his gratitude to his unknown helper. "I would like to pay you for your kindness," he said, "but I have no money. If you will step into the carriage, though, I will drive you anywhere you want to go and will not charge you a single kreutzer." His offer was not much to make to an emperor, but it was his best.

Ointment of Spikenard. This was a perfume highly prized in the east. It appears to have been a fluid rather than an ointment. It is said to have been extracted from a rare plant, of the valerian family, and to have required many of the plants to yield a very small quantity of the extract. Spikenard is mentioned by Horace, who, writing to Virgil, to invite him to a banquet, expressed the wish that his guests would bring a little spikenard which he promised to match as an equivalent, with a cask of wine. Mary had a whole pound of this precious perfume, and Judas, who was probably an excellent judge of values, valued it at three hundred pence, which by the usual standard of comparison—the rate of wages—was equivalent to three hundred dollars of our money. This treasure Mary willingly sacrificed to honor her Lord. The following is the story of the sacrifice of a less valuable treasure from the same motive: Some one had given a boy a bowl of goldfish. Nothing could have given him so much pleasure. He spent hours in watching them and attending to them. One day his father, returning from business, missed the bowl from its place. Inquiring what had become of it, he was told that the boy had run out for a neighbor to help his mother, who had cut her hand very badly. The neighbor came, bound up the wound and quieted the hysterical woman. As she went away, after spending an hour in her ministration, she stayed to admire the goldfish, and said how fond she was of goldfish. Instantly the boy gave them to her. "Why did you do it?" the father asked him. "Oh, well, she had been very good to mamma," he said, "and I had nothing else to give."

Given to the poor. There was a plausibility about this complaint that is familiar to modern ears. The poor did need help in those days, as they do now, and Jesus, in many ways, commended any help extended to them. But the complaint was not genuine. Ruskin had occasion to reprove the same plea. It was urged that money spent in the adornment of a certain church would have been better spent in the relief of the poor. It was a wrong comparison, Ruskin urged. It was not a question of the poor, the claims of whom were indisputable. It was a question of the homes in which the givers lived. If they lived in beautiful houses, surely they ought to see that God's house was beautiful, too. They ought not to neglect the poor, but it would be a genuine reproach if God's house was not as beautiful as their own. They should make it so, not by stinting their gifts to the poor, but by diminishing the outlay on their own houses.

The Windsor Hotel Holocaust

ONE of the most appalling hotel fires ever known in New York occurred in that city on the afternoon of March 17. At three o'clock, an hour when the thoroughfares in the immediate neighborhood of the Windsor Hotel, on Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Streets and Fifth Avenue, were crowded with fully 25,000 persons watching a holiday parade, the great hotel was discovered to be on fire. Although the alarm was instantly given, the crowds of guests and sightseers who filled the hotel windows watching the procession, scarcely had time to reach the street before the building seem to be filled with smoke and flying sparks. Before the firemen arrived, one of the hotel elevators had fallen, filling the halls and corridors with a hot, dense, impenetrable smoke. Meanwhile scenes of painful excitement were taking place on the upper floors, where many persons were cut off from escape by the fire. Men and women appeared at the windows, frantically calling for help. Some were saved by ropes, by the firemen's ladders and by fire-escapes, and a number of heroic rescues are recorded; but there were many not so fortunate. Some clung to the window sills and cornices, only to find death a moment later on the stony sidewalk below; others, mad with terror, plunged headlong to the street, either to instant death or mortal injury. Several women were seen at upper windows, appealing pitifully for help. They stood a moment, a lurid background of flame revealing them distinctly before they fell backward into the roaring furnace. Others ran hither and thither in aimless confusion, only to finally disappear, while the horror-stricken crowds below shuddered and moaned. Within half an hour after the fire started, the entire upper part of the hotel was ablaze. The firemen fought heroically, but the great structure was doomed. Soon the roof fell in with a crash, and the bare walls stood sentinels over the blazing pile, in which lay many victims. At five o'clock, the Windsor, once the greatest of American hotels, was a smoking ruin. Some of the injured were taken to the residence of Miss Helen Gould nearby, she having kindly turned her parlor into an hospital. Other good neighbors followed her Samaritan example. Many were taken to the city hospitals. Within twenty-four hours after the fire, sixteen dead bodies were found, and as sixty-five persons are known to be missing, it is feared that the search of the heap of debris will bring many terrible revelations. Twelve hundred men are now at work on the ruins. The injured, in hospitals and elsewhere, number fifty-seven, of whom several may die. For thirty years the Windsor has been a hostelry of more than national fame. Its register showed 212 guests at the time of the fire. Among the guests were Mrs. Abner McKinley, her daughter Mabel and President McKinley's sister, Helen, all of whom fortunately escaped. Mrs Leland, wife of the proprietor of the hotel, perished in the flames, with her daughter and two other relatives. Proprietor Leland, who estimates the loss on the hotel at $1,250,000, believes that the fire originated in the Windsor's double roof; but others assert that the presence of thieves during the panic, looting the guests' rooms and securing much valuable jewelry, indicates that the fire may have been the deliberate work of incendiaries, bent on robbery. The losses of the Windsor's patrons in jewelry, securities and other property will reach $750,000, very little of which may be recovered. The money loss, however, is the least part of the horror. It is of the poor creatures who, in one brief moment, lost their lives, that the public thinks with sympathy and compassion. The calamity has one message to all, and that is the lesson of preparation for death, lest it be said of any as of those whom the last great catastrophe will find unprepared:

When they shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh (1. Thess. 5: 3).

THE GREAT FIRE AT THE WINDSOR HOTEL NEW YORK

A Midnight Celebration

A strange scene was witnessed in a cemetery at Reading, Pa., on March 17, at midnight. Some months ago, a saloonkeeper of Irish birth died and was buried there. He had been very popular among his countrymen who live in the city, and had a large number of friends, some of whom were prominent in politics. His last request was that every year, on St. Patrick's Day, four of his friends should come to his grave at midnight, and, with bugle, cornet and clarionet, play a number of Irish airs. He also wanted a clay pipe stuck into the turf at the head of his grave and a pouch of tobacco placed beside it. His friends did not forget his wish, and, on St. Patrick's Day, four men, who had been intimate with him in his life, agreed to carry out his request. Punctually when the clocks were striking twelve they stood around his grave with the hired musicians: the pipe and tobacco were laid on the grave, and the silence was broken by the strains of the "Trumpet Call," "Lakes of Killarney," "Ireland Is My Home," "Lass of Galway" and "Irish National Hymn." It is strange that such a request should have been made. One would have thought that even a child would have known that smoking and such music and the things which gratify our physical nature, could be of no service after that nature was laid in the grave. But there are many who understand this, who do not draw the legitimate conclusion that as the soul survives the body, its welfare is of infinitely greater importance, and that its happiness can be secured only by cultivating here the things which it can enjoy after death.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth; for ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God (Col. 3: 2).

A Train in Peril

A press dispatch from Fort Scott, Kan., describes a peculiar accident which occurred near Pittsburg, Kan., recently. A south-bound passenger train on the Kansas City & San Francisco road was slowing up for a railroad crossing when the roadbed for a distance of sixty feet started to give way under the engine and train. When the engineer felt the engine going down, he put on a full head of steam, and, as the rails held together, he succeeded in pulling the entire train out of the hole and up to solid ground. Upon examination it was found that the roadbed was over a mine, and that the ground had sunk to a distance of six feet below the road level. Had the train been running fast when the cave-in occurred, it would probably have been derailed. As it was, the trainmen cannot see why the entire train did not pile up in the hole. The vicinity where the accident occurred is undermined by the vast drifts that have been run for coal. The passengers were all badly frightened as the cars sank, but no one was injured. They owe their lives to the presence of mind of the engineer, who, finding the ground sinking beneath the train, pushed on with all speed to firm ground. Many a man has had reason after a season of doubt or of wandering, like the Psalmist, to thank God for a similar deliverance.

He brought me up out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay and set my feet upon a rock and established my goings (Ps. 40: 2).

Derelicts on the Mississippi

Complaints have reached the government officers connected with the Dock Commission of a practice which is a source of danger to steamers on the Mississippi. It is that of allowing vessels to drift down the river without control. The trouble is due mainly to drifting coal barges, which are turned loose in the river at the stream's mercy. These barges come down from some upper river point laden with coal, but under the control of a powerful tug. They land on the bank opposite some plantation and the coal they contain is sold. The barges are of no value afterward and are usually sold for firewood. If firewood is cheap or abundant where they have landed, they are not deemed worth cutting up and are turned loose like worn-out horses to go their own way. This, however, is extremely dangerous to the river craft below. The barges are heavy, and with the current of the Mississippi behind them are like so many rams. They are without control of any kind, and without lights, so that the steamers cannot see them coming. Tossed about by the waves, they frequently run ashore, knocking holes in the vessels landed or anchored there. There have been a number of accidents lately due to collision with these derelicts. It is essential to the security of other shipping that the derelicts should be destroyed, and that the firms who are casting them loose should be restrained from continuing the evil practice. Unhappily, there is similar danger from human derelicts, who, not being under divine control, wreck other voyagers on the ocean of life. Many a soul has been lost by coming in contact with these depraved men and women. But it is not with them as with the boats, necessary that they should be destroyed. As many a notable example proves, they may be rescued and sent out to rescue others:

And such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified (1. Cor. 6: 11).

BRIEF NOTES

The New York Rescue Band, which is engaged in the rescue of fallen women, has transferred its headquarters from 256 West Thirty-ninth Street to 313 West Fifty-third Street, where women are received until they are permanently settled. Miss A. N. Smith and Miss E. J. Post are in charge of the home.

Rev. Francis G. Penzotti, formerly agent of the American Bible Society, who was imprisoned at Lima, Peru, for Christ's sake, has been directed to commence work in Cuba as speedily as possible.

The income of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel which was established in 1701, and is one of the oldest missionary societies in the world, amounted last year to $1,587,560, the highest it has ever received in any year.

A memorial to both Houses of Congress is in preparation from the Christian Endeavor Society urging the speedy organization of an International Tribunal of Arbitration, and the cordial co-operation with the Emperor of Russia in the disarmament conference.

Rev. Milton S. Rees, of Elmira, N. Y., who has been conducting evangelistic services in New England, Ohio and Pennsylvania, has arranged to take a tour in Egypt, Palestine and Greece. He expects to return in time to resume evangelistic labor in September.

The American Bible Society finds that no less than ten languages are spoken in the Philippine Islands. Into none of them has the Bible been translated, though, in one instance, the Pangasinian, which is spoken by 300,000 persons, the New Testament has been translated. Two others have one or two of the Gospels.

The "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union is the new name taken by the Congo Balolo Mission and the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions. The two organizations now combined are under a board of trustees, with Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, his son, and Rev. F. B. Meyer as directors. They will give special attention to Berar, India, which is a field hitherto somewhat neglected.

The Yale Missionary Band gave six days to Brooklyn during their recent visit to New York State. They began with a service at the Central Presbyterian Church, and ended with a final rally at the Hanson Place Baptist Church. There were daily conferences in different parts of the city, as well as evening meetings in the churches.

A striking testimony to the effect of religion in the army was given recently by Sir William Gatacre, a distinguished General in the English service. He said that there were 30,000 Methodists in the army, and he and his brother officers wished there were more, because they were always devoted to their duty and had a keen sense of what was right.

The National Good Citizenship League will hold its third annual convention at Cincinnati, May 2-4. Several well-known speakers have promised papers on subjects for which the League is working. Several hours each day will be left open for free discussion. All particulars may be obtained from the Secretary of the League, Mr. S. T. Nicholson, Washington, D. C.

Rev. Samuel Colcord's addresses on Infidelity, showing the weakness of the arguments of its leading champion, are being well received wherever they are delivered. At Piqua, O., there were large audiences. The secretary of the Y. M. C. A. there said there were three noteworthy facts about them: First, more were present than were ever in the building at one time before; second, more men of prominence than could often be found in one audience; and third, the unusual number of non-churchgoers. Among the cities Mr. Colcord has visited and delivered his lecture this month are: Dayton, O.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Terre Haute, Ind.; Greenville, Ill., and St. Louis, Mo. Letters addressed to Mr. Colcord at this office will be forwarded to him.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

The Easter Festiva

Easter Customs the World Over—Egg-Rolling On the White House Lawn—Easter Toys

CHRISTENDOM has three great festivals, Thanksgiving or harvest-home, Christmas, and Easter. Easter is a survival in the Christian Church of the Jewish Feast of the Passover—still observed by orthodox Hebrews throughout the world. The Anglo-Saxons had a goddess of spring, Ostara, and they marked the fourth month, Ostara's month, with feast, and song, and pagan rite of worship. In fact, all the old heathen mythologies show that the awakening of nature in bursting blossoms and song of birds was greeted with joyous religious ritual by these blind peoples' feeling after the true God and the truth. They celebrated the awakening of the earth; Christianity celebrates the resurrection of man.

Modern customs of Christendom are full of interest, from the almost pagan pomp and ceremony of the Catholic Church at Rome, and the Greek Church at St. Petersburg, to the simple prayer and song service of a little American Sunday School on the frontier.

In all countries, coloring of Easter or Pasch eggs has become a great industry; as has also the provision of new and novel Easter toys. The toy tables of big department stores in our large cities are enough to make grown folks want to go playing. Such dear little, silly, wise-looking rabbits are hitched with blue ribbons to chariots, lined with green moss and loaded with marvelous eggs! What soft little fluffy baa-sheep are harnessed to another chariot with a ridiculous rabbit perched up as driver! What dear little fuzzy ducks and chickens and impossible eggs everywhere! After school hours, mammas and little people crowd around the tables; kind saleswomen show off accomplishments of make-believe chickens, sheep and rabbits that cluck, baa and hop, and everybody has a good time whether they can buy or not gay eggs and pretty toys.

EGG-ROLLING ON THE WHITE HOUSE LAWN—EASTER MONDAY

For children in Washington, there is the annual Easter treat of egg-rolling on the lawn at the White House. Egg rolling on public greens is a custom borrowed from Europe, where Easter games on parks and commons is childhood's ancient privilege. Our President and his wife show the little folks some attention, and altogether the small American is a person of fortune and consequence on Easter Monday. In Charleston, South Carolina, a beautiful feature of Easter is "The Changed Cross" in an old historic church. The cross has holes in it; it stands dark and gloomy-looking. Persons entering stick flowers into the holes, and presently the cross is a glowing, fragrant monument of beauty! In a Protestant church in a certain city, where the decoration of the chancel and altar was accomplished in much the same way, the privilege was enfirely that of the children of the church and the mission Sunday Schools; the flowers went afterward to hospitals. One Sunday, Bishop, rector and curate stood in their places, white-robed choristers behind them. The long line of children entered singing, each child bearing a tribute of flowers which was laid on the altar. Along with this gay flower-burdened throng, his feet bare, his hands scratched and bleeding, came a little ragged waif. He fell into line, and nobody put him out. He brought a scraggy bough of cedar and a bit of brier-vine. These he deposited with quite a conscious air of pride; and something like an audible titter pervaded the neighborhood, until the good old Bishop lifted the cedar and thorny vine, and said, "The widow's mite!" laying his hand kindly on the head of the wondering child, who had paused blushing and confused.

New York's Indian Teacher

Falling Star, an Indian woman, has recently been in request among standard educational institutions in New York and Brooklyn. She teaches advanced kindergarteners the art of basket-weaving as practiced by Indians; also how to make birchbark trifles, and she tells pretty stories of Indian lore. Her mother and little sister up in the Adirondacks gather sweet grass and prepare the stalks; these and birch bark and the woods needed for bows and arrows they send to Falling Star. The little home cabin is at Lake Luzan, and thither visitors are wont to come and buy articles of Indian workmanship. Educators seem to be awakening to the fact that some arts which the Indians possessed should not be lost.

"Little Mothers"

One of the topics of discussion at the last meeting of the New York City Mothers' Club was the "little mothers," and ways to help them. "Little mothers" are the children who take care of smaller children. Everybody familiar with slum work in large cities understands the term. In New York's tenement sections you see them sitting on the curbs—often at the entrance of a saloon—little, bent creatures carrying a smaller brother or sister, keeping loving and loyal watch, and foregoing for themselves all care-free, childish play. There are "little fathers," too—just as pale, bent, patient, self-sacrificing and loyal. Many "little fathers" and "little mothers" were at our Children's Home last summer, relieved for a time of a burden they were too young to bear. Others brought along the wee sister or brother, still the object of their watchful oversight, although big enough to run around. Some of those who cooperate with us in fresh-air work have sent contributions especially for the "little mothers" and "little fathers."

Women in Africa

Among most African nations, common law allows a man to kill his wife if she displeases him; but he is subject to no such penalty at her hands or those of her kindred. The kindred of the slain woman may demand restitution in the currency of the country; a woman's life is always valued in currency, but if a man murders a man, common law demands that he be killed. A wife or daughter, but not a son or brother, may be given in payment for debt. A widow has no property rights; her huband's possessions are distributed by his people. A woman can be expelled by her husband from her home and country for offence (quarreling or theft are causes sufficient), but a man may not be so treated for any crime. And yet some people say that it is not incumbent upon civilized nations to establish foreign missions in benighted lands.

"Poi," Hawaii's National Dish

The root of the taro plant furnishes the dish, which is to the Hawaiian what potatoes are to the Irishman and porridge to the Scotchman. Poi is quite as healthful as Scotch porridge and Irish potatoes. It is made from the turnip-like root of the taro plant, which is baked, pounded and made into paste. The Hawaiian can eat poi daintily without a spoon; it is somewhat adhesive. He touches two forefingers lightly to the surface of the dish; a pendulous globule adheres and drops by its own weight on the tongue. A Hawaiian baby takes to poi naturally, murmuring between drops. "Mili, mili" (good, good). Roast dog used to divide honors with poi, but missionaries soon persuaded Hawaiians to drop this and other barbarous customs. Charles B. Stuart says of the Hawaiian:

His improvement has been a rare example of civilization without bloodshed. In Hawaii the savage has been handed over as a good citizen directly from the hands of the missionary to a membership in the best government on earth. This is largely due to the fact that American missionaries were first in the field.

A Child's Missionary Hymn

O LITTLE [illegible]
[illegible]
And try to turn your night to day,
And help you find our Jesus.

[illegible]
We'll send you of our little store
And tell you of our Jesus.

[illegible]
As to your gods of stone you pray,
[illegible]
Help you to know, and love, and praise
[illegible]
Our faithful, loving Jesus.

The First Flowers

ALL [illegible] of the [illegible] are flowers to talk about at [illegible]. They are the flowers that, breathing of nature's resurrection from winter's long sleep, seem promises of our own. In a woodland ramble through beach and maple and oak and chestnut, we find tender little [illegible] by ferns," the children call them—under shadow of wet rocks where brooklets bubble. Hard by, an early night-shade puts forth a single white blossom. A few dandelions add golden treasure to our basket of pretty things; and here is the snow-white, yellow-hearted flower of the bloodroot, whose juice makes a blood-red stain with which the Indians used to paint their faces.

Here is the white-flowering Juneberry; Indians called it serviceberry because they used its fruit in their cooking. Maybe there is a spice-bush also waiting for us to find it. Revolutionary housewives found its powdered berries a fair substitute for spice, and its leaves have been handy for tea-making. Here, of course, are the ragged leaves and lovely blossoms of the liverwort. "White Hearts," "dog tooth violets" and "Jack-in-the-Pulpits" are ready. An old legend says that the purplish stains of the latter were caused when, at the Crucifixion, drops of the Saviour's blood fell on the plant. These bur-marigolds and water-marigolds came in March. Along the roadside are a lot of little yellow blossoms, about which Wordsworth sang:

There's a flower that shall be mine—
'Tis the little celandine.

Under the pines, where foliage is scant and the sun shines broadly through, we find patches of golden-brown and golden-green moss, and myriads of blue forget-me-nots—that dearest of our wild flowers, about which a poet weaves this story:

When to the flowers so beautiful
The Father gave a name,
[illegible]
All-timidly it came;
And, standing at the Father's feet
And gazing in his face, it said:
"Dear Lord, the name thou gavest me—
[illegible]
Kindly the Father looked him down
And said, "Forget-Me-not."

For Daughters of the Poor

The Pascal Institute, 576 Lexington Avenue, New York City, was opened last December, for the purpose of offering industrial instruction free to girls whose parents could not afford to pay for the same and to support them while they are receiving it. Many availed themselves of this offer at once, and classes were formed in plain sewing and dress-making. There is at present a list of forty applicants waiting until accommodations are extended. Departments in domestic science, to be opened next autumn, will doubtless be crowded. The rapidity with which all opportunities for industrial instruction is seized by daughters of the poor is abundant evidence of the need of them.

Spain's Chastisement

The United States an Instrument Used of God for Righteous Retribution on a Degenerate Nation

BY REV. HENRY VARLEY *

THE year 1898 was always likely to be memorable. The students of prophecy have again had their reward. A consensus of testimony based upon the study of the prophetic Scriptures pointed out the end of "the times of the Gentiles" as being identified with the latest years of this century, or possibly with the first decade of the next. We have shared in that widespread conviction. We know the time has arrived when "delay shall be no longer." "For yet a little while and he that shall come will come and will not tarry."

The national life of the kingdoms of the world is rapidly ripening for judgment. The great year of the world's experience permitted by God in order to test whether national life would be established in righteousness by the "Great Powers" has reached its autumn season. It is no longer the world's springtide or summer, these have passed. The harvest of the earth for this evil age has come, and the reaping is at hand.

The incipient stages of this tremendous judgment have had a foreshadowing in the startling events of the year just closed. "Peace, peace," among the nations was the heralded message when the year 1898 began. From the politician's outlook, who could have surmised the happenings which have had place since January of last year dawned upon the world? It is not too much to affirm that the Europe and America of 1897 no longer exist.

We have no hesitation in affirming that the time for the national judgment of Spain, France and Turkey is fully come, and that the United States has been the sharp sword of God in regard to the execution of his righteous indignation and wrath upon Spain, which was for centuries the home of the horrible "Inquisition" where untold thousands of God's saints have been cruelly tortured and slain. The time was bound to come when the retributive judgment of God should tell his estimate of such terrible crimes as these.

But who would have supposed that the United States was to become God's instrument to this result? It may well be written again:

> The wheels of God grind slowly,
> But they grind exceedingly small.

The cry of oppressed Cuba, near enough to be heard, was joined by God's overruling providence with the distant and unheard groan of the Eastern Philippines. The oppression in Cuba was mainly of a civil sort. That of the Philippines was not only civil, but one of a tyrannical ecclesiasticism.

Four brief months sufficed for the United States to deal such crushing blows that Spain's strong navy was practically destroyed and her colonial armies shut up to absolute surrender. Four brief months, and Spain's colonial possessions passed from her possession for ever.

We do not believe that this success or these results can be traced wholly to the efficiency and power of the United States. It is the hand of God that has visited Spain with retributive judgment.

It has been so much the custom in Europe to leave the United States out in the reckoning of the Great Powers that the awakening which has come marks the arrival of an entirely new era. Russia, Germany, France—indeed, the whole of Europe—have seen suddenly the advent of a force which they have to reckon with. The United States henceforth takes her place amongst the foremost of the world's Powers.

Russian ambition has received a needed and salutary check. Germany has heard also, and will not fail to heed the voice of the great Western Republic which contains such a vast proportion of the noble and reliable Teutonic stock. France specially will be checked in her volatile and restless tendencies to disturb the peace of Europe. The voice that raised the question of European intervention on behalf of Spain and against the United States is not likely to be repeated. In our judgment, the victories of the United States have had far wider issues than those yet recognized. Turkey, we believe, will never again attempt Armenian massacres or the destruction of the life and properties of the heroic band of American or any other missionaries. Abdul Hamid and the unspeakable Turk have heard of the Oregon, the New York, and a strong host of naval vessels, commanders and heroic men. The tremendous voice of the United States naval ordnance will do more to inspire the cruel and blood-thirsty Turk with wholesome dread of consequences than the combined voices of Europe's Great Powers that dared not move at the time of the Armenian massacres because of mutual jealousies, he lived. The former conversation, or conduct, should, like a garment, be "put off," as the apostle phrases it, and the new man be "put on." That is, his outward life should correspond with his new nature, should be the expression of it. This is the Christ-life which is the life the renewed man ought to live. "It is the creation," as the apostle says, of righteousness and true holiness. Now, reformation, which before the renewal of heart seemed impossible, is a privilege placed within the reach of the believer. He enters on the possession of unlimited power, and grace may be had for every daily need. The holy garment that he puts on is the robe of Christ's righteousness which separates him from the impurity and pollution among which he must walk. It is not of his own making, but is given to him as a token and privilege of sonship.

HOLY GARMENTS

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 9. Eph. 4: 20-24; Rom. 6: 4

WHEN a man proposes to become a Christian, he frequently begins by an attempt to reform his life. He determines that he will give up evil company, that he will cure this or that bad habit, and amend his life in many ways. He thinks that then he will be in a better condition to come to Christ. He supposes that Christ will be more willing to welcome him, if he has already begun the process of self-reformation. Too many find this process so difficult, and fail in it so utterly, that they never come to Christ at all. They are the victims of a mistake. There is no mistake about the necessity of "cleaning up;" a pure life is required of every Christian, but it is a mistake to think that it is the first step. The "holy garment" is to be put on, not to cover evil and corruption, but as the suitable attire of a cleansed man. The outward life is reformed after the heart is renewed, not before. The first step of the man conscious of depravity and desiring reformation, must be to Christ; afterwards, when he has been born again, he will have the strength to reform his life. To begin the other way, by outward reformation, is to institute a system of repression, in which the evil is not eliminated, but held under and restrained, and is always more or less restive under control.

An apt illustration of this truth is used by Mr. Moody in one of his sermons. It is that of a man settling in a new neighborhood. A neighbor calls upon him and cautions him against using the drinking-water from a certain well. It contains fever-germs. The family who formerly lived there, drank that water and they lost one or two children from typhoid. The newcomer examines the water, and finally decides that the right thing to do, is to paint the pump and put it in good repair. "Not so," says the neighbor, "the right thing to do is to dig elsewhere and get pure water." The right thing for a man to do, whose life is wrong, is to get a new heart.

But the holy garment is necessary. The man whose heart has been cleansed should have nothing more to do with the evil among which

CANAL IN THE CITY OF MANILA

OUR campaign in the Philippines is rapidly nearing a culmination. Soon after the arrival of reinforcements last month, Maj.-Gen. Otis began a series of aggressive operations, which speedily resulted in the dismemberment of Aguinaldo's army and the breaking up of his power as Military Dictator. Gen. Otis' first step was to secure control of the waterworks which supply the city of Manila, and this was accomplished after a sharp struggle, in which the enemy was severely punished. Next came the discovery of a startling plot for a native uprising in the city itself, the purpose of the plotters being to massacre the Americans. This bold scheme was effectively checked and the city's peace secured, although the baffled plotters succeeded in destroying considerable property by means of incendiary fires. Driven from point to point, and compelled to evacuate village after village in rapid succession, the insurgents still showed a bold front, and after each retreat returned in increased numbers to harass the American outposts. Firing was incessant, day and night. On March 12, Gen. Wheaton, commanding a strong force of infantry, artillery and cavalry, began a general forward movement with the object of dividing the Filipino army in two, and ultimately capturing Malolos, the insurgent capital. With the assistance of an improvised gunboat, many villages along the Pasig river were taken in rapid succession, and with little loss to the attacking column.

The important town of Pasig was shelled and captured after a battle lasting several hours, and following up this success, Pateros and Taguig, two other Filipino entrenched strongholds, were seized and the former burned. In these engagements it is estimated that our troops were opposed to a force of nearly four thousand insurgents. Two American soldiers were killed and fourteen wounded, while the enemy lost 400 in killed, besides a large number wounded and 363 prisoners. At one point along the Pasig river, fifty canoes, with supplies for the enemy were captured by our troops, together with 150 prisoners.

Advancing from Pasig, a battalion of the Twentieth Infantry pursued the flying Filipinos to Taytay, which was taken and burned. Another town, Cainta, where Aguinaldo's troops opened a hot fire from entrenchments, was also captured.

On March 19, ten more villages were destroyed, and over 200 Filipinos killed in a battle which resulted in an American loss of seven killed and thirty wounded. This last engagement put us in possession of the entire line between Manila and Laguna de Bay, the enemy's army being cut in two. There is therefore ground for hope that the war will soon terminate in the surrender of the insurgents.

In this issue, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is fortunate in being enabled to present a remarkably interesting and entirely new series of photographs from the Philippines. These illustrations, which appear exclusively in this journal, are from negatives taken by Corporal Robbins, of the Astor Battery, recently returned from Manila. They are now rendered doubly important by the fact that almost every locality shown has recently been the scene of hot fighting. Every foot of ground along the Manila canals has been contested; the streets of the city swarmed with natives during the recent rising to "exterminate the Americans;" the docks along the Pasig River have been rifle and cannon-swept, and the stream itself has engulfed many lives. Some of the illustrations show types of the insurgents and their homes. Others reveal the antiquated character of the defences of Manila, its great wall and its batteries of six-pounders—no longer Spain's, but ours. A group that will attract the reader's attention is that which represents the Spanish prisoners at mess. These are some of the men whose release Spain is now endeavoring to secure by every means in her power.

There is happily a prospect that the present war will be a brief one. Aguinaldo, to gain his personal ambition of becoming president and dictator, deliberately plunged his country into the war and precipitated hostilities. After the series of reverses he has encountered, with his army cut in two and his capital in danger of capture, it is improbable that the misguided Filipinos will continue much longer to follow his standard. Already many have deserted him, and, throwing their weapons into the Pasig River, have surrendered to the Americans. He has repeatedly resorted to false claims of victory, in order to raise the drooping spirits of his followers, and has boasted of holding hundreds of American prisoners, when he had not made a solitary capture. Several of the important islands of the Philippine group, including Negros, Cebu, Samar and Leyte, have given in their loyal adhesion to the United States, and are now occupied by our troops, while others are ready to follow their example.

SPANISH PRISONERS AT MESS IN THE MANILA BARRACKS

There is little doubt that a very large proportion of the natives, especially the more intelligent classes, are heartily tired of the incessant wars of the past and would welcome peace and American control. Like the Cubans, the Filipinos look forward hopefully to ultimate independence. While Aguinaldo, by persistent misrepresentation of the purposes of the United States, has induced many of the more ignorant to regard Americans as their enemies and as worse oppressors than Spain, the best element welcomes the new power which has driven Spain from the Asiatic archipelago, and relieved the oppression of centuries. They recognize the fact that the introduction of western civilization and religious freedom will be a blessing to the islands and they will hail the day when the last Filipino combatant lays down his arms and greets the Americans, not as conquerors, but as allies and friends—instruments in the hands of Omnipotence to raise the benighted and neglected people to the full stature of a free and enlightened nation.

Luzon, the scene of the most important of our military operations in the Philippines, is an island 42,000 square miles in extent, or about one-third of the entire archipelago. Its river and lake system is extensive, the largest body of fresh water being the Laguna de Bay, twenty-five miles long and twenty-one miles in breadth, which empties into Manila Bay by the Pasig River. Luzon's population is probably in the neighborhood of five million souls, divided into many tribes, the principal being the Tagalogs and Ilocanos. Both these tribes are partially civilized, and the Tagalogs, who have opposed the fiercest resistance to the American advance, are among the finest physical specimens in the islands, physically and mentally. There are also some Negritos in Luzon, relics of the rapidly disappearing aborigines. The Igorrotes are an almost wholly savage tribe of hill men, and are head-hunters.

Another important, though smaller, island is Mindoro, south of Manila Bay. Its people are described as unfriendly, its rainfall as exceedingly heavy, its miasma as deadly, and its head-hunters wary and skilful. The Mangyans, a tribe of almost naked savages, living in the interior, have been pictured as being both head hunters and cannibals, but recent travelers found them a simple and almost inoffensive people. The Mangyans are fatalists. They have no idea of a future life or of rewards or punishments for good or evil deeds. Children marry at eight years of age, but there is no marriage ceremony, and a man may have as many wives as he can support. Physically they are remarkably strong, and even the women can carry heavy loads.

CHAPTER XXV

SWEET beyond expression to Evadne was the testimony Marion had given. If, as Marion said, her life was such as to convince Louis that there was power in religion, how devoutly thankful she must be. With a heart overflowing with happiness Evadne went downstairs to join the family at luncheon. And there was another cause for elation. That afternoon she was going to give such a pleasure to Gretchen and little Hans. It was beautiful to be able to give pleasure to people—she could fancy how Gretchen's eyes would glisten as she talked to her in her mother tongue, while little Hans' shyness would vanish under the genial influence of Pompey's sympathetic companionship, and he would clap his hands with delight as Brutus and Cæsar drew them noiselessly under the arches of evergreen beauty, bending low beneath their ermine robes, while the silver bells broke the hush of silence which dwelt among the forest halls with a subdued melody, and then rang out joyously as they emerged into the open, where the sun shone bright, and clothed denuded trees and twigs in the bewitching beauty of silver sheen. It would always seem to little Hans like a dream of fairyland, and she would be remembered as his fairy godmother. It was a pleasant role—that of a fairy god mother.

She started, for Louis was saying carelessly to the servant,—

"Tell Pompey to have the sleigh ready by half-past two, sharp."

"Why Louis!" she spoke as if in a dream. "I am going to have the sleigh this afternoon."

"I am afraid not, Coz," said Louis lightly, "as probably we are going in different directions."

"I am going to the Park," stammered Evadne, "with little Hans and Gretchen."

"Exactly, and I to the club grounds. Diametrically opposite, you see."

"But Uncle Lawrence promised me. He said no one wanted the sleigh this afternoon —"

"The Judge should not allow himself to jump at such hasty conclusions. His legal caution seems to have been at fault for once. I wonder he should have ventured to speak for others as well as himself."

"But poor little Hans will be so disappointed! He has been looking forward to it for weeks!"

"Disappointed! My dear Coz, oh no! The placid Teutonic mind is impervious to anything so unphilosophical. But if he is disappointed, it will do him good. It will teach him the truth of the adage that 'there is many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip' and in the future he will not be so foolish as to 'look forward' to anything."

Evadne's lips quivered. "You are cruel," she said, "to shut out the sunlight from a poor little crippled child!"

"My dear Coz, I give you my word of honor I am sorry. But there is nothing to make a fuss about. Any other day will suit your little beggar just as well. I promised some of the fellows to drive them out, and a Hildreth cannot break his word you know."

"You have made me break mine," said Evadne sadly, as she passed him to go upstairs.

"Ah, you are a woman," said Louis coolly, "that alters everything."

"Did it alter everything?" Evadne was pacing her floor with flashing eyes. "Was there one rule of honor for Louis, another for herself? No! No! No! How perfectly hateful he is!" and she stamped her foot with sudden passion. "I despise him!"

Suddenly she fell on her knees beside the lounge and cowered among its cushions, while the eyes of the Christ, reproachfully tender, seemed to pierce her very soul. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you. That ye may be the children of your Father in heaven, for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."

The sorrowful tones in her spiritual ear seemed to crush her into the earth. Was this her Christ-likeness? And she had let Marion say she was better than them all! What if she or Louis were to see her now! He would say again as he had said before "There is not much of the 'meek and lowly' in evidence at present." "And he would be right!" she cried remorsefully. "Oh, Jesus Christ is this the way I am following thee!"

"You do right to feel annoyed," argued self. "It hurts you to have to disappoint Gretchen and Hans."

"It is your own pride that is hurt," answered her inexorable conscience. "You wanted to pose as a Lady Bountiful. It is humiliating to let these poor people see that you are of no consequence in your uncle's house. It is not what you do, but what you are that proves your kinship with the Lord."

It was a very humble Evadne who, late in the afternoon, walked slowly towards the German quarter.

"I am very sorry," she said quietly, when she reached the spotless rooms where Gretchen made a home for her crippled brother. "My cousin had made arrangements to use the sleigh this afternoon, so we could not have our drive. I am very sorry."

And they put their own disappointment out of sight—these kindly German folk—and tried to make her think they cared as little as if they were used to driving every day.

"Did you notice, Gretchen," said little Hans, after Evadne had left them, "how sweet our Fraulein was this afternoon? But her eyes looked as if she had been crying. Do you suppose she had?"

"I think, Hans," said Gretchen slowly, "our Fraulein is learning to dwell where God wipes all the tears away."

"Are your eyes no better, Frau Himmel?" Evadne was saying gently, as she shook hands with another friend who was patiently learning the bitter truth that she would never be able to see her beloved Fatherland again. "Are the doctors quite sure that nothing can be done?"

"Quite sure, Fraulein Hildreth," answered the woman, with a smile. "But there is one glorious hope they can't take from me."

"A hope—when you are blind, Frau Himmel! What can it be?"

"This, dear Fraulein," and the look on the patient face was beautiful to see. "'Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off.'"

And Evadne, walking homeward, repeated the words which she had read that morning with but a dim perception of their meaning: "If limitation is power that shall be, if calamities, opposition and weights are wings and means, we are reconciled!"

She extended her walk, turning on her own thought the best phrases in which to present to her uncle a decision which during the past weeks had been taking shape in her mind. On reaching home she went direct to him and said: "Uncle Lawrence, with your permission, I am going to study to be a nurse."

Judge Hildreth started. So light had been the footsteps and so deeply had he been absorbed in thought, he had not heard his niece enter the library and cross the room until she stood before his desk. Very fair was the picture which his eyes rested upon. What made his brows contract as if something hurt him in the sight?

Evadne Hildreth was in all the sweetness of her young womanhood. She was not beautiful, not even pretty, Isabelle said; but there was a strange fascination about her earnest face, and the wonderful gray eyes possessed a charm that was all their own. She had graduated with honors. Now she stood upon the threshold of the unknown, holding her life in her hands.

"A nurse, Evadne! My dear, you are beside yourself. 'Much learning hath made you mad.'"

"I am not mad, most noble Festus, but speak the words of truth and soberness.' I feel called to do this thing."

"Called! Who has called you, pray? We do not deal in supernaturalisms in this prosaic century." The lovely eyes glowed.

"Jesus Christ." What an exultant ring there was in her voice, and how tenderly she lingered over the name!

"Jesus Christ." Judge Hildreth repeated the words in an awestruck tone. Did she see him cower in his chair?

"You must consult your aunt," he said, in a changed voice. She noticed with a pang how old and careworn he looked.

"Kate," he called, as just then he heard his wife's step in the hall. "Come here."

"What do you wish, Lawrence?" and there was a soft frou-frou of silken draperies as Mrs. Hildreth's dress swept over the velvet carpet.

"Evadne wishes to become a nurse."

"Are you crazy?" There was a steely glitter in Mrs. Hildreth's eyes and her tones fell cold and measured on the ear.

"She says not," said the Judge, with a feeble smile.

"Why should you think so, Aunt Kate?" asked Evadne, gently. "Look how the world honors Florence Nightingale, and think how many noble women have followed her example."

"To earn your own living by the labor of your hands—a Hildreth!"

"All the people who amount to anything in the world have to work, Aunt Kate. There is nothing degrading in it."

"Just try it, and you will soon find out your mistake. If you do this thing, you will be ostracized by the world. People make a great talk about the dignity of labor, but a girl who works has no footing in polite society."

Evadne's sweet laugh fell softly through the silence. "I don't believe I have any time for society, Aunt Kate. Life seems too real to be frittered away over afternoon teas."

"Are you mad, Lawrence, to let her take this step? Think of the Hildreth honor!"

Again Judge Hildreth laughed—that strange feeble laugh!

"Evadne is of age, Kate, she must do as she thinks right. As to the rest—I think the less we say about the Hildreth honor, the better for us all."

Mrs. Hildreth swept away in a storm of wrath. Evadne followed her, leaving a soft kiss upon her uncle's brow. He was alone now. He lifted his hand to the place her lips had touched—he felt as if he had been stung—but there was no outward wound.

The Hildreth honor! The letters in the drawer at his side seemed to confront him with scorn blazing from every page. He put forth his hand with a sudden determination. He would crush their impertinent obtrusiveness under his heel. Then when their damaging evidence was buried in the dust of oblivion he would be safe and free! Evadne knew her father had left her something. He would make special mention of it in his will—a trust fund—enough to yield her maintenance, and the paltry pin money which was all the allowance he had ever seen his way clear to make his brother's child. It was not his fault he argued—he had meant to do right—but gilt-edged securities were as waste paper in the unprecedented monetary depression which was sweeping stronger men than himself to the verge of ruin. He could not foresee such a crisis. Even the Solons of Wall street had not anticipated it. It was not his fault. He had meant to make it all right in a few years. What place was that they said was paved with good intentions? He must see that everything was put in proper shape in the event of his death. People died suddenly sometimes. One never knew.

It would be safer to make re-investments. Yes, that was a good thought. He wondered it had never occurred to him before. His wisest plan was to have all securities in his own name. It would make it so much easier for the executors. It was not fair to burden any one with a business so involved as his was now. Of course he would make a mental note of just how much belonged to the brother. It would not be safe to put it on [illegible] and white—executors had such an unpleasant habit of going over one's private papers, —but he would be sure to remember, and if he ever got out of this bog, as of course he expected to do shortly, he would give Evadne back her own. It would leave him badly crippled for funds, but one must expect to make sacrifices for the sake of principle. There were these letters were destroyed they would have no clue. He frowned—what an unfortunate word for him to use!

He fitted the key in the lock and turned it—then his hand fell by his side. No, no, he had not come to that—yet! He had always held that tampering with the mails evinced the blackest turpitude. He was an honorable gentleman. He started. What was that? A long, low, blood-curdling laugh, as if a dozen mocking fiends stood at his elbow—or was it just the shrieking of the wind among the gables? It was a wild night. Could any poor beggars be without a shelter on such a night as this? How did such people live!

He caught himself dozing. He felt strangely drowsy. He straightened himself resolutely in his chair and drew a package of stock certificates from one of the secret draws of the desk. He would see about selling the stock and making re-investments to-morrow. It must be done to save the Hildreth honor.

Evadne was sleeping peacefully, all unconscious of the mental struggle in the room below, in the issue of which her interests were concerned. She had gone to rest thankful that her place in the world was settled, and that there was to be no opposition to her plan. The next morning she took steps to put it in execution, and during many weeks she studied hard to fit herself for her chosen vocation.

She saw but little of her cousins. They passed their days in pleasure—she in work: but Marion, in her rare moments of reflection, as she thought of the strangely peaceful face of the young nurse, wondered sadly whether Evadne had not chosen the better part, after all.

"Oh Louis!" Evadne cried one morning, and her voice was full of pain, "how you are wasting this beautiful life that God has given you!"

Louis stretched himself lazily in his armchair and clasped his hands behind his head. "Thanks for your high opinion, Coz. Of what special crime do I stand accused before the bar of your judgment?"

"Oh, it is nothing special, but you are just frittering away the days that might be filled with such noble work, and you have nothing to show for them but—smoke!" She swept her hand through the filmy cloud, which Louis just then blew into the air, with a gesture of disdain. "Now you will think I am preaching, but indeed, indeed I am not,—only it hurts me so!"

Louis laughed and threw away his cigar.

"No, I will not charge you with belonging to the cloth, but I confess I should like you better if you had not entrenched yourself behind such a high wall of prejudice against all the good things of this life. There is no harm in these things. You are too narrow, Evadne."

"There is no good in them. Life is so real, Louis!"

"Well, I own I am a light weight in the race. But I assure you such people are needed to balance matters. If every one was in such deadly earnest as you, Evadne, the old world would go to pieces. Now Miss Angell is much more genial. She told me the other night that she had a contempt for men who did not smoke or drink. Why can you not be as companionable, instead of reproving me?"

"It is no real kindness to make you satisfied with your lowest. I want you to rise to your best. Oh! Louis, won't you let Christ make your life grand? It would be such a happiness to me!" She laid her hand softly upon his shoulder. Louis caught it in his and drew her round in front of his chair.

"Do you really mean that, little Coz? Upon my word, it is the strongest inducement you could offer me. I feel half inclined to try, just for your sake,—only you see it would involve such a tremendous expenditure of moral force!"

Was He Martyred in Tibet?

Rev. Peter Rijnhart's Disappearance—Murdered or Imprisoned—A Plan for Rescue

A MOST thrilling story of missionary exploration, sacrifice, and possible martyrdom comes from Tibet, the "Forbidden Land," the "Sealed Land," and the "Land of Snow," as this rugged country, so hostile to missionaries and explorers, has deservedly come to be called. The story is told in the diary of Rev. Peter Rijnhart and the letters of his wife, which announce his mysterious disappearance.

REV. PETER RIJNHART

The recipient of diary and letters is Rev. T. C. Paul, of Cecil Church of Christ, Toronto, Canada. Dispatches preceding these had stated that Mr. Rijnhart was murdered, but Mr. Paul says:

My firm conviction is that Mr. Rijnhart is a prisoner. We have a scheme for liberating him if alive, I have raised a considerable sum of money for the purpose, and in conjunction with Mrs. Rijnhart, am organizing a relief party to go back to the Tibetan mountains in search of Mr. Rijnhart. The British and Dutch Consuls in China have offered assistance. Mr. Rijnhart is a Dutch subject, and his wife a Canadian.

Mr. Rijnhart is a minister of the Christian Church, and is thirty-one years old. He came to Toronto in 1889. In 1891, he made his first journey to Chinese mission fields; in 1894, his second, accompanied by his bride, a medical missionary.

Few missionaries and explorers have penetrated Tibet's interiors. Landor came back from a short sojourn in the "Forbidden Land," looking twenty years older than when he started. Fear is entertained that Mr. Rinjhart is undergoing tortures similar to those Landor endured. Tibet's religion is a corrupt form of Buddhism and the government is a priestocracy, and the capital is at L'hassa, where the Grand Lama lives. Moravians and other denominations have long made earnest efforts to open Tibet to the Gospel.

A TIBETAN CONVERT

To carry the Gospel to this "Sealed Land," Mr. Rijnhart and his wife left Tankar, May, 1898. He wrote to Mr. Paul:

Off this morning for the unknown with sixteen ponies, three men besides ourselves, 500 New Testaments and 400 Tibetan text-cards. My wife and Charlie (their year-old baby), are in excellent health. We carry food for a year.

After they had traveled a few days in uninhabited country, their Chinese guides ran away in the night. At the foot of Tang-la pass, the baby died.

At Nga Chuka, they engaged fresh guides and ponies. They wanted to stop over winter at Nga Chuka, but were hurried off by the officials. Guides led them astray. They were set upon by robbers; all their ponies but one shot or carried off, and the guides deserted. Seeing some tents across the river, Mr. Rijnhart started towards them for help. She writes:

I waited alone with God until dark. The thought came, "the tents are far away, he will be back by morning." It gives one a strange sensation being alone among a hostile people, without even a tent or a dog.

After watching and waiting several days, she paid some tent people whom she saw across the river to get her over on a yak (ox). Efforts to hear of her husband were unavailing. Riding turbulent yaks and untrained ponies, crossing mountains and rivers, changing mercenary guides for faithless and dangerous ones, seeking protection of nomadic chiefs and bigoted lamas who gave her tsamba and butter and "ula" (official passport), and hurried her off under escort; sleeping outdoors, and glad in this land of snow, to "spend several nights in the stable with horses, donkeys, cows and pigs," terrified when her escort was attacked by drunken Tibetans, she at last reached Ta Chien-Lu. There, in the home of the Tibetan Band of Christians, she "found a haven of rest after the one long journey of over six months. From Ta Chien-Lu she wrote to Mr. Paul of her husband's disappearance.

MORE BOXES OF GOLD.

Also 350 Greenbacks.

To secure some desired information direct from the people, it is proposed to send 5 little boxes, each containing $10.00 gold, 20 boxes, each containing $5.00 gold and 350 envelopes, each containing a $1.00 bill, to persons who write the most interesting and truthful description of their experience on the following topics.

1. How have you been affected by Coffee drinking?
2. Do you know anyone who has been driven away from Postum because it came to the table weak and characterless at the first trial?
3. Did you set such a person right regarding the easy way to make Postum clear, black and with a crisp, rich taste?
4. Have you ever found a better way to make it, than to use 4 heaping teaspoonfuls to the pint of water, let stand on stove until real boiling begins, then note the clock and allow it to continue easy boiling full 15 minutes from that time stirring down occasionally?
5. Give names and account of those you know to have been cured or helped in health by the dismissal of coffee and the daily use of Postum Food Coffee in its place.
6. Write names and addresses of 20 friends whom you believe would be benefitted by leaving off coffee. (Your name will not be divulged to them.)

Address your letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., writing your own name and address clearly.

Decision will be made on May 1st next, by three judges not members of the Postum Co., and one of the $10.00 boxes of gold sent to each of the 5 best writers, one of the $5.00 boxes of gold sent to each of the 20 next best and one of the $1.00 bills sent to each of the 350 next best writers.

These 375 persons will earn money prizes, and each and every person who fails to win a money prize, but whose letter contains 20 true names and addresses of persons who would be benefitted by leaving off coffee, will receive 25 cents worth of Postum Food Coffee free.

Almost everyone interested in pure food and drink is willing to have their name and letter appear in the papers, for such help as it may offer to the human race. A request to omit name will be respected.

Every friend of Postum is urged to write and each letter will be held in high esteem by the company, as an evidence of such friendship, while the little boxes of gold and envelopes of money will reach many modest writers whose plain and sensible letters contain the facts desired, although the sender may have but small faith in winning at the time of writing.

Talk this subject over with your friends and see how many among you can win prizes. It is a good, honest competion and in the best kind of a cause. Cut this statement out for it will not appear again.

A Mammoth's Skeleton Found

Intelligence comes from Vancouver, B. C., of the finding of the giant remains of a mammoth on Dominion Creek, in the Alaska gold territory. August Trulson, a Swede, and his partner, while working their claim, discovered the body forty feet below the earth's surface. It is said to have been in a perfect state of preservation. This description is given by a Dawson newspaper:

The huge monster could not be lifted from its ancient grave, for it weighed from twenty-five to thirty tons. Its flesh was cut and tasted sweet. It measured 44 feet 6 inches. Its right tusk was broken, but its left tusk was perfect, so that the right must have snapped off in the fall which caused its death. The remaining tusk measured fourteen feet three inches in length and forty-eight inches in circumference. The flesh was covered with wooly hair, about fifteen inches long, of a grayish-black color. The hindquarters of the mammoth were weighed in a fashion, the improvised scales showing 8,640 pounds. The neck was short, the limbs long and stout, and the feet short and broad with five toes.

The effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is not merely to remove the symptoms of disease and give the semblance of health, but it eradicates the disease itself and health is the natural result.

∴ Heart-Letters from Humble Homes ∴

Struggles and Triumphs of Brave Mothers and Daughters—A Poet's Tribute to Mothers

I THINK you will enjoy a glimpse of some of the homes from which my dear correspondents write to me, and this week I am going to point my kodak here and there, and let you see what lies within its range. My first letter came to me from a far-away region in the West, and my friend writes:

"I am twenty-five years of age, and have been married six years. I live fifty miles from a town. My husband is a cattleman, who has 1,200 head of cattle and keeps quite a lot of help.

"I do all of the work, make the butter, do the washing and ironing. I have two little girls, the eldest is five years; the baby is fifteen months. It is three miles to my nearest neighbor's, and others are fifteen and twenty miles away. I very seldom see a woman, but lots of men, and they are a very rough class, too. Help is awfully scarce. I always have help if I can in the summer-time.

"I am trying to live the life of a Christian. It is pretty hard sometimes, for I am quite alone. There are no religious people near, and my husband, although very kind and good to me, does not believe in religion. But I have hopes in bringing him to believe as I do."

(God grant, dear soul, that you may succeed. We will all keep you and your husband in our thoughts, and pray that he may soon find the Lord). This is not all of the letter which I wish to share with you. My friend proceeds in her plain, but most touching story:

"When I first came here, I worried a great deal about my house; it was not at all neat. I lived in it one year without paper on the walls, and we had very little furniture. I am inclined to be melancholy, and as I was alone all day I worried so much that I began to lose my health, of which I now see the folly. God has opened my eyes. I never found him until my dear mother died. When I married, I moved 175 miles away from her. She died two years ago. I have thought a great deal about the other world since my dear mother died.

"We now have a new house of seven rooms, built this summer, and very nicely furnished. It is cozy and comfortable, and I am happy. I need help and counsel in bringing up my little ones."

God bless you, my brave, capable, sensible friend! As I read your words, here in a crowded city with neighbors on every hand, I am impressed with the difference between your home and mine. And yet there is something very attractive to me in the great spaces, the mighty droves of cattle, the magnificent farms of the West. Life is always full of hardship for the wives of pioneers. It seems as if there is no way of making it easy. I am glad you have your dear little girls, and I am sure they will grow up to be a comfort and help to you. You belong to the great circle of women in this land of ours who have a motherly heart, and who care very much how they fulfill the duties God has laid upon them. Again, may God bless you and your bairns! You will feel ever nearer to your dear mother, now that she is in heaven. How I wish I could impart to every desolate mourning girl the wide land over, my conviction that our beloved ones do "bend over us yet," that they are watching for us from the heavenly hills, that the land to which they have gone is indeed "not very far off!" As I leave you now, I must quote for you and for everyone who does not know it, part of Riley's exquisite "Mother-Song:"

Mother, O mother! forever I cry for you!
Sing me the old song I may not forget!
Even in slumber I murmur and sigh for you,
Mother, O mother!
Sing low, "Little brother,
Sleep, for thy mother bends over thee yet!"

Mother, O mother! the years are so lonely;
Filled but with weariness, doubt and regret!
Can't you come back to me for to-night only,
Mother—my mother?
And sing, "Little brother,
Sleep, for thy mother bends over thee yet!"

Mother, O mother! of old I had never
One wish denied me, one trouble to fret;
Now must I cry out, all vainly forever,
Mother—sweet mother?
O sing, "Little brother,
Sleep, for thy mother bends over thee yet!"

EDERSHEIM'S LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS THE MESSIAH.

THE AUTHORIZED AMERICAN EDITION.

2 volumes, regular price $6.00. Royal 8vo. 1,524 pages, handsomely bound in silk cloth.

By Alfred Edersheim, M. A., Oxon., D.D., Ph.D., Lecturer Oxford University.

A famous book for clergyman, student or general reader. Its long continued success and the many favorable notices are sufficient evidence of the popularity this new edition will achieve. Gives a full account of the society, life and development,—intellectual and religious,—in Palestine, to serve as a frame and background for the picture of Christ

The Sunday School Times recommends it: "It is positively refreshing to read a life of the Saviour which is critical in the best and truest sense of the word, and is biblical at the same time. The book is written not for the learned alone, but rather for the generally intelligent Christian reader."

JAMIESON, FAUSSETT, AND BROWN'S BIBLE COMMENTARY.

A complete commentary—critical, explanatory and practical—on the Old and New Testaments. By Robert Jamieson, D.D., St. Paul's, Glasgow; Rev. A. B. Fausset, A.M., St. Cuthbert's, York; and David Brown, D.D., Professor of Theology, Aberdeen.

One Large Super-Royal Octavo Volume of Nearly Fourteen Hundred Pages. Strongly Bound in Cloth.

It is enriched with the results of learning, the researches of travelers who have visited every region on which the light of revelation originally shown, and the expository labors of scholars and critics. Far in advance of the other works now in use, this explanatory and practical commentary has been prepared by three eminent divines, distinguished alike for their scholarship and their piety. While this is the most practical, suggestive, scientific and popular commentary yet published in this country, its compact form and convenient size, together with the immense amount of matter it contains, forming an encyclopædia of biblical knowledge, render it also at once the cheapest and most economical.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, Bishop, M. E. Church "This immense book deserves a place on the table of every Bible student It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars."

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE. By Alexander Cruden, M.A. Complete in two parts.

Contains 756 large, octavo pages, handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Christians of all denominations know that Scripture is the best interpreter of Scripture, and, next to the sacred writings, no volume better deserves a place in the library of the Christian than Cruden's Concordance to the Holy Scriptures.

SMITH'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE. Edited by William Smith, LL.D., Classical Examiner of the University of London.

Contains 1,024 large pages, printed on excellent paper, finely illustrated and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Contains every name in the Bible and Apocrypha of which anything can be said; gives an account of each of the books of the Bible; explains the civil and religious institutions, the manners and customs, while many of the longer articles, being the results of the most finished scholarship, are complete treatises in themselves.

This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language

THE LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL. By the Rev. W. J. Conybeare, M.A., of Cambridge; and J. S. Howson, D.D., of Liverpool.

Contains 1,014 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc., is printed on the same quality of paper, and is the same in size as "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible," and bound in uniform style. It eloquently portrays the early life, education, conversion, teachings, labors, travels, sufferings, perils, persecutions, and missionary career of St. Paul, thus constituting a living picture of the great apostle himself and of the circumstances by which he was surrounded.

A Mission Boat on the Ganges

One [illegible] pulpits is described in a letter from Calcutta. It is a little cabin on the deck of the mission-boat Tara. This useful craft travels thousands of miles in the tributaries of the Ganges and the coast creeks in Eastern Bengal. By this means the missionaries reach multitudes of Hindus and Moslems who would otherwise never hear of the Bible and of Christ. Intensely interesting scenes take place. Early in the morning, before the heat comes on, or late in the evening, the missionary will stand in his cabin-pulpit and preach to a crowd of Indian villagers, who never fail to flock to the waterside to listen to the preacher. There is no more effective way known of gaining access to the heathen in Northeast India, which is a land of streams running through the vast plains where rice is grown. It is densely populated by an intelligent and eager race, who anxiously attend to any who will come among them with any new message. Many conversions are reported, and the outlook of the mission boat is exceedingly encouraging. Thus the Bread of Life is literally being cast on the waters, and it will surely be found again springing up in a blessed harvest.

Free Catarrh Remedy

Trial Sample of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure Mailed Free to Any One Suffering From Catarrh.

Dr. Blosser, the celebrated Catarrh Specialist of the South, offers a trial sample of his valuable remedy to any one suffering from Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness, etc. The remedy is applied in the form of a medicated smoke-vapor, which, being inhaled, makes a direct application to the diseased parts.

Wonderful success has attended the use of this remedy. Thousands of cases have been cured—many of them were of 15, 20, 25 and even 40 years standing. The cost of the treatment is very moderate. A book, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," and a three days treatment will be mailed to any sufferer who will write at once. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

Our Need of Christ

YES, we need the Saviour sorely
In this world of strife,
And our tightening grasp must hold him
All through life.

Crushed by grief, or only pining
O'er some painful loss,
Peace we find, and calm assurance
Near his Cross.

By unnumbered ills surrounded,
By the world enticed,
All our hope in time of danger
Is in Christ.

All our thoughts with his commandments
Blend in sweet accord,
While with holy joy we hail him
King and Lord.

O'er the dead and o'er the guilty
He on earth has wept;
In the rock-hewn tomb of Joseph
Jesus slept.

Life is hallowed, tears are sacred,
Death itself is gain;
Rugged paths of toil and duty
Now are plain.

He is more to us than pleasure—
More than vital breath.
He will guide us through the desert
And through death.

For Life-Savers' Chaplains

The bill which was framed by Rev. R. Ashley Cake, the Life-Savers' Missionary, asking Congress to grant an appropriation that would give a chaplaincy to each life-saving district on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, as well as on the lakes, is placed in the hands of Hon. J. J. Gardner, of New Jersey. Owing to the present session of Congress being a short one, it may be impossible to get the bill considered at this time. It is highly commended by several Congressmen, and President McKinley has promised to give it his earnest consideration should it pass and come before him for approval.

WEAK LUNGS

Dr. Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, has just published a new book on which explains all about Consumption, how it arises, the symptoms by which it is known, how it can be prevented, and the only treatment by which it can be cured. He also describes

"The Lungs and Their Diseases,"

THIS BOOK is of such great importance and interest to all who have weak lungs or are threatened with any form of lung disease that it has been decided to issue an edition of 50,000 copies in paper covers for free distribution. Dr. Robert Hunter is the oldest Lung Specialist of this country, and acknowledged throughout the world as the greatest living authority on all diseases of the breathing organs.

From the New York Herald: "It seems after many disappointments and false rumors of the cures for consumption, that the treatment as discovered and practiced by Dr. Robert Hunter, 117 West 45th St., New York, has accomplished results so satisfactory that this dread disease need no longer be classed among the incurable."

From the New York Sun: "Dr. Hunter's recent book on Consumption and its wonderful cures that have been reported, effectually remove all doubt as to the curability of this dread disease."

Readers of The Christian Herald can obtain Dr. Hunter's Book FREE by addressing him at 117 West 45th Street, New York.

A Good Complexion

Depends on Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secret for securing a clear complexion.

But all these are simply superficial assistants. It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly, unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood a good complexion is impossible.

That is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food solely in order to keep their complexion clear.

When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary. Take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion.

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect digestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man or woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and cost 50 cents per package. They are prepared by the F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion. Ask your druggist for the tablets and a free book on stomach diseases.

The Larkin Soaps

The 30 Days Trial Begun

The Whole Family supplied with Laundry and Toilet Soaps for a year at Half Price. Sent Subject to Approval and Payment after Thirty Days' Trial.

The First Award of the Omaha Exposition was given the Larkin Soaps.

IT IS WISE ECONOMY TO USE GOOD SOAP. Our soaps are sold entirely on their merits, with our guarantee of purity. THOUSANDS OF FAMILIES USE THEM, and have for many years, in every locality, many in your vicinity. Ask us for your neighbors' testimonials.

The Larkin Idea

saves you half the retail cost of your soaps, and doubles the purchasing value of this 50 per cent. saving in a premium bought for you below usual cost of making. One premium is A White Enameled Steel, Brass-Trimmed, Bow-Foot Bed. Brass top rod at head and foot, and heavy brass, gold-lacquered trimmings. Malleable castings that never break. Detachable ball-bearing casters. 4½ or 4 or 3½ feet wide. 6½ feet long. Head, 4½ feet. Foot, 3½ feet high. Corner posts, 1 inch in diameter. Very strong and will last a lifetime.

AFTER THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL if the purchaser finds all the Soaps, etc., of excellent quality and the premium entirely satisfactory and as represented, remit $10.00; if not, notify us goods are subject to our order. We make no charge for what you have used.

If you remit in advance, you will receive in addition a nice present for the lady of the house, and shipment day after order is received. Money refunded promptly if the Soaps or Premium disappoints. Safe delivery guaranteed. The transaction is not complete until you are satisfied.

☞ Many girls and boys easily earn a Chautauqua Desk or other premium free by dividing the contents of a Combination Box among a few neighbors who readily pay the listed retail prices. This provides the $10.00 needful to pay our bill, and gives the young folk the premium as "a middleman's profit." The wide success of this plan confirms all our claims.

At Midnight

AT midnight, when the stars were bright
And silence wrapped the earth,
An angel from the realms of light
Brought tidings of a birth.
The mother clasped her baby boy,
And at the break of dawn,
Celestial hosts proclaimed their joy,
"Behold! a child is born!"

'Twas Easter, and the lilies smiled
As centuries ago.
They seemed to chant, "Thus undefiled
Through life thy babe shall go."
The Muses, too, a garland wove
About the silken hair,
Of brightest buds of hope and love
That he should ever wear.

A memory of blissful dream,
Of walks on summer days,
Through fragrant grove, by singing stream,
Along the country ways;
How baby's eyes of peerless blue
In wonder watched the sky,
Or marked the birds that silent flew,
Or brook that rippled by.

At midnight, angels gathered by
The pearly gates of rest,
And welcomed home to courts on high
Our babe among the blest.
Oh, mother, lift thy weeping eyes!
As on that Easter morn,
The joyful song fills Paradise,
"Behold! a child is born!"

The Indians Could Understand That

Eternal life—there is no end to it! (writes Mr. D. L. Moody). The government was trying to make a treaty with the Indians, and in one place put in the word "forever." The Indians did not like that word, and said:

"No; put it, 'As long as water runs and grass grows.'"

They could understand that. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life."

SPRAYING FRUIT TREES.

The question of spraying fruit trees to prevent the depredations of insect pests and fungus diseases is no longer an experiment but a necessity.

Our readers will do well to write to Wm. Stahl, Quincy, Ill., and get his catalogue describing twenty-one styles of Spraying Outfits and full treatise on spraying the different fruit and vegetable crops, which contains much valuable information, and may be had for the asking.

SUGAR is not improved by the addition of sand; neither is White Lead improved by the addition of Zinc and Barytes, yet there are hundreds of such mixtures branded and sold as "White Lead," "Pure White Lead," etc.

You can avoid these by making sure that the brand is right. Those named in the margin are genuine.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and showing samples sent free. Also folder showing picture of house painted in different designs or various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

Hawaii's Dead Princess

THE regret due her youth, accomplishments and amiable character, as well as her unique and distinguished position, is very generally felt at the announcement of the death of Princess Kaiulani, of Hawaii.

PRINCESS KAIULANI

The Princess was in her twenty-fifth year, a native Honolulan; her mother was Princess Likeliki, and her father A. C. Cleghorn, an Englishman, once Governor of Oahu. Her funeral took place under direction of the Government, Bishop Wilson, of the P. E. Church conducting the service.

Farm Wagon for Only $19.95.

In order to introduce their Low Metal Wheels with Wide Tires, the Empire Manufacturing Company, Quincy, Ill., have placed upon the market a Farmer's Handy Wagon, sold at the low price of $19.95. The wagon is only 25 inches high, fitted with 24 and 30-inch wheels with 4-inch tire.

Physicians in the Orient

IN no part of the civilized globe is the medical art in greater demand than in the East, yet nowhere has it been so unprogressive. One of the oldest professions known to man, and practised in the Orient from immemorial days, in those decadent lands it has seemingly stood still for centuries, satisfied with the knowledge acquired by a long past generation and sceptical of all later innovations and discoveries. Mohammedanism is the foe of education, and wherever the Moslem faith prevails, there science makes no progress. Americans and Europeans traveling in the East all agree upon the general conclusion that the antiquated medical science which still prevails in Egypt, Syria, Palestine, China, Persia, and other countries, is wholly incapable of coping with the many forms of disease found there—ailments which are greatly mitigated wherever modern medical skill has been introduced. Wherever medical missionaries have sought a field of service in Eastern lands, they have found an open door and a cordial welcome, which would have been denied otherwise. Their art is one of the greatest aids to missionary work. In the Holy Land, Egypt and Syria, communities are found in which ophthalamia, leprosy and imbecility are extraordinarily prevalent. In Cairo, the blind, the sick, the crippled are seen at almost every corner, and they swarm in the Nile cities, at Ghizeh, Sakkara, Assouan, and elsewhere. An American physician travelling in Arabia, has recorded the impression that fully one-half of those natives whom he saw were either wholly or partially blind, or otherwise afflicted. Wherever one goes in Palestine, poor, helpless sufferers of the same class are seen, calling for pity and alms. In Jerusalem, Jericho, Jaffa, Nazareth, and other cities, the experience is repeated, until one is impressed with the fact that the Palestine of to-day, like that of the time of Christ, is still a land of widespread suffering. The streets and highways where the Great Physician walked, and the public places where he miraculously healed the sick, cleansed the leprous, and gave sight to the blind, are to-day the resort of sufferers who sit humbly in the heat and dust, and evoke the compassion of the stranger. In Nablous, in Damascus, and throughout the East to-day, one sees groups of the afflicted. Such scenes are so frequent, and the cry of the sufferers is so pathetic, that no one—unless he be a native and accustomed to those sights—can pass unmoved. Looking at the helpless ones, it is not difficult to understand how Jesus, even amid the ceaseless labors of his divine mission, still found time to pause and speak the welcome words of pity and pardon that brought healing and happiness. In Egypt, where the barbers have been the physicians of the people, and where all medical art, or even its pretense, is regarded as supernatural and miraculous, a great change is now under way. A number of young men are being thoroughly educated in the practice of medicine and surgery, in accordance with present European methods, and the next half score years will witness the first serious breach in the ranks of the native practitioners, who are little better than quacks. Egyptian professional training has heretofore given more thought to alchemy than chemistry, to astrology than astronomy. The native physicians who are supposed to cure the sick either by the use of salves, by bleeding or by other means, include religious devotees, cranks, and ascetics. They teach among other things, that "whoever visits the sick carries away a sixtieth part of their sufferings"—and the promiscuous carrying out of this generous principle results in widespread infection.

AN ARAB DOCTOR AND HIS PATIENT IN THE CITY OF CAIRO

Our illustration shows the simpler and more agreeable side of medical life in Egypt. A lady, who has been shopping among the bazaars, has consulted an Arab hakim (or "wise man"), as the physicians are styled in Cairo. The latter decides to employ the lancet. Beside the mistress kneels the little servant, whose face expresses deep solicitude at the ordeal the lady is to undergo. The entire scene is characteristic of Egypt and the Orient.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

J. E. B. Iron Mountain, Mich. Are children born sinful as David says (Ps. 51: 5), or holy as Paul says (I. Cor. 7: 14)?

Neither of the passages assert that fact. A child cannot be sinful when it is born. It may and does have tendencies to sin in its nature, and if you watch a child of a few months old you will see proof of the fact, but it is guiltless of sin. That comes later when it becomes responsible and knows the difference between right and wrong. Both passages refer to the parents rather than the children.

Reader, Richmond, O. What did Christ mean by being born of water and of the spirit (John 3: 5)?

The passage has given rise to much controversy and theologians are by no means agreed as to its meaning. Our opinion is that Christ had reference to the topic then agitating such men as the one he was speaking to. They had a ceremony by which the Gentile was admitted to the privileges of Judaism, part of which was baptism, which signified purification from the sins of his old life. To the astonishment of the Pharisees, John the Baptist had insisted that even they were in need of baptism, just as the proselyte was. But as John intimated, that was not enough. There was One coming who would baptize with the Holy Spirit. Therefore Nicodemus would understand Christ's meaning, when he spoke of being born of water and of the spirit. To the new birth it was necessary that a man be purified in heart, his past sins blotted out, which was symbolized by the water, and he must be quickened to a new life, which was done by the Spirit. Both are still necessary to conversion. They are called in theological parlance, justification and sanctification.

L. T., Los Angeles. 1. Please give names of Commanding Generals on both sides

1. You probably refer to a battle in the Teutoberg Forest, 9 A.D., in which Hermann (called in old German song and story, the deliverer of Germany) annihilated the Roman army under Quintilius Varus and freed his country from Roman rule. For fuller detail read German and Roman history. 2. The battle of Fontenoy, 1745, was one of the most famous engagements in the war of the Austrian succession, which eventually secured the Imperial crown and title to Maria Theresa and her husband, Francis of Lorraine. On one side were the French, 60,000 strong, under Marshal Saxe; on the other, the English, Dutch and Austrian allies in equal numbers. Losses on both sides, about 7,000. The French were successful. For full information, consult histories of Austria-Hungary, France and Great Britain.

1. Probably as indicating that he was the representative man, and also with special reference to the Old Testament prophecies in which the Messiah is spoken of under that title. 2. In the Jordan. The exact spot is uncertain. 3. No one knows. There is a tradition that it was found by Helena, mother of Constantine, but only Roman Catholics believe that story now. 4. The oldest is the Sinai Manuscript, which is believed to have been made in the fourth century, or about fourteen hundred years ago. It is now at St Petersburg. It was found in 1859 by Tischendorf, in the Convent of St. Catherine, on Mount Sinai. 5. When the Temple was destroyed about forty years after the Crucifixion. They were continued until that time. 6. Some of them are. All of them are objectionable and unnecessary.

Constant Reader, Scranton, Pa. Is it right to continue helping poor people who show no gratitude, and who will steal from you after all you have done for them?

The patience of those who try to do good is often sorely tried, but when the motive is right, the temptation to give them up is overcome. If you try to help such poor people for the sake of Christ, the consciousness that you are pleasing him will satisfy you, even when the people themselves return evil for good. If God were to give up blessing people who do not act as they ought, some of us would be in evil case (See Matthew 5: 46).

Saved Behind Prison Bars

Two Remarkable Instances of God's Grace Wholly Redeeming Sin-Wrecked Lives.

By CHAPLAIN MUNRO, of New York Tombs

BIBLE-READING IN THE CELL

HOW strange it is that, when we read the Gospels, or the Book of Acts, we are startled at the wondrous power of God in the salvation of lost souls, and think that such miracles of grace are confined to the apostolic age. In this we greatly err. The power of God in the salvation of lost men and women, may be just as manifest to-day, on the threshold of the twentieth century as when Jesus caused the maniac of Gadara to sit at his feet, clothed and in his right mind.

After studying the character of those who get behind the bars, I have come to the conclusion that a great many persons on the downward course of sin do not and will not take time to think of God and their own eternal destiny till they are shut up in jail. When God shuts a man in prison, he has him in close quarters. He is brought to bay and is humiliated, and will either make a full surrender or prepare for a greater calamity. And to many a man, a brief period in jail is nothing less than a blessing. This is what many have told me behind the bars, and I believe it is true.

Last Christmas afternoon, I stood before the iron grating in the detention ward of the Harlem Prison in this city, preaching the Gospel of Jesus to the inmates. I had been presenting the old Gospel for about fifteen minutes, to from thirty to forty persons who had been committed for various offenses. When I ended my remarks, I found myself face to face with one man—the others seemed to have disappeared. I find it pays to preach even to one man, if he will listen. This is the way Christ made converts. He preached to Nicodemus, Zaccheus, the blind man in the temple, the woman in Simon's house and many others. This man in the jail showed by his earnest looks that he was impressed. I had made special use when speaking of John 1: 12: "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." As I went on speaking, I drew nearer the cage and thrusting my hand through the bars, I took him by the hand. The expression on his face seemed to say: "This is all new to me. Can it be true?" Holding him firmly by the hand I said: "Are you willing to receive the Lord Jesus as your Saviour now?" He replied: "Yes." I continued: "Do you give yourself now unreservedly to Jesus for time and eternity?" He replied firmly: "Yes." I said: "God bless you, my friend. He will do his part faithfully if you are true to him."

Then I began to question him, getting a few details of his history. He had been a confirmed, helpless drunkard, and his wife told me that within recent years his debauches made him a dangerous madman. That same afternoon I went to his home and made a personal investigation, and found that all he said was true. It was the typical drunkard's home. In it I found his wife and five children, scantily clad and showing a lack of proper nourishment. Poor broken-hearted mother and children! I could have wept for them. In his sober moments, as I learned, he was a good husband and father, and when work could be had he provided for his family. I also learned that if he served his full time it was more than likely his children would starve and his family be turned out of doors. Armed with the information I secured, I went to the magistrate and pleaded for clemency. But I knew the grace of God could transform the home of the drunkard and make him an honored citizen.

The magistrate received me kindly. God bless him! He listened patiently to my tale of woe on behalf of the drunkard's family and then ordered the man's release.

Soon afterward the man was set free. I asked him to meet me that evening, as I wished to go to a mission meeting with him. He came, was deeply interested, and when the time to give testimonies arrived he was the first on his feet to tell what God had already done for him. It was a voluntary testimony. At the close he went to the front, taking his little boy with him, and prayed for himself. Since then he has been living the life of a quiet, sober, industrious, prayerful Christian—a brand plucked from the burning.

Case number two was saved in prison on the first Sunday of the new year—a genuine case of real conversion. This man heard the joyful sound in his cell. It came as a message from God. He felt that the Almighty was speaking to him for the last time: it was now or never! In a moment he decided the question of his salvation, dropped on his knees and then and there gave himself to the Lord Jesus. He had the peace of God in his soul.

Monday is generally a "blue day" with most preachers, but the Chaplain of the Tombs Prison has no time to be blue. After a spiritual battle, he goes from cell to cell to see if any were wounded the day before. When he came to this man's cell he found that a great change had taken place—he had been praying and weeping alternately for twenty-four hours. He had settled the great question of his soul's salvation at the Sunday service.

"Now," said he, as the tears ran down his cheeks. "Chaplain, if I were to die to-day, I know that I would be with my Saviour, as he has taken away my load of sin. I am saved and I know it." The day afterward he sent me the following letter which will explain itself. I withhold his name for the present. If, however, anybody is curious to see the man and letter, I can show both with pleasure."

The Jerusalem Chamber

The Famous Hall Wherein the Westminster Assembly Met, and the Authorized and Revised Version of the Bible was Prepared

PROBABLY only a very small proportion of the visitors to Westminster Abbey ever enter the apartment known as "The Jerusalem Chamber." It is about thirty-six feet long and eighteen wide, and was built by Nicholas Litlyngton, Abbot of Westminster, between 1376 and 1386. There is every reason to suppose that the title "Jerusalem Chamber," was given to the room in consequence of the decorations in it, depicting scenes from Scripture subjects, chiefly relating to Jerusalem. Among the scenes painted there are:

"The Stoning of Stephen;" "The Slaughter of the Innocents;" "The Last Judgment;" "The Ascension;" "Peter Walking on the Sea," and "The Beheading of John the Baptist."

Between 1871 and 1874, the chamber underwent a thorough restoration. Its walls are hung with ancient tapestry, and finished with cedar panelling, the fireplace is fitted with an antique grate, and around the tiles in mediæval characters, are the three texts: "O pray for the peace of Jerusalem;" "Build thou the walls of Jerusalem;" "Jerusalem, which is above, is free."

The earliest historical reference to the Jerusalem chamber is, probably, the account of the death of Henry IV.: the consciousness of whose sins, added to the burden of various diseases, weighed so heavily upon his mind, that he determined to join in the Crusade to Jerusalem, where, according to prophecy, he would end his days. He came to Westminster, to be present at the Parliament which met in 1412. While kneeling before the shrine of Edward in the Abbey, he was seized with a violent fit and had to be carried to the Abbot's room. When he had recovered a little, he asked the name of the room in which he was lying, and on being informed that it was called Jerusalem, he said, "Praise be to the Father of heaven, for now I know I shall die in this chamber, according to the prophecy of the before said, that I should die at Jerusalem!"

The Jerusalem Chamber also afforded a temporary resting-place for the bodies of many eminent men of letters. In 1719 the body of Addison lay there in state before burial. Here, too, Congreve lay in state before his pompous funeral, at which noblemen bore the pall; and here also Matthew Prior, Sir Isaac Newton and the poet Dryden also lay in state.

The famous Westminster Assembly of Divines met in the Jerusalem Chamber. The Assembly was appointed by the Long Parliament for settling the doctrine, liturgy and government of the Church of England. It consisted of one hundred and twenty-one clergymen and thirty laymen, ten of whom were lords and twenty commoners, together with four clerical and two lay commissioners from the Church of Scotland. Among the most distinguished of the divines were Ussher; Saunderson, Reynolds and Lightfoot. The Scottish divines were: Henderson, Gillespie, Rutherford and Baillie. They first assembled on July 1st in the choir, where a service was held and a sermon preached by Dr. Tevisse before a large congregation, which included both Houses of Parliament. Afterwards they proceeded to Henry VII.'s Chapel, where their sittings were held until the cold at the end of September drove them to the more comfortable Jerusalem Chamber. The sittings were continued until February 22, 1649. Dean Stanley has summed up the result of these long and tedious theological discussions in the following words:

The five years, six months, and twenty-two days, through one thousand one hundred and sixty-three sessions, the Chapel of Henry VII. and the Jerusalem Chamber witnessed their weary labors. Out of these walls came the Directory, the longer and shorter Catechism, and that famous Confession of Faith, which, alone within these islands, was imposed by law on the whole kingdom, and which alone of all Protestant confessions, still, in spite of its sternness and narrowness, retains a hold on the minds of its adherents.

The Jerusalem Chamber also had to do with the Authorized and Revised Version of our Bible. In 1604, King James appointed a Conference at Hampton Court for determining of things said to be amiss in the Church. The suggestion of a new translation made by Reynolds was taken up by the king, and six committees were appointed to execute the work—two at Jerusalem Chamber, two at Cambridge, and two at Oxford. The Authorized Version appeared in 1611. For the Revised Version two companies of translators were appointed, one for the Old Testament, the other for the New. They sat at the Jerusalem Chamber in 1870. After the work had commenced, a number of American scholars were added to the revision company, and all points of ultimate difference of opinion between the English and American revisers were appended to the versions issued. The Revised New Testament was issued in 1881, and the Old Testament in 1885.

. . . Angels of the Grass . . .

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Luke 12 : 28 :

If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven: how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith?

THE lily is the queen of Bible flowers. The rose may have disputed her throne in modern times, and won it: but the rose originally had only five petals. It was under the long-continued and intense gaze of the world that the rose blushed into its present beauty. In the Bible frankincense and hyssop and frankincense and myrrh and spikenard and camphire and the rose follow the lily. Fourteen times in the Bible is the lily mentioned; only twice the rose. The rose may now have wider empire, but the lily reigned in the time of Esther, in the time of Solomon, in the time of Christ. Cæsar had his throne on the hills. The lily had her throne in the valley. In the greatest sermon that was ever preached, there was only one flower, and that a lily. The Bedford dreamer, John Bunyan, entered the House of the Interpreter, and was shown a cluster of flowers, and was told to "consider the lilies."

We may study or reject other sciences at our option. It is so with astronomy, it is so with chemistry, it is so with jurisprudence, it is so with physiology, it is so with geology; but the science of botany Christ commands us to study when he says: "Consider the lilies." Measure them from root to tip of petal. Inhale their breath. Notice the gracefulness of their poise. Hear the whisper of the white lips of the Eastern and the red lips of the American lily.

Belonging to this royal family of lilies is the lily of the Nile, the Japan lily, the lady Washington of the Sierras, the Golden Band lily, the Giant lily of Nepaul, the Turk's Cap lily, the African lily from the Cape of Good Hope. All these lilies have the royal blood in their veins. But I take the lilies of my text this morning as typical of all flowers, and their voice of floral beauty seems to address us, saying: "Consider the lilies, consider the azaleas, consider the fuchsias, consider the geraniums, consider the ivies, consider the hyacinths, consider the heliotropes, consider the oleanders." With deferential and grateful and intelligent and worshipful souls, consider them. Not with insipid sentimentalism, or with sophmoric vaporing, but for grand and practical and every-day, and, if need be, homely uses, consider them.

The flowers are the angels of the grass. They all have voices. When the clouds speak, they thunder; when the whirlwinds speak, they scream; when the cataracts speak, they roar; but when the flowers speak, they always whisper. I stand here to interpret their message. What have you to say to us, O ye angels of the grass? This morning I mean to discuss what flowers are good for. That is my subject: What are flowers good for?

I remark, in the first place, they are good for lessons of God's providential care. That was Christ's first thought. All these flowers seem to address us to-day, saying: "God will give you apparel and food. We have no wheel with which to spin, no loom with which to weave, no sickle with which to harvest, no well-sweep with which to draw water; but God slakes our thirst with the dew, and God feeds us with the bread of the sunshine, and God has apparelled us with more than Solomonic regality. We are prophetesses of adequate wardrobe. "If God so clothed us, the grass of the field, will he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Men and women of worldiy anxieties, take this message home with you. How long has God taken care of you? Quarter of the journey of life? Half the journey of life? Three-quarters the journey of life? Can you not trust him the rest of the way? God does not promise you anything like that which the Roman emperor had on his table at vast expense—five hundred nightingales' tongues—but he has promised to take care of you. He has promised you the necessities, not the luxuries—bread, not cake. If God so luxuriantly clothes the grass of the field, will he not provide for you, his living and immortal children? He will.

No wonder Martin Luther always had a flower on his writing-desk for inspiration! Through the cracks of the prison floor a flower grew up to cheer Picciola. Mungo Park, the great traveler and explorer, had his life saved by a flower. He sank down in the desert to die, but, seeing a flower near by, it suggested God's merciful care, and he got up with new courage and traveled on to safety. I said the flowers are the angels of the grass. I add now they are the evangels of the sky.

If you ask me the question, What are flowers good for? I respond, they are good for the bridal day. The bride must have them on her brow, and she must have them in her hand. The marriage altar must be covered with them. A wedding without flowers would be as inappropriate as a wedding without music. At such a time they are for congratulation and prophecies of good. So much of the pathway of life is covered up with thorns, we ought to cover the beginning with orange-blossoms.

Flowers are appropriate on such occasions, for in ninety-nine out of a hundred cases it is the very best thing that could have happened. The world may criticise and pronounce it an inaptitude, and may lift its eyebrows in surprise and think it might suggest something better; but the God who sees the twenty, forty, fifty years of wedded life before they have begun, arranges for the best. So that flowers, in almost all cases, are appropriate for the marriage day. The divergences of disposition will become correspondences, recklessness will become prudence, frivolity will be turned into practicality.

There has been many an aged widowed soul who had a carefully-locked bureau, and in the bureau a box, and in the box a folded paper, and in the folded paper a half-blown rose, slightly fragrant, discolored, carefully pressed. She put it there forty or fifty years ago. On the anniversary day of her wedding she will go to the bureau, she will lift the box, she will unfold the paper, and to her eyes will be exposed the half-blown bud, and the memories of the past will rush upon her, and a tear will drop upon the flower, and suddenly it is transfigured, and there is a stir in the dust of the anther, and it rounds out, and it is full of life, and it begins to tremble in the procession up the church aisle, and the dead music of a half century ago comes throbbing through the air; and vanished faces reappear, and right hands are joined, and a manly voice promises: "I will, for better or for worse," and the wedding march thunders a salvo of joy at the departing crowd; but a sigh on that anniversary day scatters the scene. Under the deep-fetched breath, the altar, the flowers, the congratulating groups are scattered, and there is nothing left but a trembling hand holding a faded rosebud, which is put into the paper, and then into the box, and the box placed in the bureau, and with a click of the lock the scene is over.

Ah, my friends, let not the prophecies of the flowers, on your wedding day, be false prophecies. Be blind to each other's faults. Make the most of each other's excellences. Remember the vows, the ring on the third finger of the left hand, and the benediction of the calla lilies.

If you ask me the question, What are flowers good for? I answer, They are good to honor and comfort the obsequies. The worst gash ever made into the side of our poor earth, is the gash of the grave. It is so deep, it is so cruel, it is so incurable, that it needs something to cover it up. Flowers for the casket, flowers for the hearse, flowers for the cemetery. What a contrast between a grave in a country churchyard, with the fence broken down, and the tombstone aslant, and the neighboring cattle browsing amid the mullein stalks and the Canada thistles, and a June morning in Greenwood, the wave of roseate bloom rolling to the top of the mounds, and then breaking into foaming crests of white flowers all around the pillows of dust. It is the difference between sleeping under rags and sleeping under an embroidered blanket.

"Oh," you say, "the dead don't know; it makes no difference to them." I think you are mistaken. There are not so many steamers and trains coming to any living city as there are convoys coming from heaven to earth; and if there be instantaneous and constant communication between this world and the better world, do you not suppose your departed friends know what you do with their bodies? Why has God planted "golden-rod" and wild-flowers in the forest and on the prairie, where no human eye ever sees them? He planted them there for invisible intelligences to look at and admire, and when invisible intelligences come to look at the wild-flowers of the woods and the table-lands, will they not make excursion and see the flowers which you have planted in affectionate remembrance of them?

When I am dead, I would like to have a handful of violets—anyone could pluck them out of the grass, or some one could lift from the edge of the pond a water-lily—nothing rarely expensive, no insane display, as sometimes at funeral rites, where the display takes the bread from the childrens' mouths, and the clothes from their backs, but something from the great democracy of flowers. Rather than imperial catafalque of Russian czar, I ask some one whom I may have helped by Gospel sermon or Christian deed, to bring a sprig of arbutus or a handful of China asters.

It was left for modern times to spell respect for the departed and comfort for the living in letters of floral Gospel. Pillow of flowers, meaning rest for the pilgrim who has got to the end of his journey. Anchor of flowers, suggesting the Christian hope which we have as an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast. Cross of flowers, suggesting the tree on which our sins were slain. If I had my way, I would cover up all the dreamless sleepers, whether in golden-handled casket or pine box, whether a king's mausoleum or Potter's field, with radiant or aromatic arboresence. The Bible says: "In the midst of the garden there was a sepulchre." I wish that every sepulchre might be in the midst of a garden.

If you ask me the question, what are flowers good for? I answer, for religious symbolism. Have you ever studied Scriptural flora? The Bible is an arboretum, it is a divine conservatory, it is a herbarium of exquisite beauty. If you want to illustrate the brevity of the brightest human life, you will quote from Job: "Man cometh forth as a flower and is cut down." Or you will quote from the Psalmist: "As the flower of the field, so he perisheth: the wind passeth over it, and it is gone." Or you will quote from Isaiah: "All flesh is grass, and the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field." Or you will quote from James the Apostle: "As the flower of the grass, so he passeth away." What graphic Bible symbolism!

All the cut flowers will soon be dead, whatever care you take of them. Though morning and night you baptize them in the name of the shower, the baptism will not be to them a saving ordinance. They have been fatally wounded with the knife that cut them. They are bleeding their life away: they are dying now. The fragrance in the air is their departing and ascending spirits. Oh, yes! Flowers are almost human. Botanists tell us that flowers breathe, they take nourishment, they eat, they drink. They are sensitive. They have their likes and dislikes. They sleep, they wake. They live in families. They have their ancestors and their descendants, their birth, their burial, their cradle, their grave. The zephyr rocks the one, and the storm digs the trench for the other. The cowslip must leave its gold, the lily must leave its silver, the rose must leave its diamond necklace of [illegible] up, we prosper, we spread abroad, we die, as the flower—as the flower!

Change and decay in all around I see;
[illegible]

Flowers also afford mighty symbolism of Christ, who compared himself to the ancient queen, the lily, and the modern queen, the rose, when he said, "I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valley." Redolent like the one, humble like the other. Like both, appropriate for the sad who want sympathizers, and for the rejoicing who want banqueters. Hovering over the marriage ceremony like a wedding-bell, or folded like a chaplet on the pulseless heart of the dead. Oh, Christ! let the perfume of thy name be wafted all around the earth—lily and rose, lily and rose—until the wilderness crimson into a garden, and the round earth turn into one great bud of immortal beauty laid against the warm heart of God.

But, my friends, flowers have no grander use than when on Easter morning we celebrate the re-animation of Christ from the catacombs. The flowers spell resurrection. The women carried spices to the tomb of Christ, and they dropped spices all around about the tomb, and from these spices have grown all the flowers of Easter morn. The two white-robed angels that hurled the stone away from the door of the tomb, hurled it with such violence down the hill that it crashed in the door of the world's sepulchre, and millions of dead shall come forth.

However labyrinthine the mausoleum, however costly the sarcophagus, however architecturally grand the necropolis, however beautifully parterred the family grounds, we want them all broken up by the Lord of the Resurrection. The forms that we laid away with our broken hearts must rise again. Father and mother—they must come out. Husband and wife—they must come out. Brothers and sisters—they must come out. Our darling children—they must come out. The eyes that with trembling fingers we closed, must open in the lustre of Resurrection morn. The arms that we folded in death must join ours in embrace of reunion. The beloved voice that was hushed must be retuned. The beloved form must come up without its infirmities, without its fatigues—it must come up.

When Lord Nelson was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral in London, the heart of all England was stirred. The procession passed on amid the sobbing of a nation. There were thirty trumpeters stationed at the door of the Cathedral, with instruments of music in hand, waiting for the signal, and when the illustrious dead arrived at the gates of St. Paul's Cathedral, these thirty trumpeters gave one united blast, and then all was silent. Yet the trumpets did not wake the dead. He slept right on. But I have to tell you, what thirty trumpeters could not do for one man, one trumpeter will do for all nations. The ages have rolled on, and the clock of the world's destiny strikes nine, ten, eleven, twelve, and time shall be no longer! Behold the archangel hovering! He takes the trumpet, points it this way, puts its lips to his lips, and then blows one long, loud, terrific, thunderous, reverberating and resurrectionary blast! Look, look! They rise! The dead—the dead! some coming from the family vault: some from city cemetery; some from country graveyard. Upward and away! Christ leads and all the Christian dead follow, battalion after battalion, nation after nation. Up, up! On, on! Forward, ye ranks of God Almighty! Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates, and let the conquerors come in! Resurrection! Resurrection!

And so I twist all the festal flowers of the chapels and cathedrals of all Christendom into one great chain, and with that chain I bind the Easter morning of 1899 with the closing Easter of the world's history—Resurrection!

Little Orphans at Marash

The Parentless, Armenian Children are being Educated and Taught to Work by the Kind American and English Missionaries

TO those readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who have aided in sheltering and supporting the helpless Armenian orphans, the photographs which appear on this page will have a special interest. These groups of little ones were photographed for us through the kindness of Miss Salmond, a member of the mission corps, who accompanies her pictures with an interesting letter. She writes:

"We feel that, in a special sense, these are God's children. He has saved them from death and has, in a marvelous way, raised up kind, true, praying friends in many places; and through your aid, they are housed, clothed, and fed. They are also being trained in the homes and at

"Our industrial work begun last May is prospering. Shoemaking, weaving, tailoring, etc., are carried on under our own supervision, in a rented house. One of the seminary students imparts his bookbinding knowledge to five or six lads on the Saturday, in a room off the mission house. A gardener has offered to train some lads in the craft, and it gladdens our hearts to see them digging and hoeing in our recently acquired grounds adjoining our Ebenezer House; sixty boys are now in it. A Protestant brother has taken three other of our lads to teach weave a special cloth. We want tools and money for this department, and then we hope to have carpentry and other useful things in daily operation.

"The girls are being qualified in all domestic arts of the simplest kind plain sewing, knitting, lace-making and embroidery. We have just engaged a Koordish woman to come and teach them to make rugs, which we trust will sell. The health of the children is good as a rule.

"We wish you could be present at our prayer meetings, and hear them ask God to reward you in manifold blessings. Some of our children, after examination, have been received as church members. We are so many now that the question of room for us in the churches and school is quite a serious one. We encourage the child to speak Armenian. We have become two bands. Miss Rubach, who came a year ago and took over 50 girls, has more than double the number, and has opened a third house in which she has 58 boys. Last year we reopened 5 school in those principles that make for righteousness, and truthfulness, and honesty. The return they make for all this love and care, is that in each home, love reigns. We seldom hear of quarreling. Obedience to the house-mother is prompt, and each one does his or her appointed work neatly and orderly; they are taught to have a place for everything and to put everything in its place.

"At school, the teachers report that the orphans are the best scholars, many of them surprise us by the progress they make. Of course, all are not alike gifted mentally, so we arrange for the duller ones to be taught some handicraft during the day and to take evening lessons.

houses with 180 children; this year we have 6 houses with 244; 3 for girls and 3 for boys. We thank all the friends in each country for their gifts and their sympathy and continue to desire earnest prayers on our behalf.

"Some of these boys and girls must leave us in a short time, and if they go with the truth in their hearts, they can live Christ in their work as tailors, and shoemakers, etc., and we shall feel we have done much for them. We want the earnest, believing, persevering prayers of God's dear children. This land—this Bible land—must be brought to Christ.

"Yours sincerely,

"AGNES C. SALMOND."

Another Great Opportunity

The prize proposition placed last month before our readers proved so exceedingly popular, attractive and successful, that we are encouraged to repeat it for subscriptions secured during the month of April and mailed before April 30, 1899. No letter bearing post-mark later than April 30, can be recognized in connection with this competition.

In reply to many inquiries, we beg to say that it is always best to send in each subscription as soon as it is secured, with full remittance, thus avoiding delay and disappointment to the subscriber.

Unless instructed to the contrary, the names of all the successful contestants will be published in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the second issue in May.

Start in to-day, and you will be surprised how easy it is to get subscribers.

To every one desiring it, we will send subscription blanks, colored premium sheets and sample copies free of charge.

This is a great opportunity to earn a number of excellent books and a liberal cash reward. Remember, you earn the books, and, the cash rewards are an additional incentive to increased activity, and will be paid to those who are fortunate enough to come out ahead in this competition, in addition to whatever books they may be entitled. Thus, even if you should fail to win a cash reward, the books will afford you substantial compensation for any subscribers which you may secure.

We Offer the Following Exceptionally Liberal Rewards:

For One new subscription we will give free, all charges prepaid, any one of the following books:

"Onward to Fame and Fortune," by Wm. M. Thayer, 446 pages, beautifully illustrated, bound in cloth, red and gilt;

"Stepping-Stones to Happiness," Harriet Prescott Spofford's latest and greatest work, over 35,000 sold; 496 pages, about 175 illustrations.

For Two new subscriptions, the one sending them may select any one of the following rewards:

"Around the World with Eyes Wide Open," by Dr. H. Allen Tupper, Jr. The Greatest Book of Travel ever published for ten times the price; 464 pages, nearly 300 beautiful illustrations, very handsomely bound;

"The Art of Home-Making," Margaret E. Sangster's great home book for Mothers and Daughters—not a book on housekeeping, but on Home-Making; 448 pages, very generously illustrated; a magnificent specimen of modern book-making.

The Christian Herald Library No. 2, consisting of ten superb volumes. Their titles and authors are as follows:

The Wedding-Ring, by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

How to Succeed, by Orison Swett Marden. M.D.
The Fairy-Land of Science, by Arabella B. Buckley.
The Land We Live In, by Henry Mann.
The Secret of a Happy Home, by Marion Harland.
Thoughts of Many Minds, by Louis Klopsch, Ph.D.

These ten books aggregate 3,200 pages, and are beautifully bound in Olive Green, Red and Gilt Titles. We especially recommend lovers of good literature and those who desire to help their Sunday School Library to make an effort to get two new subscribers, either in the Sunday School, the Church, or among their friends, and then present to their Sunday School Library the ten volumes constituting this Library. These books are carefully packed in corrugated cardboard cases, ensuring safe and undamaged delivery.

For Three new subscribers we will send, all charges prepaid, a superb Long-Primer, Leather Bound and Leather Lined, Divinity Circuit, Red-under-Gold Edged, Teacher's Bible, with patent thumb index, in either the Authorized Version, or the Revised Version. Our Revised Version Bibles are the only ones in verse form conforming exactly to the Authorized Version.

For Five new subscribers we will send, all charges prepaid, one of our Superb, Genuine London Art Bibles, 1,334 pages and 852 illustrations, Elegantly Bound in Leather, Divinity Circuit, Red-under-Gold and Overlapping Edges.

This Bible is set in extra large type, and is as serviceable for home reading as for Sunday School work. The 852 beautiful pictures which it contains elucidate the text more than references and an extensive commentary could do, and they invest the Holy Scriptures with new life to old and young. The pictures illustrate scenes and explain orientalisms which heretofore were but imperfectly understood. It is the greatest of illustrated Bibles, and will prove a prize indeed to every one fortunate enough to secure it.

We also Give $100 in Cash

In addition to the above rewards, we will distribute $100 as follows among the persons who, under the above offer, send in the largest number of subscribers:

For the largest list of all, in addition to the books	$25.00 in cash
For the next largest list, " " "	20.00 "
For the next largest list, " " "	15.00 "
For the next largest list, " " "	10.00 "
For the Six next largest lists, each $5.00, "	30.00 "

MAKING A TOTAL OF TEN EXTRA REWARDS, AGGREGATING $100.

And all this in addition to the book reward earned under the above proposition. Remember you get the books anyway, and the cash if you come in ahead.

Jesus Teaching Humility

S. S. Lesson for April 16. John 13: 1-17
Golden Text, John 13: 15

BEFORE the feast of the Passover, Jesus knowing that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father. His hour was come: he knew he was about to suffer, he knew what he was about to suffer, and he knew it by the Scripture which he had studied. But the suffering, tremendous as it should be, was not the thing that occupied him; but that he, the Man Christ Jesus, having finished the work which his Father had given him to do, having glorified him on the earth, should be able to take up with him to the Father at the right hand of God the human nature in which he had proved it possible to fulfil the whole will of God. The goal was in sight. He saw the purpose of the Father "before the world was" taking shape in his hands, and he was strengthened for the last hours of his awful conflict with sin, the world and the devil.

What was it that occupied Jesus in this critical hour? His own, his unworthy followers whom he loved to call his own! "Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end." They had failed to understand him in that which most occupied his heart, that he should suffer at the hands of wicked men, be condemned, killed, and rise again the third day. Again and again he had returned to the subject, but instead of his patience being worn out, "He loved them unto the end."

"And during supper . . . Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he came forth from God and goeth unto God, riseth from supper and layeth aside his garments and he proceeded to wash his disciples' feet." Jesus knowing! How did he know? He had voluntarily emptied himself, while he was always "the Son of God who is in heaven" (Phil. 2: 7); and had voluntarily taken upon himself the flesh and blood of the seed of Abraham, and been made in all things like unto his brethren (Hebrews 2: 14–17). Thus coming down to our level, he must increase or advance in wisdom (Luke 2: 40, 52), just like any other human being, by the study of the Scripture, "the things of his Father" (verse 49, margin, R. V.). He, as Man, had learned "in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself," which he, three days later, taught the two disciples on the way to Emmaus. And thus he knew that the Father had given all things into his hands, while the jealous heads of the Jewish Church and state were plotting to get him into their hands. And just when all was delivered to him, he let himself be delivered into the hands of man that he might save us. He knew that he was come from God, and went to God, and he manifested his high position in taking the place of the ordinary slave, and washing the feet of the disciples whose ways and spirit were so contrary to his! The Word which "was from the beginning," which was "with God," and which "was God," by whom "all things were made," "was made flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld his glory!" (John 1: 1, 2, 14). He into whose hands the Father had given all things, who came from God, and was about to go to God, took his position by girding himself to wash his disciples' feet! Such was the deed: "I am among you as he that serveth" (Luke 22: 27) was the word with which he cut from under the feet of the disciples any ground they had for striving which should be the greatest! If he took the lowest place of all, then there is no place of royal dignity in his kingdom as high as that.

One of the disciples, Peter, wanted to be an exception to the rest. It is always pride and self which wants to be an exception from others. Simon Peter said, "Lord, dost thou wash my feet?" He did not say, "our feet." My feet. "What I do," was the answer, "thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." "Thou shalt never wash my feet." Peter looked at things only from his own side. One of those who had striven which should be the greatest; perhaps even the foremost in the discussion, probably his conscience struck him when the only one of the company who arose to take the slave's place was his Lord and Master, whom he had acknowledged as "the Christ, the Son of the living God," and yet the pride of his heart led him to be willing that James and John and the other disciples should be thus served, but that he himself would be an example to them all of the consideration which was due to Jesus. The Lord needed Peter's ear, but he did not need his human consideration. His Father had measured the cup for him. How those words must have followed this disciple after the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and how crushed and covered with shame must he have been that he had not only denied his Lord, but also, in his miserable self-consciousness, had set himself above his fellow-disciples in seeking to be an exception, while not one of them had denied their Lord as he had done! Jesus must bring things to a point with this impulsive, wilful man. "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me." How soon after, Peter, in his shame and bitter tears, felt his deep sinfulness, and shrank from himself as an unclean thing. How soon he needed more than external washing at the hands of Jesus! Now he says with his usual impulsiveness, "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head." He soon found that his heart was the seat of the uncleanness, and this same Peter learned himself and taught others a redemption not with silver and gold, from our vain manner of life handed down by tradition from our fathers, but with precious blood, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot. And he had found out the secret that souls are purified in obedience to the truth unto unfeigned love of the brethren (1. Peter 1: 18–22). Jesus answered, "He that is bathed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit; and ye are clean, but not all." For he knew him that should betray him; therefore, said he, "ye are not all clean. Ye are clean!" And yet they would be filled with shame in a few hours that they would all forsake—and one of them that he would deny him!

HE POURETH WATER INTO A BASIN AND BEGAN TO WASH THE DISCIPLES' FEET

LESSON POINTS

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

ONE of the most tender and beautiful of Christ's acts was this of the foot-washing. It showed with what delicacy the truly great leader of men administers reproof. In the East, at that time, men wore, instead of shoes, sandals attached to the foot by a thong passing over it and around the ankle. Walking over the chalky roads of Palestine the dust would collect on the uncovered top of the foot. So the custom grew, for a host, when his guests were assembled, to send in a servant with a basin and pitcher, who removed the sandals and washed the feet of the guests. Christ once called the attention of his host to the fact that

He poureth water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet.

Of course they knew that he had washed their feet. There was no need to ask that. What Christ meant was did they know the significance of it. It was not a mere rite which could be observed by simply washing a brother's feet: it was the spirit of humility in the heart which could manifest itself by any service. A very proud man could bring himself to wash another's feet. The Emperor of Austria and the Pope do it once a year, but neither of them thereby fulfils Christ's command. It is a childish thing thus to slavishly follow the letter. Lest they should do so, Christ puts the question, "Know ye what I have done?" A clergyman recently went to a politician and asked him to use his influence to get a poor boy a position in the government service. "The only chance for the boy," said the politician, "is in a certain department, and I cannot help you there. The man at the head of it is a man from whom I could not bring myself to ask a favor. If I were starving I would not ask him for help." But the clergyman argued that what the politician would not do for himself he was bound as a Christian man to do for another, and quoted this incident of the foot-washing. Finally the politician yielded. "It is very humiliating," he said, "I hate to do it. I cannot bear to stoop to ask a favor of such a man. I do it because you assure me that it is my duty as a follower of Christ." He wrote the letter which secured the boy the appointment, and in so doing obeyed Christ better than if he had washed the feet of a hundred men.

Not my feet only but also my hands. When Peter knew that submission was a condition of union with Christ, he was eager for more than was required. He wished to be altogether his Lord's. But Christ explained to him that the one act was sufficient. It is so still. He that is really and truly regenerated does not need a repetition of the process. As he walks through the world, he may get his feet soiled: some of the pollution of sin and worldliness may cling to him, which Christ will remove. But, "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." The heart is right, though under extreme temptation, or through lack of vigilance he may have fallen into sin. Then he that has once been washed will come humbly to Christ to be forgiven and to have his impurity removed. The story is told of the second mate of a ship, that he was down in the cabin working out a problem when the captain ordered all portholes closed. The problem was important to the ship's reckoning; and the mate ventured to keep the porthole open that he might have light to complete his task. But he did not know that a huge wave was approaching. In two minutes the water was pouring in in a deluge, and the mate was shouting for help. A dozen men ran down and by their united strength the porthole was closed. Then the mate went up to the captain to confess his fault. "Bid me throw myself overboard," he said: "I deserve it." But the captain was a wise and generous man. "No," said he, "I could not afford to lose a good officer—who will not disobey again." The backslider who returns to Christ is received lovingly and with tender compassion as Peter was after his denial.

Supper being ended. This is a wrong translation. The preparations were ended, but the supper was not begun. It should read, "Supper being served." It was after all was ready and the attendants having retired, Jesus was alone with his disciples that he administered his re[illegible] chief, upset a cabinet, in which his father kept a large collection of geological specimens. The confusion was complete, and the serious feature of it was that the father was finishing a work in which he had to refer to them continually. "You do not know, my son," he said, "how much work you have caused me. "I shall have to sit up all night to get these specimens into their proper order." The next morning at breakfast the mother lamented that her husband had been at work all night and had lost his proper sleep. The boy listened with shame, and expected to hear his father explain how it was that he had been obliged to give his night to work. If he did so, his mother and brothers and sisters would blame and despise him. But his father kept silence as to his fault, and merely said that he would get a good, long sleep when his book was finished. The delicacy of his reticence drew the boy's heart to him as nothing else could have done. It was when they were alone that Christ rebuked his disciples.

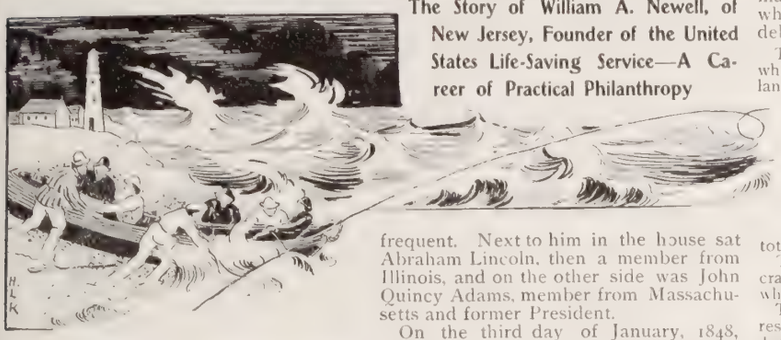
He Flung the First Life-Line



The Story of William A. Newell, of New Jersey, Founder of the United States Life-Saving Service—A Career of Practical Philanthropy

IN these days of widespread philanthropy and benevolence, when efforts for the preservation of human life and the mitigation of human suffering are found on every hand, it is well, both by way of encouragement and example, to look back at the humble efforts in which many of the noblest of these enterprises had their beginnings. In almost every instance, they originated in the consecrated impulse of some earnest man or woman, whose sole unselfish aim was to serve God and benefit humanity. The story of the founding of the United States Life-Saving Service is one that shows the priceless value to the world of a generous idea persistently carried out without thought of personal advantage. One day, in the winter of 1839, a furious storm was raging along the coast of New Jersey. An Austrian brig, the Count Perasto, was in peril. Her booming cannon told the dwellers on the coast that she was on a dangerous reef of sand, lying parallel with the shore from Barnegat Inlet to Sandy Hook. The villagers of Mannahawkin gallantly responded to the signal of distress. It was midnight, but lanterns were hurriedly lighted, storm coats were donned, and soon a group of anxious men were seen on the beach. A thousand feet away lay the doomed vessel pounding her timbers on the bar, her lights quivering under every blow of the surf. The men on shore courageously manned a fishing-boat and put out in the breakers, only to be swamped and tossed back in the surf. Time and again they tried, the shrieks of the drowning sailors urging them on; but their boat could not live in that frightful sea. One by one, the men of the ship's crew were engulfed and met death in the angry waters. At daylight, thirteen dead bodies lay on the sands.

William A. Newell, a young medical man of the village, helped carry the dead to their resting-place. As he glanced from the shore to the dismantled hulk of the Perasto, he was struck by the pitifully short space that intervened. The ship lay in comparatively shallow water, and the crew had therefore been within a few hundred yards of safety when she struck. The idea at once occurred to him—Why not an arrow or a rifle ball to carry a line? Hastening home, he procured an old rifle, with ramrod and a stout cord. A neighbor lent him a bow and arrows. For hours he stood on the shore, working out the idea which had now fully taken possession of his mind. The arrows fell short, incapable of sustaining the weight of the cord. The bullets and the ramrod snapped the cord at the first discharge. Next Mr. Newell made use of a kite, but this, too, was uncertain. The projectile idea still haunted him when he ran across an old ship's mortar, relic of a former disaster, and obtained permission to use it. This worked better, for it would at least carry the line. It was badly aimed at first, and so failed to reach the vessel. A second attempt fell short, but the third succeeded, the line falling squarely over the wreck amidships. Thus was cast the first life-line.

Mr. Newell continued his experiments and tried to provide means for shooting life-lines from both the decks of ships and the shore by mortars or canonades.

He rose in his profession and became a leader in public affairs in his section of the State, but he still kept in view his life-saving project. He was chosen as a representative to Congress in 1846, his district included Mannahawkin and a long stretch of coast where shipwrecks are frequent. Next to him in the house sat Abraham Lincoln, then a member from Illinois, and on the other side was John Quincy Adams, member from Massachusetts and former President.

On the third day of January, 1848, Congressman Newell introduced the first resolution for a life-saving service. His resolution failed to pass, the members ignoring even the personal appeals of their colleague; but on August ninth of the same year, he offered an amendment to the Senate lighthouse bill, providing for "surf-boats, rockets, canonades, and other apparatus for the better preservation of life and property from shipwreck along the coast of New Jersey between Sandy Hook and Little Egg Harbor."

"Give us some rockets," he said, in supporting the measure. "A few surf-boats, a small quantity of rope, a few cannonades, which can never be put to better use; give us these means and all will bless you; the mariner, the passenger and the merchant will bless you, and he who orders all earthly event will smile upon these efforts in the sacred cause of humanity."

Abraham Lincoln helped Dr. Newell very materially in getting votes for this measure, and was so deeply impressed with the subject that he(Lincoln), a short time afterward, designed and patented an invention to aid wrecked vessels, and later,in 1861, when President, he appointed his old friend, Newell, superintendent of the service on the coast of New Jersey. No salaries were paid for the first ten years or more to the brave fellows who manned the life-boats. In many respects the work resembled the volunteer fire departments of small towns, where men can always be found imbued with the spirit of helpfulness to those in distress. It remained for Mr. Newell to broaden and amplify his first measure. In the second session of the Thirtieth Congress, he secured an appropriation of $40,000 and an extension of the service to Cape May on the south and the Atlantic coast of Long Island to the north. About this time, the value of the new life-saving service was strikingly demonstrated. The Scotch packet-ship, Ayrshire, struck the bar during a violent snow-storm, off Absecorn, on the 25th of December, 1849, and drifted to Square Beach. All except one of her 301 passengers and crew were rescued by the new system. A line was sent out, discharged with a ball from a cannonade across the ship. A hawser was bent, on which a life-car was rigged to take the people ashore. This achievement thrilled the country, and had its influence upon Congress. A larger appropriation placed the service on a paid basis.

EX-GOVERNOR W. A. NEWELL
Founder of the United States Life-Saving Service

How the service has grown, and what splendid results have been accomplished, may be gathered from a brief review, for which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is indebted to Superintendent Kimball:

The service now embraces 264 stations, of which number, 192 are on the coasts of the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico; 56 on the American coasts of the Great Lakes; 1 at the falls of the Ohio, Louisville, and 15 on the Pacific. There were during the year 1898, 402 disasters to documented vessels having on board 3,113 persons, of whom only twelve were lost. The estimated value of the vessels was $5,861,320; cargoes, $1,307,070. Of this amount, $6,410,530 was saved and $757,860 lost. The number of vessels totally lost was fifty-nine.

The number of disasters to "undocumented craft" was 365, involving 874 persons, ten of whom perished.

The aggregate number of disasters and their results:

Total number of disasters	767
Total value of property involved	$7,368,075
Total value of property saved	6,588,355
Total value of property lost	779,740
Total number of persons involved	3,987
Total number of persons lost	22
Total number of persons succored at stations	663
Total number of days' succor afforded	1,328
Number of vessels totally lost	59

The life-saving crews saved and assisted to save during the year, 471 vessels, valued with their cargoes at $2,868,655.

Assistance was rendered to 430 other vessels in distress. The crews also warned from danger 226 vessels, 215 by night signals, and 11 by day signals. The loss of life and property thus averted cannot be estimated, but that many disasters were prevented is evident from the circumstances under which the warnings were given. The next expenditure for the maintenance of the service was $1,497,676.35.

Six new stations were completed during the year. Information of all disasters of consequence occurring within the scope of the service is now promptly transmitted to the general telegraph system of the country, by which means it speedily reaches all important commercial centres.

The humble village physician, who has thus gloriously realized his dream of saving human life at sea, has been called to many honors and distinctions since that eventful day upon which he cast the first life-line. It has fallen to his lot to be Governor of two States, to serve in three Congresses, to help organize two political parties, and to hold many other important public positions. He was Governor of New Jersey from 1856 to 1859, and of Washington from 1880 to 1884. At the age of eighty-one he has returned to Allentown and settled down to resume the practice of medicine in his old home. There, in the midst of his labors, he often speaks of the past. He confidently declares that it was God's hand that led him to the scene of that wreck in 1839, and that the thirteen poor sailors did not die in vain.

Congress has made no public recognition of his services to the nation and to humanity, but in the two States over which he has had the honor to preside, New Jersey and Washington, resolutions have been adopted by the respective commonwealths, tendering him their thanks. His name deserves to go down to posterity as that of one of the benefactors of the human race.

Fighting of fire and shipwreck, saving men,
Is heroism unto God's own will;
Though they that do it may not know to boast.
Who casts the life-line to the drowning, serves
The One who bade the troubled sea "Be still."
God bless the brave life-savers on our coast!

Temperance Her Life-Work

IT is doubtful if even the late Frances Willard traveled so many hundreds of thousands of miles or addressed more audiences than have been addressed by Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, during the eighteen years in which she has been engaged in the work of securing compulsory temperance education laws in the United States. Mrs. Hunt is National and International Superintendent of the Department of Scientific Temperance Instruction, and Life Director of the National Education Association. Through her persistent and untiring efforts, every State—excepting Utah, Arkansas, Virginia and Georgia—has on its statute book laws regarding scientific temperance education in the public schools.

In 1886, Mrs. Hunt, after months of effort, secured the passage of a national temperance education law for schools under Federal control. Mrs. Hunt has also secured the passage of these laws in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. She has addressed the legislatures of nearly every State and territory in the Union, being an eloquent and forceful speaker.

She employs at her home in Boston from six to nine secretaries and stenographers. She travels thousands of miles every year perfecting and strengthening her work. Her efforts have resulted in legislative enactments in forty-one States and the national Congress, making physiological temperance a compulsory study for more than 16,000,000 children of school age. Mrs. Hunt says of these children:

What shall be taught them is a question fraught with destiny to the individual, family and social life of our people and to the Republic itself. A self-governing people must be a sober people. Alcohol is a brain poison. In the nature of things, either the saloon or the Republic must perish. To falter in the demand that the utmost truth against alcoholic drinks and other narcotics shall be taught would be more than sinful. Except to the eye of faith, this struggle for the truth has seemed an unequal contest, but the God of Nations has been guiding.

Read the Bible Through 56 Times

John McMichael, an octogenarian living at White Oak Creek, Ga., has read his Bible through from Genesis to Revelations no less than fifty-six times. During the last three years he has accomplished the task five times, reading systematically several hours a day in the intervals of his duties as a farmer. In addition to his Old Testament reading, he has perused the New Testament over 100 times, wearing out several copies of the Scripture in doing so. He is a very interesting character, having enlisted in 1836 and served in the Indian wars under Captain Joseph Burke, who is now dead, together with every other member of the command except the old Bible reader. He also served for two years in the Civil War. He was converted forty-two years ago.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

Canals—Nicaragua and Others

"Lo, on a narrow neck of land,
'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand."

THUS sang the poet years ago, and, if he were alive to-day, he would see that even this narrow strip between ocean and ocean is very rapidly disappearing. Men have concluded that ditches are better than ridges, that short cuts must supplant circuitous routes, and all around the world they have taken to cutting out gaps, bridging chasms, dredging canals. The bill in favor of one at Nicaragua has passed the Senate and, it is to be hoped, will also get through the House this session. Its provisions are too familiar to need repetition, and we shall only pause to express our gratification. The benefits of this work upon our coasts and the new life it will give our Pacific States have been dwelt on so frequently, that it were superfluous to recapitulate them. Suffice it to say, that it scarcely requires a prophetic gift to foresee the time when the gulf will be crowded with argosies of our merchandise, and every nation under heaven joining in salutation at San Juan del Norte.

We may lay it down as a general rule, that in these days all things that come under our observation are approaching each other. By steam and electricity the little hills have been made to skip like lambs, mountains have tunnelled, continents have moved. The moon is scarcely further from us than China was from David. London and New York are nearer than were London and Paris in the good old days of Elizabeth. And a man in Washington can more easily converse now, with a friend in Chicago, than he could a hundred years ago with a neighbor in Alexandria. Then, by these canals, oceans are merging into oceans, and, to all practical intents, China moves halfway to the Hub of things terrestrial—Boston.

But do you suppose that this process of juxtaposition stops here? You are mistaken. Earth and heaven are approaching. The Spirit that is from above is driving out the spirit of earth, is introducing more helpfulness, more consideration, more patience, more charity. The number of those who, living on earth, are yet citizens of heaven is so vast as to justify even a rational calculation as to the time when the entire world will be Christianized. But in a yet deeper sense earth and heaven are getting closer. By scientific research, and by philosophic inquiry, men have been mining away from beneath; while from above, heaven is at work; and sometimes in manifestations of baffling mystery, in rays of unwonted light, in visions of unearthly beauty, they seem to be communicating with us below. And even now, there are thousands of souls who have been instant in prayer and firm in faith have had communions and experiences which they refuse to utter to a sceptical world.

But of this we may be sure: the approximation will still go on and some day or other—in God's good time—the last obstacle will be overcome, and earth and heaven, and past and future, will all be united and thereby will be made possible a richness of spiritual traffic and of friendly visitation that is as yet only a hope.

An Inquiry Answered

A READER in the northern part of New York State sends us the following letter:

... N.Y.
May ..., 1899.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage:

DEAR SIR: Pardon a stranger for addressing you, but I have read your sermons until I almost think that if, through the grace of God, I am permitted to meet you in heaven, I shall know you without further introduction. I read a few days since that you had resigned your charge. You have spoken to so many hearts in your sermons, I cannot refrain from asking you to take the matter to God once more, for I know so many look for your sermons, week after week, I fear souls will be lost if you do not continue in the ministry. I am yours in Christian fellowship,

MRS. F. A. WRIGHT.

To the writer of this letter—and to others who have addressed us in similar terms—we gladly give the assurance that it is not now, and has not been at any time, Dr. Talmage's intention to retire from the Christian ministry. He is in the field while life endures, and so long as he has the strength to raise his voice, it shall be lifted to tell the wondrous story of full and free salvation through Christ Jesus. His withdrawal from his Washington pastorate became an imperative duty, in view of the constantly increasing demands made upon him for more widely extended Gospel labor with voice and pen—claims which, though repressed for years, would no longer be denied, even though their recognition involved the sacrifice of personal comfort and most agreeable associations.

For years Dr. Talmage has longed for the opportunity to go about, and, "without money and without price," to preach the Gospel and meet the multitudes who have long been readers of his sermons, but whom he has never yet had the pleasure of meeting face to face. He will now be able to greet in person the members of his larger parish in every State, and to speak to their congregations. Having relieved himself of all other responsibilities, that he may yield a ready and unimpeded response to this broader Gospel call, he hopes to be privileged to speak through press and pulpit, with increasing acceptability and blessing, in the days to come.

Clergymen's Sons

THE world quotes a great many untrue proverbs, and one of those lying maxims reigned from age to age declaring that minister's children never turn out well. The facts collected by another show that a larger percentage of the children of preachers of the Gospel have turned out well than of any other class. President Arthur, son of a Baptist minister; President Cleveland, son of a Presbyterian minister; Ex-Governor Patterson, of Pennsylvania and Ex-Governor Taylor, of Tennessee, sons of Methodist ministers. Many of the best men in our National Legislature are the sons of ministers of many denominations. Thousands of the most consecrated clergymen of to-day are the sons of ministers. It could not be that ministers of religion who give themselves to a calling certainly as useful as any other, to say nothing more, would be made more liable than any other class to domestic misfortune, and I am glad that in the most resounding way, and before all nations, that long prevalent error has been refuted.

What Next?

THINGS seem all adrift. So much unreasonable talk and mere senseless clatter about the attitude this country ought to take, concerning the Philippine archipelago, leave many people in bewilderment. The fact is that God is managing these affairs, and our statesmen need especial guidance. Those public men, who talk as though they can foresee the result of the Americo-Spanish conflict, know no more about what will next happen than the humblest man or woman who reads these lines. The true attitude, for those of us who are not legislators, is to pray and wait. Not one man in America could have a year ago foretold what has already happened. Something as sudden and startling as the destruction of the Maine may occur within a month to upset all prophecies. Fevered and angry discussion, in and out of Congress, is most inappropriate and bad. Equipoise, faith, prayerfulness, are the moods we should all cultivate.

The Seas at Work

THE angry ocean has been at it again. The mingled stories of affright and courage have made all our sympathies to tingle. Oh, cruel sea, pity them! "No," says the sea, "I never pity. I swallowed the Ville du Havre, and the Arctic, and the Central America, and the Schiller, and the Utopia. My plaything are shipwrecks, my wine is made out of the tears of nations." It seems that every shipwreck must give to the world an illustration of the greatest doctrine of the Bible, namely, vicarious suffering. Those sailors, in the face of almost certain death, plunged into the sea to rescue some of the sinking passengers, and go down never to rise. Vicarious sacrifice! Who can watch those brave sailors swamped, without thinking of the greatest deed of these nineteen centuries, the pushing out of the Chieftain of the universe to take the human race off the wreck of a world! Oh, how often has the sea witnessed scenes of self-sacrifice!

Economize for Charities

THE wide-spread extravagance accounts for the poverty of religious institutions. Men pay so much for show they have nothing for God and religion. We pay in this country twenty-two millions of dollars for the great benevolent societies: but what are the twenty-two millions of dollars compared with the ninety-five millions for cigars and tobacco, and the one thousand four hundred and eighty-three millions for drink? How do you like the comparison? Let us set ourselves in battle array against this God-defying extravagance. Buy not those things which are frivolous, when you may, after a while, be in lack of the necessities. Buy not books you will never read, nor pictures you will never study. Keep your credit good by seldom or never asking for any. Pay. Starve not a whole year so as to be able to afford one Belshazzar's carnival. Do not buy a coat of many colors, and then in six months be out at the elbows. Do not pay so much for a muffler for the neck, and be almost barefooted. Flourish not, as some I know of, in elegant hotels with drawing-room apartments, and then vanish in the night, not even leaving your compliments for the landlord. In the great day of fire we will have to give an account not only for how we made our money, but for how we spent it. On this cold day, when so many are suffering, and ... and behind us and want on either side of us, let us quit our waste. Men and women of God, set a Christian example!

The sudden death of Rev. A. S. Gumbart, Pastor of the Dudley-st. Baptist Church, Boston, Mass., was a shock to his people and his many friends of other denominations. As a leader in Sunday School work and childrens' services, Dr. Gumbart was known and admired far and near.

By the death of Dr. Michael E. Strieby, Secretary of the American Missionary Association, the Congregational Church loses one of its most intelligent and energetic officers. Dr. Strieby served the Association for more than thirty years and did much to elevate the colored people and to spread the Gospel in neglected districts among people beyond the reach of the churches.

A remarkable innovation is reported from Oxford, England. It is a college established in connection with the University by two young Americans, Mr. W. Vroom and Mr. C. A. Beard, for the study of labor problems. It is called Ruskin Hall and its text books will be the works of John Ruskin and other friends of labor. No servants will be employed in Ruskin Hall, like those in other Oxford Colleges. The work will be done by the students in the Hall.

The calendar of the Moravian Brethren for 1898 shows the increase in membership, 1896 to 1897, to have been from 128,302 to 129,617, or only 225. In Germany, there was really a decrease from 8,752 to 8,723. There are 5,597 members in Britain, and 22,345 in America. But in heathen lands the church has been wonderfully blessed. The Moravian has always been a missionary church, and its devotion to the cause is proved by its victories in many lands. Its expenditure in missions for the year amounted ...

An interesting service was held recently in the Lewis Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, when John L. Dube, a member of the royal family of Zululand in South Africa, was ordained a minister of the Congregational Church. He has been required to renounce his rights in his native country owing to the fact that no person is eligible to the chieftainship of a district but one who practices the native religion. Mr. Dube has been studying theology in this country preparatory to labor among the Zulus.

Rev. Thomas Harrison is holding Revival services at Decatur, Ill., where the great revival occurred under his preaching sixteen years ago. Among Mr. Harrison's best helpers are some who were converted then. A local journal says that the great First Methodist Church is crowded at every service, and numbers of people are glad to stand after every seat is taken. Rev. Frost Craft, the pastor of the church, is joining heartily in the work. Rev. W. A. Quayle, of Indianapolis, has promised to preach the Jubilee sermon at the close of the services.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has completed his evangelistic tour in India. The India Witness speaks in grateful terms of the blessing his visit has been to the churches. Men of every creed and every Christian denomination have listened with profit to his discourses which were on the subject of the Holy Spirit in the church. Mr. Meyer says that the most amazing revelations of his trip to India has been the discovery of how much American missionaries are doing for India. He counts it as ... and the United States toward the less fortunate non-Christian peoples of the world.

Overhauling the Ruins

WORK on the ruins of the burned Windsor Hotel in New York has been continued from day to day since the fire. Each day furnished a ghastly story of the discovery of charred fragments of human bodies. At the close of the week, eight days after the fire, sixteen of these fragments, each representing the body of a person who had perished in the holocaust, had been taken out of the ruins and carried to the morgue. In the majority of cases it was impossible to form an opinion as to the age or sex of the victim, and in all no feature was left by which identification could be made. Besides these, eleven persons have died, whose bodies were identified, making in all a death list of twenty-seven. The number of guests on the register of the hotel was 212, and the employees who are believed to have been there, numbered 274. Of these, eighteen still remain to be accounted for, and it is feared that all of them perished in the fire. Jewelry and valuables of the value of about fifty thousand dollars have been found, and it is expected that more will yet be unearthed. One of the unidentified bodies is believed, from the position in which it was found, to be that of the elevator man, Guion, to whose devotion and courage many of the persons saved owe their lives. He continued to make trips to the upper floors and bring down their occupants during the fire after the firemen warned him that he was risking his life. On his last trip, he was descending, when the fire burned the support at the top and the pulley and ropes fell. He immediately applied the safety clutches and prevented the fall of the elevator, but it was caught between floors and no one could leave it. He had been twenty years in the employ of the Windsor Hotel, and supported his mother and two sisters. The illustration on this page shows the condition of the ruins five days after the fire. The house overlooking them is the residence of Miss Helen Gould, whose kindness in the emergency deserves the highest praise. She turned the house into a temporary hospital, to which injured persons were carried for treatment, thus saving the time of conveying them to a hospital. There is no doubt that Miss Gould's thoughtful hospitality saved many lives. An ominous statement is made by the Chief of the Fire Department, to the effect that there are many more hotels in the city which would burn as quickly as the Windsor, if they once caught fire. This statement has caused general concern, and there is a strong demand for legislative action to close all hotels which are not safe. It is felt that the public ought to be protected from such danger to life, as is incurred in a hotel which is nothing less than a firetrap. It is much to be wished that there were a similar demand for the closing of places where there is moral danger. The number of people who lose their lives by fire in hotels, is small compared to the number who lose their souls in places where they are lured to eternal death:

He knoweth not that the dead are there: and that the guests are in the depths of hell (Prov. 9:18).

An Old Security

Government officers have been astonished by the presentation of an old note for payment. The note was sent by a Massachusetts bank to a bank in New York, which presented it at the subtreasury. It is found to belong to a series issued to cover arrearages in the expenses of the war of 1812. No note of that series has been presented since 1842, and it was supposed that at this late period none ever would be presented. The note, however, being a genuine acknowledgment of indebtedness, is to be paid and will be charged to an account of the old public debt. Where it has been during the past eighty-four years no one appears to know. If the holder had put it into a savings bank instead of hoarding it, he would by this time have been entitled to a large sum in interest. Every business man perceives the folly of the holder of the note who suffered it to lie idle so long; but few realize that there is similar folly in neglecting to use their gifts and opportunities in God's service; though Christ clearly and emphatically taught the danger of such neglect.

Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the bankers, and at my coming I should have received back mine own with interest (Matt. 25: 27 R. V.)

The War in the Philippines

Although the military campaign in the Philippines has been protracted beyond expectation, it now seems probable that the crisis has been reached. Gen. Otis's plan of operations was to divide the Filipino forces, and, by rapidly advancing his troops, to surround Aguinaldo in his own capital, Malolos, and compel his surrender. The insurgents, though repeatedly repulsed at various points, contested our advance stubbornly, and trenches, jungle and villages were only carried at the cost of many lives on both sides. In three days' fighting on the line between Caloocan and Polo, the Americans under Gen. Harrison, Gen. Otis and Gen. Hale lost 22 killed and 168 wounded, the enemy's losses being very much heavier. Cavalry, artillery and infantry were used in these assaults, but the nature of the ground—jungle, swamp and rice-fields—made the burden of the fighting fall upon the infantry regiments. One by one the assaulted villages were burned by the insurgents before evacuation. The flower of Aguinaldo's army is concentrated at Malolos, where a final stand will probably be made. It is extremely disappointing to find that so many of the people whose good we seek, should resist our supremacy, preferring the anarchy that would ensue under Aguinaldo, to the liberty and development they would enjoy under our rule. It is a pity that they should be so deceived to their own undoing by ambitious men.

While they promise them liberty they themselves are the servants of corruption (II. Peter 2:19).

The New Librarian

In the selection of Mr. Herbert Putnam as Congressional Librarian to succeed the late John Russell Young, it is generally conceded that the choice is probably the best that could have been made. Mr. Putnam has been at the head of the Boston Public Library for several years, and is eminently qualified for the more important post to which he has been called. He is thirty-eight years of age, a graduate of Harvard, and a trained bibliopolist. His first public position was as librarian of the Minneapolis Athenæum, which placed at his disposal $10,000 annually to expend on books. Next he became the head of the Minneapolis Public Library, which he had personally helped to organize, and for seven years had the control of from $50,000 to $75,000 a year for purchasing new publications. He made it one of the most valuable and useful libraries in America, personally superintending the purchases and going abroad in the search for desirable books. In 1895 he assumed charge of the Boston Library, which has grown to splendid proportions under his wise and progressive management. In his new post he will have ample scope for his energies and an opportunity to do the nation valuable service in bringing the Congressional Library up to a high standard of completeness and availability. It is gratifying to know that the office is not to be given to a politician but to a man whose sole claim is the proved ability to perform its duties.

RUINS OF THE BURNED WINDSOR HOTEL IN NEW YORK, AND THE HOUSE OF MISS HELEN GOULD

An Heir in Prison

The captain of the detective police force in New York, was astonished a few days ago by the voluntary surrender of an absconding embezzler. He walked into the Captain's office and stated that he was a man for whom there had been a keen search eleven years ago. He had been employed by a clothing firm on Broadway, and had stolen two hundred dollars from his employers. He had absconded and had been living since that time in California under an assumed name. The police had searched for him, but he had succeeded in eluding them. Recently, however, hearing that his father was dead and had left him all his money, he had returned. He hoped to have arranged with his former employers to escape punishment by refunding the amount of his defalcation with interest, but had been unable to do so. As he knew that he could not secure his inheritance without declaring his identity and so setting the police on his track, he had resolved to surrender himself voluntarily and undergo the penalty of his crime. He was accordingly arrested and was formally committed for trial on his own confession. He is learning the force of a principle which it is so difficult to get people to recognize in their dealing with God. A crime cannot be atoned for by repentance nor even by restitution. The wrongdoer must suffer the penalty. That is why Christ's atonement was necessary to save the world from the penalty as well as the power of sin.

Christ hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God (1 Peter 3:18).

A Boon Unappreciated

The State Agricultural Department of Nebraska has recently received information which will result in the repeal of laws on the statute books of Nebraska, Kansas, Wyoming and Colorado. They are laws providing for the extirpation of the Russian thistle, which five years ago made its appearance in those States. It was so hardy and multiplied so rapidly that fears were entertained that it would soon cover all the region between the Missouri River and the mountains, and cause the land to revert to the savage state of the prairie. The Department of Agriculture at Washington was notified and men were sent to investigate it and suggest measures for its extirpation. It has now been discovered that it is not the evil it was supposed, but is useful either for fuel or as fodder for stock. Hundreds of farmers who have used the plant for feeding horses, cattle, sheep and hogs pronounce it equal to alfalfa. In fact, the thistle in a dry state very much resembles alfalfa, and the experience of farmers and stockmen is that it is more sought by stock than any other form of wild hay. It is generally declared to be the equal in every way of prairie hay and devoid of the wiry qualities of the latter. For fuel, the thistle is not to be despised. It is cheaper than any other form of fuel in a country like the four States in which the Russian thistle flourishes, because there is no timber in abundance to be used for fuel. Two bales of thistles are declared to be equal to a cord of wood in point of heat-producing and four bales equal to a ton of coal. The cost of collecting and stacking it is a mere trifle; and as it will grow in the dryest land, its value is understood. Some of our spiritual experiences are of a like order. Many a man has found that the trouble under which he groaned and fretted has proved a blessing to him.

No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness to them which are exercised thereby (Heb. 12:11).

THE FORCE GOING ON POST—GENERAL AVANCO IN THE FOREGROUND

REVIEWED BY THE GUESTS OF THE HOTEL INGLATERRA

TWO parties exist to-day in Cuba. The basis of their differences is really the light in which they contend American rule ought to be regarded. Men in the towns, who have not taken an active part in the fighting—property-owners who have something to lose, and all the more conservative element—accept the American situation. They are loud in their praises of the good sense and diplomacy with which Uncle Sam is bringing peace on the troubled sea of Cuban politics. This party is perhaps the largest and is certainly the most influential; but, scattered throughout the country, there are thousands of "irreconcilables." They hardly know what to make of the present situation. They were ready to resist the American government, but they now find nothing that would make resistance justifiable. Accustomed for generations to hate the government, and regarding the idea of Cuba Libre as a sacred fetich, they are mistrustful of everything American. They whisper together in the cafes, and growl under their breath when they pass an American on Obispo street. This is the party to which Generals Lacret and Rabi belong—the party which showed their gratitude to Gomez by depriving him of his command, because he accepted the American situation. It is hard to tell exactly what they want; it is questionable whether they know themselves; they are [illegible] chaos in Cuba—the danger to its future.

It is one of the most hopeful signs of the times in Havana that men now talk politics out loud and in public. Children play a sort of Latin "ring around a-rosy" about the statue of Queen Isabella in the park. The theatres are crowded and Havana society has taken a new lease of life. Havana is suffering from a general desire to speak English. The one English book store receives a consignment of English grammars by every steamer, and they are sold almost before they are unpacked. The Mother Superior of a convent where, for almost a century, French was the only foreign language taught, says that tongue has been abandoned for the study of English.

The Cubans want to be American. Their best efforts are now being directed toward an imitation of everything American. The nervous intensity with which they strive to play a part not their own is largely responsible for the unsettled, tumultuous condition of the island. During the interim between the protocol and final surrender, a reaction of mistrust and suspicion of the American government had taken the place of the enthusiastic gratitude which was everywhere manifest in Cuba when Spain, through Cambon, agreed to struggle no longer. The unhappy disagreements of Shafter and Garcia, the long wrangle in the Paris Commission, and the failure of the administration to declare a Cuban policy, all tended to make Cubans suspicious and hostile. All the insurgent leaders absolutely refused to disband their ragged brigades. Spanish censors had hard work to prevent Cuban newspapers from attacking and even insulting everything American. It is a fact that when the first gun of the Texas gave the signal for Castellanos to hand over the sovereignty of Cuba to the United States. Cuba as a unit, from Cape San Antonio to Cape Mayesi, was prepared to resist and combat the United States. They expected an aggressive policy of coercion. The new regime has disappointed them. It has always taken pains to consult the Cubans' wishes before doing anything. It has commanded, to be sure, but it has always first asked, "What would you like us to compel you to do?" To the smallest detail, this policy has been carried out. Before the surrender, there was a great deal of talk in Cuban newspapers about the duty of all good Cubans to prevent American adventurers from holding offices to which Cubans were entitled. But all the preparations to resist were simply wasted effort. The heads of departments in all the large towns are American army officers, temporarily detailed for the purpose. All of the permanent office-holders are Cubans in whose applications for positions patriotism and a good war record are an absolute necessity.

General Ludlow had not been twenty-four hours Governor of the Province of Havana before he sent for the Junta Patriotica, the official representative of Maximo Gomez and Estrada Palma, and said: "Gentlemen, here is a list of offices which I am compelled to fill at once. Whom do you wish to name for these positions?" The Junta gave him a list containing the names of two or three men who they said were capable of filling the several offices on the list.

"That is not what I want," was the governor's reply. "Tell me definitely whom you wish to be mayor and aldermen, and I will immediately appoint them." It was a command, but a concession at the same time. General Ludlow kept his word. Every one of the men whom the Junta recommended was promptly appointed. So it has been everywhere—the Americans governing, but governing by and through the Cubans. The result has been, to a very large extent, to disarm the forces that were at work to obstruct American rule.

SUMMER PALACE NOW OCCUPIED BY GEN. GOMEZ—PORTRAIT OF CHIEF MCCULLAGH

Chief McCullagh is enthusiastic as to the possibilities of Cubans as policemen. Their new uniform is his own design. It consists of a big panama hat, blue shirts and trousers, with a blue blouse that is worn on state occasions. Instead of the shield of the New York policeman, the members of the Havana force wear a heavy, nickel-plated badge, in design of three castles, the official seal of the city. The greatest innovation is the short club which the policemen carry in their belts. A sword was just as much a part of the personality of an old-fashioned orden publico, as was his curled mustachios or flat cap. But there are some things in the world mightier than the sword, and an old New York police officer naturally thinks the club is one of them; so the sword had to go from the Havana police.

FRANCIS H. NICHOLS.

The new police force of Havana was organized by ex-Chief John McCullagh of New York City. After many weeks of preliminary work, Superintendent McCullagh completed his organization in January last. Seven-eighths of the men appointed are native Cubans. No negroes were chosen, but some of the members are Spaniards and a few are natives of the United States. The force stands thus: Chief, Deputy-Chief, 8 Inspectors, 12 Captains, 48 lieutenants, 48 sergeants, 835 patrolmen, 12 doormen, 10 Detective Sergeants, 14 Central office detectives, 12 precinct detectives.

Rich Mothers and Poor—A Blessed Privilege
One Mother's "Sacrifice"

NOTHING in life is sweeter," says a rich, busy woman, prominent in good works, "than serving those you love in the little everyday ways of home-life. Many duties crowd upon me, but there are some home privileges and obligations that I just cannot give up to anybody. One of these is putting my babies to bed. I feel that I must have their little arms around my neck each night, take their good-night kisses, hear their evening prayers. I have got to look after their studies a little, too; and I make it a point to visit their teachers and to have their teachers visit me. Their Sunday School work—of course, that is of too much importance for me to relegate its oversight entirely to any one. How do I get time for all this? Why, I take it, and leave less important things to my servants. It does not make me unhappy if my chairs, tables and bric-a-brac are not kept in just such order as if I gave them more personal oversight. It would make me very unhappy if my children suffered for lack of my personal oversight. No, if anything suffers from inattention, it must be my chairs and tables and pictures and not my children—nor other people's children. The work I'm doing for the mothers and children of the poor, I'm doing for Christ. In a way, too, it is for my own children. The better the city in which they live, the better chance for a righteous life my children will have. If I help to purify our streets, to close saloons, to lead mothers and children of the tenements to the God I serve, I am throwing safeguards around my own children."

It is well known how another prominent woman—no less a person than Mrs. Cleveland, the Ex-President's wife—values the privilege of sewing for her children. The making of their little garments has been too dear a task to be wholly given to others. The following is a true story of one woman who sewed beautifully and was so fastidious about her children's clothes that she entrusted their daintiest garments to no one. So much work did she put upon them that she had no time to give to the poor. Her little daughter was taken sick, and it was thought would die. When she recovered, the mother said: "I want to make some sacrifice for others—to give something I value to God." "I will show you," said a friend. And she took her into poverty-stricken homes, and showed her tired mothers at their toil, who did dainty work for other people and their children, but had no time to do for their own. "Pay these to sew for you and your children," said the friend, "and you sew for them and theirs. In this way you can give something to Jesus—for he said, if we do it unto such as these, we do it unto him." Beginning with this "sacrifice" the grateful mother was soon drawn into larger service and was uplifted thereby.

For the Birds

At the recent annual convention, in New York City, of the Audubon Society, the voices of many prominent and eminently practical people were raised in protest against the wholesale slaughter of birds. Many species, valuable for song and beauty, and for usefulness in protection of crops from insects, have become extinct; and the destruction of others seems impending. One speaker said: "I beg all women and girls not to wear birds and birds' feathers on their hats any more." This appears really the one way in which to save the birds, and recently an association of ladies made themselves auxilliary to the Audubon by introducing resolutions to this end. As long as killing our winged friends is profitable, the woodland singers and the insect-eaters will be slain. A very eloquent letter from Governor Roosevelt, in which he expressed his hearty sympathy with the Society's efforts for the protection of birds and his appreciation of the importance of such efforts, was read.

Dairy Work

The dairy-maid in the back of the blue-back spelling book, who spilled the milk, is not typical of the American dairy-maid, who is coming to the front. In parts of our country dairying is a very important industry, and young men and maidens actually go to college to learn the best methods of doing duty by Bossy, as well as improved ways of keeping cream sweet and of making fine cheeses. The twelve weeks' course of the Dairy School of the Kansas Agricultural College is very popular with Kansas young people who do not care to take the full year's agricultural course, and who show by this that they mean to adopt dairying as an exclusive profession. The young woman in the blue-back spelling-book must be relegated to the past; but Bossy will fare better and there will be no spilled milk to cry over.

Domestic Animals in Norway

Their cows, goats, and pigs, are called by name, and frequently by endearing diminutives. They are sleek and well-kept. The good-natured ponies are companionable little creatures; they are talked to and caressed by their drivers. A traveler through Norway recently said that he never saw a pony mistreated there. The ponies are very small, dark or light cream, and very intelligent — as animals so treated are expected to be.

"The Way to Heaven"

A little lad selling matches on a street corner in Glasgow, was asked by a gentleman to direct him to a certain street. The little fellow did this so thoroughly and intelligently that the gentleman said: "Now, if you will give me the way to heaven as correctly, I'll give you sixpence." The child was puzzled for a moment, and then, recalling his Sunday School text for the week, said: "Christ is the way, the truth and the life, sir." The gentleman, much touched, handed him the money. The lad, not realizing what he was doing, stopped another man and said, "If you'll give me sixpence, I'll tell you the way to heaven." In surprise and curiosity the man said: "Tell me," and the child repeated the text. "Ah," said the man, "I have been looking for the way in the saloon many years, but I believe your way is right. It was my mother's way." Some one became interested in this child, educated him, and he became a foreign missionary.

Fire-Drill in the Schools

An incident of the awful Windsor Hotel fire in which so many lives were lost is profitably suggestive. A class of children were receiving instruction in one of the rooms. A sensible maid came in, and whispered to the teachers that the hotel was on fire. The children, at a word, fell into line, and marched out in an orderly way; not one perished. During the same week, a school-house in Brooklyn caught on fire, and burned rapidly. The children, accustomed to their fire-drill, in this instance, also, fell promptly into line of march and went safely out.

A TIRED MOTHER

The long, long seam and the weary tasks;
Ah, short is the day for love's commands.
And the watchful care that the baby asks

The little maid with the golden hair
Who wakes her with shy caress.

Mother's Letter

A LETTER [illegible]

To open its wrapper! would haste, yet delight
[illegible]
May such joy undeserved by an errant belong
To a son, who beneath all his thoughtless disguise,
Hides a heart full of love for his mother—who tries
[illegible]
the dear heart
That loves him so dearly; yet who when apart
From her spirit's encircling arms, still must mourn
[illegible]
return!

[illegible]
In haste I unfold the full missive so dear,
With a throb, and a thrill, and a hint at a tear,
Then the well-known hand-writing lies fair in my view,
And I'm lost to the world till I've read it [illegible] through!

The postscript, the corners, the interlines, all—
They tell me of love and her image recall;
But my cup runneth o'er with its nectar of joy
As I read the words "Mother is proud of her boy."

Is proud of her boy! Can it be? Ah, how small Seem the virtues half-fledged, which I try to recall.
But I'm proud of the pride of my mother, and may God's love, e'en as mine, be with mother alway!

Little Dorothy and the Queen

DOROTHY DREW, Mr. Gladstone's little granddaughter, has vivid memories of her first visit to Queen Victoria. When she beheld Windsor Castle from the train, she said: "It's just as nice as our castle." The royal carriage drawn by two white horses, with footman behind and mounted groom in front, delighted the little girl. Princess Beatrice met her at the door and she and her mother were conducted to their rooms where big fires were burning. Presently (after luncheon), a grand looking man "all dressed in red" came to say that the Queen was ready to see her. "The Indian man," says Dorothy, "whom the Queen likes very much, was at the door through which they passed to the presence of the great lady, whom "Grandpapa" had served for sixty years—"a nice old lady like my grandmma," thought Dorothy, "with a white cap on her head." Dorothy courtesied and was kissed; she told the Queen that "Grandpapa" called her "Dorsie," that folks at home had pet names; the Queen told her about pet names for people and things at Windsor; and they had an interesting exchange of confidences. "The Queen put on her glasses," says Dorothy, "and asked me to go to the other side of the room so that she could see me better, and then she took a little jewel-case and said: 'This is for you.' I opened it and saw a darling little brooch with a diamond V, and R, and a turquoise I, and a little crown at the top made of red enamel. I courtesied and kissed her hand and said, 'Thank you very much.' She looked very nice and kind and I liked her very much." The Queen kissed the little maid goodbye and her audience with the head of the British Empire was over.

A Wedding in Brittany

May and August are considered unlucky months; and it is hard to find just the right day to get married on. The day decided on, the bride and her godmother, the groom and his godfather set out on separate ways carrying invitations by word of mouth. The feast is prepared in a meadow near the farm-house, neighbors lending loads of pewter plates and coming in to help polish them, and to assist in peeling the potatoes, carrots, turnips and cabbages. Young men make the seats, which consist of rude fence ladders fastened end to end and set lengthwise on the grass. The bride hides herself, and engages in some homely task; seems to have forgotten that she is to be married, and declines to array herself, until friends make great show of persuasion. Her parents, to signify unwillingness to part with their child, secrete some article of her bridal attire—which is always found, however. After much simulated trouble and persuasion, ceremony and feasting are over, the husband takes his wife to his home, where her oaken chest, full of good linen of her own spinning, has preceded her. His mother welcomes her.

. . . Our Womens' Club . . .

The Servant Question in its Various Aspects Discussed by Interested Housekeepers

THE club gathered one morning lately at the home of the president. Unlike many clubs, ours is very elastic, meeting at different places and choosing the hour most convenient for the majority of the members at the particular time of year. The subject at present interesting our members is on a theme which appeals very generally to women.

"Madam President," said Mrs. Homemaker, rising and turning a serious face in the direction of the chair, "What are we to make of this recent combination among the maids? I mean among the cooks, waitresses and other domestic helpers on whom so many of us depend to have our housework carried smoothly on. It appears that numbers of these women consider themselves aggrieved because their hours are so long and they have so little liberty. I am told that they threaten to strike unless the scale of wages can be raised and the amount of work lessened. What are we to do?"

MRS. HOMEMAKER had scarcely taken her seat when Susan Nipper, a bright-eyed spinster, was on her feet. Said Miss Nipper: "I have great sympathy with the class of persons who go out to service. I consider them very much put upon by thoughtless employers. They have to rise early and sit up late; they never have a moment which they can call their own. In many houses they are forbidden to receive their friends, and as the large majority of them are young unmarried girls, they naturally wish to entertain visitors of the opposite sex just as the young ladies of the family do. I quite comprehend the social longings in the minds of young women who cannot be in their own homes or who have no homes except in their employers' houses, and who are forbidden to receive their friends, and must naturally expect to live a celibate life—at least, to have no opportunity to change it. I am convinced that this single thing is at the bottom of much of the worry and trouble which underlie domestic service. The home of the mistress should be in every sense of the word the home of the maid, and she should be allowed her evenings to herself. Neither do I think," proceeded Miss Nipper, "that when her work is done a girl should be invariably obliged to ask permission to go out just as if she were a child. She should be allowed, within certain limits, to do as she likes when her work is done. Those limits should be very much the same as the ordinary ones which pleasantly restrain the daughter of the house, as, for instance, a certain acquaintance on the part of the mistress with the places to which her maid usually goes, the friends she visits and the hour at which she will return. I am not myself a housekeeper," concluded Miss Nipper, "but if I were I do not think I would make such a mess of the business as many women do." A smile ran round the circle. Old maid's wisdom is proverbial.

"MADAM PRESIDENT," said Mrs. Truelove, "Miss Nipper has stated one side of the case quite fairly, but if she were a housekeeper she would perceive more clearly than she seems to some of the difficulties in the way. It is not very agreeable if you live in a small apartment in town or in the usual two-story or three-story house there to have your kitchen occupied in the evenings by men who have been very likely working in stables and who bring with them the atmosphere of their employment, or worse with men who have perhaps been drinking. I do not myself forbid my maids the indulgence of visits from young men, provided the latter are respectable and there is a probability that the calls will result in a love affair and honorable marriage, but I draw the line at having my house filled every evening with a rabble of people who bring in dirt and noise."

"I QUITE agree with the last speaker," said our good Aunt Betsey. "My own idea of the matter is to have servants come in the morning and go home at night. This leaves the family free from interruption in the evening and seems to me a much pleasanter way of managing. I do not see why a day may not come when persons understanding certain special lines of work shall not come and do it and go away when their work is done. When I lived in the South my cook and housemaid had their own quarters across the garden in a little house of their own, and I never enjoyed such peace."

"Well," commented Mrs. Farmer, with a smile, "when I hear you all talk so glibly of what you do or do not approve concerning the maid, I wonder how you would get along if you lived where I do, in a rural district in which it is almost impossible to obtain domestic help for love or money. My home is rather remote from the railroad. In the first place, there is no church near of the denomination to which most persons in service belong. That is with many of them an insuperable objection. Then, few women in service like the country. As I once heard a very intelligent young woman say: 'Don't talk to me about the country. Nothing but trees and brooks and fields—give me people.' No offer you can make of a comfortable room, light service, and good wages make up to such a woman for the lack of her friends in the tenements; her cup of tea and bit of gossip on her afternoon out, and the enjoyment she finds in meeting people of her own class. Where a woman in the country has two or three daughters who are contented to stay at home with her; who are not in themselves anxious to go to the city and have a career—to teach, to paint, or to enter journalism, that mother is well off. She and her girls do their work in much independence. Where women cannot secure any help, the far-off sound of the tumult and conflict raised by this question in town does not seem more than a lullaby. I have tried taking a mother and child from town, and this plan has sometimes worked for a time, but it has its disadvantages, and it is not often that the arrangement becomes permanent. The farmer's wife becomes very tired after a while of the drudgery of doing her own work all by herself. The monotony of constant housework seems to wear ruts in the brain, and this is why our women in rural neighborhoods so often age faster than women do in the city."

"EVERY condition has its compensations," remarked the minister's wife. "I have a dear and beautiful friend living all by herself in a well-appointed home near New York. One by one the members of her family have left her. Some have died and others have married. In her serene and lovely old age, this lady, worshiped as a queen by her friends, having a sufficient income and keeping two servants, finds herself frequently without any one upon whom to call. Not long ago she introduced into her spotless kitchen a tall, rather capable looking personage from the Emerald Isle, a person well recommended at a city intelligence office. The new comer gazed about the immaculate kitchen, sniffed and said: 'Yez kapes the place clane, don't yez?' 'Yes,' said my friend; 'you find everything clean and I would like to have it kept so. It is just as easy if you do your work regularly every day to keep your kitchen and your closet and pantries in nice order as to have them disorderly and dirty. I ask of you simply to keep this kitchen just as you find it.' Vain request. In two days no one would have known my friend's dainty kitchen for the same place. Grease and dirt were dragged all over it; everything was in disorder. Pots and pans were set away unwashed, and when a remonstrance was gently made against using a dish cloth for a house cloth, the genius of the kitchen turned fiercely upon the mistress and said, 'I'll be laveing when my week is up. It's not living with snoopy people like you that I'll be. I'm used to real ladies that never sets a foot into their kitchen.'"

"THE ONLY way," said a quiet woman near the door, "in which this whole question will ever be settled will be in accordance with the Golden Rule, 'To do unto others as we would that others should do unto us.' To remember that love is the fulfilling of the law, and that we who are strong should bear the infirmities of the weak. Somehow or other this Gospel teaching will have to go to the foundation of things. Notwithstanding what the last speaker has said, and she has merely described a scene which is only too familiar, there is a way of so living together that mistress and maid work in perfect harmony. A lady, whose duties as editor of a paper take her from her home nearly every day in the week, said to me not long ago, 'I should never have been able to do my work as I have year after year but for the kindness and co-operation of faithful women—Katies, Marys, Norahs and Bridgets who have lived in my home, lifted my burdens, and taken an interest in every dollar I had to spend. It is to them that I owe my opportunity to engage in a literary career.' There is never, dear friends, any question which has not two sides to be presented, and we must always try to look not only on our own things but also on the things of others."

At this time the club broke up to meet again before long.

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

The Ministry of Service

"I DO wish you would not ride such wild horses, Louis," said Mrs Hildreth, as she stood beside her son in the front doorway, looking disapprovingly, as she spoke, at the horse who was champing his bit viciously on the sidewalk below. "It keeps me in a perfect fever of anxiety all the time."

"Whoa! Polyphemus! Stand still, Sir! Pompey, have you tightened that girth up to its last hole? Better do it then. Don't mind his kicking, it doesn't hurt him, it's just his way. My dear lady mother, if you knew what a pleasure it is to find something untameable where everything is so confoundedly slow, you would not wonder at my interest in the brute. As to your anxiety, that is ridiculous. A Hildreth has too much sense to be conquered by a horse and make a spectacle of himself into the bargain. Au revoir. Better take a dose of lavender to calm your nerves," and Louis waved his hand to her with careless grace, as he gathered up the reins of his curvetting steed.

His mother looked after him with a sigh. "He is so fearless! What a splendid cavalry officer he would make! He makes me think of the regiment that went to the war from Marlborough." Her eye fell casually upon Pompey, who was shutting the carriage gates. "What a waste of precious lives it was to be sure, just to free a lot of negroes!"

It was late in the afternoon when Pompey went up town on an errand for Judge Hildreth. The street was full of men and horses hurrying to and fro, but Pompey paid them but little attention. He was busy with his Lord.

Hark! What was that? The sound of a horse's hoofs ringing with a sharp metallic clatter upon the paved street, and children screamed and men turned white faces towards the sound and hurriedly sought the sidewalk.

On they came, the horse and his rider, Louis pale as death, Polyphemus mad with sudden fear and his own ungovernable temper. The bit was between his teeth, his iron-shod hoofs were thrown out in vengeful fury. Pompey sprang forward. "You can't stop him!" shouted the men. "It would be certain death!" But just beyond, the street took a sharp turn to the right and a deep chasm, where extensive excavations were being made for a sewer, yawned hungrily. The horse plunged and reared. Pompey had caught hold of the reins and was clinging to [illegible]

An hour later Mrs. Hildreth was leaning over her son in an agony of fear. He was her idol. He opened his eyes wearily. His cheeks were as white as the pillow.

"Oh, Louis!" she wailed, "I knew that [illegible] would bring you to your death!"

"I am not dead yet," he said, with a shadow of his old mocking smile, "although I have succeeded in making a fool of myself. How is Pompey?"

"Pompey!" ejaculated his mother. "I have never thought of any one but you."

But Pompey was not neglected, although the mistress whom he had served so faithfully was indifferent to him.

Evadne stood in Dyce's little room, beside the bed with its gay patch-work cover. The iron-shod hoofs had done their cruel work only too surely.

"Pompey," she said wistfully, "dear Pompey, is the pain terrible to bear?"

The faithful eyes looked up at her, the brave lips tried to smile.

"De Lord Jesus is a powerful help in de time of trouble, Miss Vadny: I'se a-leanin' on his arm."

Evadne repeated, as well as she could for tears: "'Fear thou not, for I am with thee: be not dismayed, for I am thy God. I will strengthen thee, yea I will help thee, yea I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness,'" and Pompey answered with joyous assurance: "'Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.'"

"The Judge has been here," said Dyce with mournful pride: "he says he'll never find anyone like Pompey. He say it wuz de braves' thing he ever knowed any one to do. He jest cry like a child, de Judge did: he say he never 'spect to find sech a faithful friend agen."

"De Judge is powerful kind, Missy. He say he'll look arter Dyce ez long ez he live." The husband's voice broke.

"I don't care nuthing 'bout dat!" and Dyce turned away with a choking sob, "but I'se proud to hev him see what kind of a man you is."

The night drew on. No sound was to be heard in the little cottage except the ticking of the wheezy clock, as Dyce kept her solitary vigil by the side of the man she loved. She knelt beside his pillow, and, for her sake, Pompey bore his pain without a groan. As the shadows of the night were fleeing before the heralds of the dawn, she saw the gray shadow, which no earthly light has power to chase away, fall swiftly on his face. He opened his eyes and spoke in a rapturous whisper: "Dyce! Dyce! I see de Lord!"

The morning broke. Dyce still knelt on with her face buried in the pillow, the wheezy clock still kept on its tireless race, but Pompey's happy spirit had forever swept beyond the bounds of time.

* * * *

The humble funeral was over. The Hildreth carriage, behind whose curtained window sat Dyce and Evadne, had followed close after the hearse. The Judge had walked behind.

"So uncalled for!" Mrs. Hildreth said in an annoyed tone when she heard of it. "Your father never will learn to have a proper regard for polite customs."

"Uncalled for!" ejaculated Louis. "I'll venture to say the judge will never have a chance to follow such a brave man again."

"He sent his carriage. That was all that was necessary."

"Doubtless Dyce finds that superlative honor a perfect panacea for her grief," said Louis, sarcastically. "It is eminently fitting that Brutus and Cæsar should have walked as chief mourners, for they have lost the truest friend they ever had."

Evadne's training was of great value to the household in this season of suffering. She was indefatigable in her attendance on her injured cousin, and her skill and care saved him many an hour of anguish.

"I am afraid poor Evadne will be worn out with such constant attendance upon Louis," said Marion some weeks after Pompey's death. "I don't see how she stands it."

"It is hardly worth her while to undertake nursing," said Isabelle, coldly, "if she cannot stand such a trifle as this."

"Why, Isabelle, just think of the strain night after night. You wouldn't like it I know. I want mamma to get a paid nurse, but Louis won't have any one near him but Evadne."

"Of course I could not stand being deprived of my rest," rejoined Isabelle; "it is hard enough for me to get any under the most favorable circumstances, but probably Evadne sleeps like a log in the daytime. It is the least return she can make for having disgraced the family, to be of some use in it now."

Marion laughed incredulously. "I should never think of associating Evadne's name with disgrace," she said. "What do you mean, Isabelle?"

"Mamma says this nursing fad of hers upset papa completely. He said the Hildreth honor had better not be mentioned any more."

"Well," said Marion, "it seems to me she is of a good deal more value to him now than the Hildreth honor. Dr. Russe says she is one of the best nurses he ever saw. That is a high compliment, for he is dreadfully particular. It is my opinion, Isabelle, that Louis is a good deal worse than we think him to be. Don't say anything to mamma, for she is so nervous, but I heard Dr. Russe talking to papa in the hall this morning, something about an inherited tendency and a derangement of the nervous system. I could not understand—he spoke so low, but papa looked dreadfully worried after he had gone. Don't you think papa looks very badly, Isabelle? And he seems so absent, as if he had something on his mind. I noticed it long before this happened."

Isabella laughed carelessly. "What a girl you are, Marion! You are always imagining things about people. For my part I have too many worries of my own."

Upstairs, Evadne was saying wistfully: "Don't you think your life should be very precious, Louis?"

"It is precious, Coz, but what do you mean particularly?"

"It has cost so much: Pompey died that you might keep it, and have you never thought that Christ died that you might keep it through all eternity? Don't you ever think what a wonderful thing it was to do? You realize how much you owe to Pompey; don't you think Christ's service was of the same kind but infinitely more beneficial?"

"My dear Coz, I find it wiser not to think. Every other man you meet holds a different creed, and each one thinks his is the right one. Why should I set myself up as knowing better than them all? The only way is to have a nebulous faith which may take shape when I know more."

"A 'nebulous faith' will not save you, Louis," Evadne answered sadly. "God expects us to believe his Word, when he tells us that he has opened a way for us into the Holiest by the blood of his Son."

"That Atonement theory is an uncanny doctrine."

"It is the only doctrine that saves. It is the sole way by which sinners can be made 'at one' with an absolutely holy God. Jesus said, 'If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me.' His humanitarianism did not win the hearts of the multitude. The very men he had fed and healed hounded him on to his cross."

"It is not philosophical."

"It is practical. 'Who is it that said so wisely that 'the moving energy in the world's history to-day is not a philosophy but a cross'"?

"The God of the present is Humanitarianism."

"Humanitarianism is not Christ. Paul says, 'Though I give all my goods to feed the poor and have not love, it profiteth me nothing.' The love which he means is the Christ power, for no mere human love could reach the altitude of the thirteenth chapter of I. Corinthians. Real religion is not a creed, but a Christ. It seems to me the most important questions we have to answer are what we think of Christ and what we are going to do with him. When Peter gave his answer, 'Thou art the Anointed One, the Son of the Blessed,' Christ said: 'On this faith of thine I will build my Church.' Humanitarianism, pure and simple, seems to me but an attempt to imitate Christ. It is beautiful as far as it goes, but it is not my idea of following him."

"What is, Evadne?"

"When Jesus told his disciples to follow, he meant them to be with him. I do not think we can ever hope to be like Christ unless we believe him to be God, and walk with him every day. If we have the Spirit of Jesus in our hearts, we shall be model humanitarians, for we shall love our neighbor as ourselves."

Louis caught her hand in his. "Begin by loving me!" he cried suddenly. "I love you, dear—these long days of watching have taught me that—though I began to suspect it some time ago. It is no use saying anything," he went on hurriedly, as Evadne began to protest. "You must be my wife, for I cannot live without you." He drew a handsome ring, of quaint and curious workmanship, which he had bought in Venice, from his finger, and before Evadne could recover from her astonishment, had thrust it upon hers. "See, you are mine, darling. Now let us seal the compact with a kiss."

"Louis, you are dreaming! This can never be!" She struggled to free her hand, but he held her fingers in a grasp of steel.

"It shall be, my sweet little Puritan! Do you suppose I will ever give you up now? I tell you I love you, Evadne! Love you as I never thought I should ever love a woman. Why, you can twist me round your finger. I am like clay in your hands."

"Louis, please listen!" implored Evadne, with a white, strained face, "this is utterly impossible for—I do not love you."

"I will teach you to, dear," said Louis, cheerfully. "I know I've been a brute, but I will show you how gentle I can be."

"Louis!" cried Evadne, desperately, "you must let me go! I will never do this thing!"

She pulled vainly at the ring as she spoke. Louis' grasp never relaxed. When he spoke, she was frightened at the recklessness of his tone.

"Take that ring off your finger, and I go straight to ruin. You say you want to win my soul. Here is your chance. You can make of me what you will. I own there is something in your Christianity. I can't help sneering when I see Isabelle and Marion playing at it, but I have never sneered at you. Now, take your choice. Shall the devil have his own?

His voice was quiet, but he was laboring under intense excitement. Evadne was in despair. What should she do? Only that morning Dr. Russe had said to her: "It is not the injury he sustained in the fall that worries me. He will get over that. But the shock to the nervous system has been tremendous. Humor him in everything, and avoid the least excitement as you value his life."

She leaned over him and said gently,

"Dear Louis, you are not strong enough to talk any more to-day. I will wear the ring a little while to please you, but remember, this other thing you want can never be."

He looked up at her, his face was pallid with exhaustion. "Promise me," he said faintly, "that the ring shall stay on your finger until I take it off."

And Evadne promised.

Lectures to Prisoners

A very interesting experiment is now progressing in England. In accordance with a recommendation made by a Special Prison Commission, a series of lectures for prisoners has been begun at one of the leading penal institutions. A lecturer, with wide experience in nursing and sanitation, was selected, and the women are mates were her audience. She endeavored to teach them the value of fresh air, and the simplest methods of dealing with emergency cases of sickness or injury. In these lectures, the first ten minutes are devoted to questions, the next half-hour to quiet lecturing, supplemented by simple blackboard illustrations and the balance of the session to practical work in bandaging, poultice-making, fomentations and the application of simple remedies. The suggestion is made that a number of competent lecturers should be engaged, in order that as many inmates as possible of all the leading prisons, should be reached by this novel method of educating the ignorant and dangerous classes in neighborly service and self-helpfulness.

If your blood is pure, you are well fitted for life's duties and pleasures. Any clods of impurity need dissolving and purifying with Hood's Sarsaparilla, America's Spring blood-purifying medicine.

..A Worn-Out Fad..

"SPRING MEDICINES," "BLOOD PURIFIERS," AND "TONICS" AN OLD-FASHIONED IDEA.

Pure blood, strong nerves and muscles, firm, healthy flesh, can only come from wholesome food well digested. "Blood purifiers" and "nerve tonic" do not reach the cause of the mischief. The stomach is the point to be looked after. The safest and surest way to cure any form of indigestion is to take after each meal some harmless preparation of this kind composed of vegetable essences, pure pepsin, golden seal and fruit salts, sold by druggists under name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and these tablets, taken after meals, assist digestion wonderfully, because they will digest the food promptly before it has time to ferment and sour, and the weak stomach relieved and assisted in this way soon becomes strong and vigorous again.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are superior to any secret patent medicines because you know what you are taking into your stomach.

They are sold by druggists everywhere at 50c. per package. Write F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., for book on stomach diseases, mailed free.

The Eternal Morning

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 16. Isa. 60 : 1-12

PASSAGES like the one associated with the topic, show how little the messengers of God understood the messages they delivered. The writer of this beautiful poem knew that a time of triumph and the supremacy of God's people was coming. So much had been revealed to him. He saw the coming glory as of the dawn gilding the mountain tops, and his soul was filled with joy and enthusiasm, but the narrow conception he had of it has been proved by modern events to be wholly crude and inadequate. He saw Israel returning from the Babylonian captivity, resuming her place among the nations, becoming supreme, so that any nation refusing to serve her should perish, wealth would pour into her treasury, and all nations would be blessed in rendering homage to her. That was the way in which the prophet interpreted the revelation which had been made to him. But not in this narrow fashion did God fulfill his servant's prophecy. It was not the literal Israel that was to be so exalted, but the people of God, the true Israel with which Christ contrasted (John 8 : 39-59), the nation which rejected him. The exaltation was not that of material power and wealth, as the prophet supposed — the gold and frankincense and the flocks of Kedar — but the spiritual power, the moral glory which comes from the triumphs of the Gospel. The head of the nation would not be a conqueror like Alexander or Napoleon, forcing his yoke by might on unwilling peoples, but the Prince of Peace, whose righteous and beneficent rule would be acknowledged by renewed hearts in every land. As we look around in our day and see in every clime men and women of every nationality to whom the name of Jesus is dearer than any earthly name; to whom his law is more authoritative than any law on their country's statute books, we realize how much more glorious than the prophet supposed has been the fulfilment of his prophecy. And the end is not yet. The triumphs of the Gospel will go forward until the whole earth is won for Christ, and every knee will bow to him. Even now the mighty host of them who call him Lord, and hold his will paramount, outnumber the subjects of any earthly potentate, and their number is constantly being increased. God has been better to the world than his servant the prophet could conceive.

But what has come of the dawn that the prophet saw in that time of gloom? If it has not shown in the way he expected, how have its beams penetrated the darkness? Very slow, as we measure time, has been the progress. Generation after generation came and passed away, and little appreciable advancement could be perceived. But from land to land the light passed. The mountain tops, the men of spiritual understanding, caught its gleam. Still, as the prophet saw, darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the peoples. But at last, with the beginning of this century, the impetus of a great forward movement came. Noble, brave, consecrated, devoted men went forth carrying the torch into the darkness of heathendom. How God blessed the mission, all Christendom knows. It grew, and not even the dread of martyrdom arrested its progress. As one herald of the cross fell, slain like his Master by those he sought to save, or perished of disease in pestilential climates, ten offered themselves to fill the gap in the ranks. There are now in heathen lands 11,839 missionaries, and with them 67,754 natives who have been converted and are preaching the truth to their countrymen. It is estimated by conservative statisticians that there are not less than one million and a half of heathens who have been brought to Christ and are now in communion with Christian churches, beside a great multitude who have died in faith. Thus has the dawn brightened into the light of day, and it is penetrating into every land. A better day than the one imagined by the prophet, which shall grow still brighter until it lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

TWO STOMACHS.

The Upper for the Proteids and the Lower for the Greater Part of the Food.

It is an interesting study to observe how [illegible] this is never digested in the stomach proper, nor is it effected by the pepsin in the upper stomach.

Starch (a Carbo-hydrate) is passed out of the stomach into the duodenum or second stomach and there treated by the pancreatic juices, when in time a microscopic fungi is grown from a part of the grain, if that has been eaten, and these elements with moisture, heat and time transform the starch into grape-sugar, which is the first act of digestion.

The processes are duplicated in an artificial or mechanical way in the manufacture of [illegible] the Postum Cereal Co., Lim., of Battle Creek, Mich.

In this food one finds the delicate, sweet taste of grape-sugar and when eaten it will be found to quickly digest and fatten and strengthen the entire body.

Its especial mission is to nourish and rebuild the brain and nerve centers.

A certain definite feeling of strength and stamina comes to the individual after a few days use of Grape-Nuts at Breakfast.

Being a condensed food one does not require more than 3 to 5 teaspoonfulls at a meal, which is worth considering from an economical standpoint.

The Unrecognized Christ

"If I had dwelt,"—so mused a tender woman,
All fine emotions stirred
Through pondering o'er that life, Divine yet human,
Told in the Sacred Word,

"If I had dwelt of old, a Jewish maiden,
In some Judean street
Where Jesus walked, and heard his words so laden
With comfort strangely sweet;

And seen the face where utmost pity blended
With each rebuke of wrong;
I would have left my lattice and descended,
And followed with the throng.

And I had wrenched the sapphires from my fillet,
Nor let one spark remain;
Snatched up my gold, amid the crowd to spill it
For pity of their pain.

"I would have let the palsied fingers hold me,
I would have walked between
The Marys and Salome, while they told me
About the Magdalene.

'Foxes have holes'—I think my heart had broken,
To hear the words so said,
'While Christ had not'—Were sadder ever spoken?—
'A place to lay his head!'

I would have flung abroad my doors before him,
And in my joy have been
First on the threshold, eager to adore him,
And crave his entrance in!

Ah would you so? Without a recognition
You passed him yesterday;
Jostled aside, unhelped, his meek petition,
And calmly went your way,

With warmth and comfort, garmented and girdled,
Before your window-sill
Saw crowds sweep by; and if your blood is curdled,
You wear the jewels still.

You catch aside your robes, lest want should clutch them,
In its imploring wild;
Or lest some woeful penitent might touch them
And you be thus defiled.

O dreamers, dreaming that your faith is keeping
All services free from blot,
Chr st daily walks your streets, sick, suffering, weeping,
And ye perceive him not!

—REV. S. P. ROSE.

A Wonderful Remedy Discovered For the Cure of

CATARRH AND DEAFNESS

Deaf Ears Unstopped—Headache Banished, Eyes, Nose, Throat, Lungs and Stomach Freed From Disease.

"After being deaf for five years, one box of your Catarrh Cure cured me."

The above was written to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son by Mr. Paul Rupert, of Saltillo, Pa., and is only one out of hundreds of similar letters. The remedy is applied in the form of a medicated smoke-vapor inhaled from a pipe. By a simple process, which we explain in the directions accompanying the remedy, the medicine is made to enter the middle ear and every passage and cavity in the head, removing the disease from every affected part.

If you wish a sample and full particulars, testimonials, etc., write at once to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

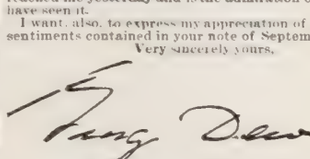
ADMIRAL DEWEY WRITES.

Dewey, as all know, is a man of few words, and he does not write or say anything unless he means it.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg you to accept my hearty thanks for the beautiful watch you so kindly sent me It reached me yesterday and is the admiration of all who have seen it.

I want, also, to express my appreciation of the kind sentiments contained in your note of September 3d.

Very sincerely yours,



CAPTAIN SIGSBEE WRITES.

He requested the American people to await judgment on the wreck of the "Maine" until report was made. He gives careful thought to all matters, so his commendation of the watch is of high value.

GENTLEMEN:—The watch is a beautiful and valuable souvenir of the "Maine." On its receipt, I transferred a plain steel-case watch that I had worn during the war to my son, Charles Dwight Sigsbee, Jr., and I am now wearing the watch made by you.

I have already shown it to many people, all of whom have admired it. Thanking you for the watch and for your kind expressions, I am,

Yours very respectfully,

The Yellow Rambler.—Tea only hardly yellow climbing rose. Flowers deep golden yellow, produced in large pyramidal trusses, often 150 flowers being seen in a single cluster; grows vigorously, making shoots 8 to 10 feet high in a season; perfectly hardy, having withstood a temperature of two degrees below zero; beautiful for pillars and porches.

The Pink Rambler.—Same as the Yellow Rambler, and possessing all of its valuable features, except that the color is a beautiful deep pink.

Mosella.—One of the most beautiful of roses. Flowers white, shading in the center to apricot yellow. Blooms profusely from May until frost.

Meteor.—A rich, dark velvety crimson Hybrid Tea Rose; flowers large and very double; the plant is vigorous and a constant bloomer.

White Maman Cochet.—A superb variety. Flowers snow-white, large and very double; borne in profusion; hardy with protection.

Marie Van Houtte.—Pale yellow, edged with pink. Flowers very large, double and deliciously fragrant. Strong grower and constant bloomer.

Bear in mind that we offer, not one, but the entire list of six lovely ever-blooming roses described above absolutely free, by mail post-paid, if you will send us twenty-five cents for GOOD LITERATURE for the remaining nine months of this year (April to December inclusive). You will get the full worth of your money in your subscription to the paper; the roses are an absolute gift. Remember that these are not cheap, common roses, such as you see advertised at low prices. They are the choicest and most famous varieties, and such as are sold at high prices by all the leading florists. We shall send you strong, healthy, well-rooted plants, well packed, by mail, guaranteed to reach you in perfect condition, and to give absolute satisfaction. GOOD LITERATURE is a large and handsome illustrated literary and family paper, each issue comprising from 20 to 24 large 4-column pages, including a beautiful cover. You will be delighted with it, and the six lovely roses are worth many times the price of subscription. Perfect satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. This is a special offer by a well-known and reliable publishing house, established over twenty-three years; we refer to the Mercantile Agencies and to all leading newspapers as to our responsibility. "The Filipino Napoleon"

AFTER a somewhat meteoric career, the supremacy of Emilio Aguinaldo as a leader of the Filipinos, seems to be approaching a close. Aguinaldo is of mixed Spanish and native blood, the son of a planter at Cavite. He was educated at Manila University, and of the Jesuit College there, but enlisted in the Spanish army before completing his studies. Having given offence to the Catholic friars at Silang, by refusing to kneel while a religious procession passed along the streets, he was banished from that city, and the persecution of the priests, in consequence of this incident, became so intolerable, that he surrendered his commission in the army and left for Hong Kong. There he learned several languages and studied British military tactics, served for a time in a Chinese regiment, and later in the Chinese navy.

When he was twenty-seven he became an active member of a secret society for the overthrow of Spain's power in the Philippines, and was Jose Rizal's chief lieutenant. He has had many hair-breadth escapes, and his bold course in dealing with the Spaniards showed him to be brave to recklessness. He led the rebellion of 1896, and was amnestied and persuaded by Gen. Primo Rivera to leave the country and return to Hong Kong in 1897, but the failure of the Spanish authorities to keep their promises of reform brought Aguinaldo again to the front.

It was at this juncture, when rebellion was once more ripe in the Philippines, that Admiral Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet at Manila Bay. Aguinaldo saw his opportunity, and, returning from his exile, placed himself at the head of the natives and took the field against the Spanish. The story of his subsequent operations and ultimate revolt against American authority is too well known to need recapitulation. As a result of his recent reported defeats, the confidence of the natives in his leadership has been very greatly shaken.

Is it not some proof of the extraordinary merit of SLAYTON'S ELECTRIC SWITCH GLASS CASTERS that upwards of 2,500 sets have been sold in three months, on the plan of asking no payment until their value is proved by trial? We still hold our free trial offer open.

DR. BROWN SEQUARD, the great French physician, taught that rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, sleeplessness, pain in muscles and bones, nervous disorders—that is, diseases of weakened vitality or nerves—all arose from derangement of the electrical condition of the human system, such that the flow of electricity from the body to the earth became excessive and harmful. No one can be sure if this is exactly true or not, but there is much reason for so believing. At any rate this line of reasoning led to the invention of SLAYTON'S ELECTRIC SWITCH GLASS CASTERS, which completely insulate the invalid, and completely stop the weakening flow. The curative effect of his simple process is most wonderful, and is attested by letters from hundreds who have learned its benefits by careful trial.

DO THESE LETTERS MEAN ANYTHING TO YOU?

TECUMSEH, Mich., Jan. 14th, 1898.

THE SLAYTON ELECTRIC CASTER CO.

Gentlemen:—I have tried your Glass Wheel Electric Switch Casters and I am happy to state to you that the results were indeed very gratifying. The first night I had them on my bed I slept four hours more than I did the previous night. I am and was fully convinced that retained electricity is a sleep producer. I am 84 years old, and a man of my age is naturally restless in the latter part of the night. Yours very truly, B. L. BAXTER.

The Late Dr. J. A. Spurgeon

THE cable brings a brief statement that Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, the brother of the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, was found dead in a railroad carriage on March 22. It is presumed that he was attacked by apoplexy while alone in the compartment, and died while the train was speeding to its destination. The deceased clergyman was sixty-two years of age, having been born three years after his more famous brother. He was educated for business life, but after his brother's entrance to the ministry he decided to make that his own calling in life. He entered Regent's Park College, where he won an excellent reputation as a scholar. His first charge was at Southampton, but as his brother's church grew to so enormous a size, he was persuaded to go to London to help Charles in his pastoral work.

DR. J. A. SPURGEON

As the membership of the Tabernacle was over six thousand, he had constant occupation in visiting the sick and attending to other matters of pastoral duty. He also took an active part in the Pastor's College, for which his college experience fitted him. At the Orphanage, too, his visits were ever welcome. His voice was not strong enough to be heard in the vast auditorium of the Tabernacle, but he could not be satisfied without preaching. He therefore accepted the pastorate of a church at West Croydon, which is within a short distance of London. He has labored there for nearly thirty years, and with marked success. His brother used to say that he would never have been able to continue his work without the efficient help he had from his brother James, who, by his tact and devotion, relieved him from so much responsibility, and left him free for pulpit work. After Charles's death, Dr. Spurgeon continued to work both in the college and the orphanage, while keeping up his pastoral charge at Croydon.

A GODSEND TO ALL HUMANITY

Invention of An Ohioan That Promotes Health, Strength and Beauty by Nature's Method, and Relieves Without Drugs, All Nervous Diseases, Rheumatism, La Grippe, Neuralgia, Kidney Troubles, Weakness and the Most Obstinate Diseases

Those Who Have Used It Declare It To Be the Most Remarkable Invigorant Ever Produced for Man, Woman or Child

An inventive genius, of Cincinnati, Ohio, has patented and placed on the market a Bath Cabinet that is of great interest to the public, not only the sick and debilitated, but also those enjoying health.

It is a sealed compartment in which one comfortably rests on a chair, and with only the head outside, may have all the invigorating, cleansing and purifying effects of the most luxurious Turkish bath, hot vapor or medicated vapor baths at home for three cents each, with no possibility of taking cold, or in any way weakening the system.

IN OPERATION—DOOR CLOSED

A well-known physician of Topeka, Kansas, E. L. Eaton, M. D., gave up his practice to sell these Bath Cabinets, feeling that they were all his patients needed to get well and keep well, as they cured the most obstinate diseases often when his medicine failed, and we understand he has already sold over 600. Another physician of Chicago, Dr. John C. Wright, followed Dr. Eaton's example, moved West and devotes his entire time to selling these Cabinets Many others are doing likewise.

Hundreds of remarkable letters have been written the inventors from those who have used the Cabinets, two of which referring to

RHEUMATISM AND LA GRIPPE

Will be interesting to those who suffer from these dread maladies. G. M. Lafferty, Covington, Ky., writes: "Was compelled to quit business a year ago, being prostrated by rheumatism when your Cabinet came. Two weeks' use of it entirely cured me, and have never had a twinge since. My doctor was much astonished and will recommend them." Mrs. S.S. Noteman, Hood River, Ore., writes that her neighbor used the Bath Cabinet for a severe case of la grippe and cured herself entirely in two days. Another neighbor cured eczema of many years standing and her little girl of measles. A. B. Strickland, Bloomington, Idaho, writes that the Bath Cabinet did him more good in one week than two years' doctoring, and entirely cured him of catarrh, gravel, kidney trouble and dropsy, with which he had been long afflicted. Hundreds of others write praising this Cabinet, and there seems to be no doubt but that the long sought for means of curing rheumatism, la grippe, Bright's disease and all kidney and urinary affections has been found. The

WELL-KNOWN CHRISTIAN MINISTER

Of Una, S. C., Rev. R. E. Peele, highly recommends this Cabinet, as also does Mrs. Kendricks, Princ. of Vassar College; Congressman John J. Lentz, John T. Brown, editor of the Christian Guide, many lawyers, physicians, ministers and hundreds of other influential people.

REDUCES OBESITY

It is important to know that the inventor guarantees that obesity will be reduced 5 lbs. per week if these hot vapor baths are taken regularly. Scientific reasons are brought out in a very instructive little book issued by the makers. To

CURE BLOOD AND SKIN DISEASES

The Cabinet is unquestionably the best thing in the world. If people, instead of filling their system with more poisons by taking drugs and nostrums, would get into a Vapor Bath Cabinet and sweat out these poisons and assist Nature to act, they would have a skin as clear and smooth as the most fastidious could desire.

THE GREAT FEATURE

Of this Bath Cabinet is that it gives a Hot Vapor Bath that opens the millions of pores all over the body, stimulating the sweat glands and forcing out by Nature's method all the impure salts, acids and effete matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys and the lungs and cause disease, debility and sluggishness. A Hot Vapor Bath instills new life from the very beginning, and makes you feel 10 years younger. With the bath it desired is a

HEAD AND COMPLEXION STEAMER

In which the face and head are given the same vapor treatment as the body. This produces the most wonderful results, removes pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions and

CURES CATARRH AND ASTHMA

L. B. Westbrook, Newton, Ia., writes: "For 45 years I have had catarrh and asthma to such an extent that it had eaten out the portions between my nostrils. Drugs and doctors did me no good. The first vapor bath I took helped me and two weeks' use cured me entirely, and I have never had a twinge since."

WHATEVER WILL HASTEN PERSPIRATION

Every one knows, is beneficial. Turkish baths, massage, hot drinks, stimulants, hot foot baths are all known to be beneficial, but the best of these methods become crude and insignificant when compared to the convenient and marvelous curative power of the Cabinet Bath referred to above. The Cabinet is know as the

QUAKER FOLDING THERMAL

Vapor Bath Cabinet was patented May 18, 1897, and is made only in Cincinnati, O. This Cabinet, we find, is durably made of best materials. It is entered and vacated by a door at the side. The Cabinet is air-tight, made of the best hygeinic water-proof cloth, rubber-lined, and a folding steel-plated frame supports it from top to bottom. The makers furnish a good alcohol stove with each Cabinet; also valuable receipts and formulas for medicinal baths and ailments, as well as plain directions.

Another excellent feature is that it folds into so small a space that it may be carried when traveling—weighs but five pounds.

People do not need bath rooms as this Cabinet may be used in any room. Thus bath-tubs have been discarded since the invention of this Cabinet, as it gives a far better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water. For the sick-room its advantages are at once apparent. The Cabinet is amply large enough for any person.

The Quaker Cabinet made by the Cincinnati firm is the only practical article of its kind, and will last for years. It seems to satisfy and delight every user and the

MAKERS GUARANTEE KESULTS

They assert positively, and their statements are backed by a vast amount of testimony from persons of influence, that their Cabinet will cure nervous troubles and debility, clear the skin, purify the blood, cure rheumatism. They offer $50 reward for disease that cannot be relieved. Cures wellness troubles, la grippe, sleeplessness, obesity, neuralgia, headaches, gout, sciatica, piles, dropsy, blood and skin disease, liver and kidney troubles. It will

CURE A HARD COLD

With one bath and break up all symptoms of la grippe, fevers, pneumonia, bronchitis, asthma and is really a household necessity. It is the most known, and all those enjoying health should use it at least once or twice a week, but its great value lies in its marvelous power to draw out of the system the impurities that cause disease, and for this reason is really a godsend to all humanity.

HOW TO GET ONE

All readers who want to enjoy perfect health, prevent disease or are afflicted should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low, space prevents a detailed description, but it will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and curative properties. Write to the World Manufacturing Co., 81 World Building, Cincinnati, O., and ask them to send you their pamphlets and circulars describing this invention. The regular price of this Cabinet is $5. Head Steaming Attachment, if desired, $1 extra, and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much real genuine health, vigor and strength.

Write to-day for full information, or better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be deceived or disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money if not just as represented. They are reliable and responsible, and fill all orders as soon as received.

Don't fail to send for booklet, as it will prove very interesting reading.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to good agents, both men and women—upon request.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

L. G. M., Espyville. Is it true that Martha of Bethany was a widow? Is there anywhere any reference to her husband?

No one knows whether she was a widow or not. It is rash for any one to make any assertion on the subject. We know nothing of her, outside of the Bible narrative. It is possible, though there is no evidence to prove it, that her husband was the Simon mentioned Mark 14:3, who being a leper was separated from his wife. But this is merely a conjecture [illegible] or widow?

Reader, Franklin, Mass. Why do you call the creed you published recently "Christendom's New Creed"? It seems to me to have been the same as has been held for many years, and in some respects, not so clear or definite.

The significance of it is in the fact that so many denominations agreed to it. The opponents of Christianity argued that the denominations were hopelessly at variance. They did appear so, when the creeds were, as you say, more clear and definite. The present statement, however, shows that they are much nearer to agreement than was supposed. When Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists can concur cordially in a statement of belief so decided as this, it is easy to see that they cannot be so vitally opposed as was thought. The creed is not new in the sense of the doctrines enunciated, but in the form of statement.

Mrs. M. R., Jackson, Mich. What share does a second wife hold of her husband's estate, he having quite a little real estate at the time they were married, and she also having some money? There are no children by the marriage, but the husband had a son (twenty-four years old), by a previous union.

In some States (New York, for example), a deed of a house and lot to husband and wife jointly, creates the right of survivorship, i. e., the survivor of the two becomes sole owner. In other States, such a deed would confer a half ownership upon each of the parties, and on the death of either husband or wife, his or her interest would go according to last will, or if there should be no will, to the heirs of the one who dies. A second wife, has the rights of a wife, no more, no less. She cannot be deprived of her dower in real estate owned by the husband, i. e., of the use and income of one-third part of his real estate as long as she survives him. No one will buy his real estate from him without her signature. If her husband dies without a will, she will be entitled to a certain portion, usually one-third, sometimes one-half, of his personal property absolutely. The question should be submitted to a local lawyer. As to the son (who has been helped by his father, but who has failed), no legal question is stated.

S. T. P., Boisserain, Can. For some time we have been discussing in our Epworth League the matter of card-playing just among a few, and for pastime. I strongly opposed it, so far as was in my power, claiming that it was a pathway to ruin and a door to the very worst society. This question is all important to us just now. Perhaps if you could discuss the subject—the use of these cards among good Christian society, more especially those who are young and only begun for Christ—I could make it of more value in our circle.

The question of card-playing has been repeatedly discussed in THE MAIL-BAG. It is to be condemned (1), because it awakens the gambling spirit; (2), because it is a pernicious amusement, in that it leads to time-wasting and enervation, and possesses none of the advantages that can be claimed for a wholesome, elevating recreation; (3), it is playing with edged tools, the common tools of the gambler; (4), it has been the means of moral, physical and financial ruin to victims innumerable; (5), it cannot be claimed that anyone was ever benefited by card-playing; and (6) it should be shunned by all who profess to be Christians, on the ground that it is an obstacle to spiritual growth and progress. The card-table, like the dance-hall and the saloon, has been to multitudes an open pathway to perdition, and there is not an argument in its defence that will bear reasonable discussion. There are many amusements in which one may join in without loss of self-respect, but card-playing is not one of the number. Even business men are suspicious of card-playing employees and will not promote them to confidential or responsible positions. When men of the world look at it in this way, it is surely an ominous sign when a church temporizes with an evil which has already involved so many in sin, sorrow and disgrace.

J. G. S., Rose, S. D. If a person's name is written in the Lamb's Book of Life, is he not eligible for membership in any Christian church, and ought he not to be received on application?

No church would reject such a person; he is eligible, and would undoubtedly be received without question if he could produce the book and show the entry, or a certified copy of it. As he cannot do that, a church is bound to exercise care as to the persons it receives into membership. If it received all who declared that their names were written there, it might admit some who would get harm to themselves by being admitted, and might disgrace the church. As the pastor and members are not infallible and have only the ordinary means of testing, they have to follow the rule Christ gave: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

S. C., Huyett, Md.: H. W. C., Colbert, Miss., and others. 1. Can it be possible as I gather from [illegible] and some for perdition? 2. If a man is truly converted, can he sin after his conversion? In [illegible] assume that he was not truly converted?

1. You should be careful about founding any belief on an isolated passage separated from its context. You should take into account the kind of people for whom the passage was originally written, and remember that people prone to some kind of error need teaching which it would not be wise to give to others. The truth is one, but there are many modes of presenting it. God appears to have endowed men with the power of choosing their own way. That is a high privilege, very much higher than enforcing good conduct; but it involves the possibility of their choosing the wrong, which, of course, God foresaw. In a sense, therefore, he did bring into the world men destined for perdition. But that is a very crude way of stating the fact. He does not destine them to such a fate; it is they who, by sin. But if any man sin, we have an Advocate. After conversion, a man's sin is contrary to his new nature and he mourns over it, seeks pardon, and tries to avoid repetition of it. Before his conversion, he does not worry about it, but goes on in sin cheerfully.

W. L. S., Whitwell, Tenn. I have heard that all the volunteers are to be mustered out and that the men who deserted will be punished by imprisonment for two or three years. Is it true?

We [illegible] government to muster out the volunteers at the earliest date, when such a step is practicable; presumably when the Philippines campaign is ended. The [illegible] and volunteers will have an opportunity for re-enlistment. We know nothing regarding the proposed method of dealing with deserters.

It accords with Paul's answer to the Philippian jailer (Acts 16:31). The new Catechism was not framed to express all that its makers believed, but to state the doctrines in which all the denominations represented were agreed. The Congregationalists, Methodists and Presbyterians do not believe that baptism is essential to salvation and therefore if such an opinion had been expressed in the Catechism, they would not have accepted it. We believe that very few English Baptists believe that baptism is essential to salvation, though they, in common with the denominations mentioned above, believe it is a duty which should not be neglected.

NEW YORK'S TRIBUTE TO OUR HEROIC DEAD

Many thousands viewed the funeral cortege of the members of the 71st Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., who died on field and in hospital during the war and whose bodies were brought home from Cuba for interment. The parade passed up Broadway and Fifth Avenue, the remains being in flag-covered boxes, borne on caissons. A guard of honor, numbering 750 men of the regiment, escorted the sad procession.

By no means. There are many poor people who are little likely to be welcomed like Lazarus. Neither wealth nor poverty has anything to do with deciding a man's fate in the next world. WORK FOR THE UNEMPLOYED AT THE GOSPEL MISSION WOODPILE

Wanderers Led to the Cross

The New Gospel Mission of New York City and Its Work Among Homeless Men

ONE of the latest and most promising efforts at organized religious work among homeless and unemployed men is that undertaken by the Gospel Mission, at No. 587 Third Avenue, New York City. This mission, though only a few months old, has already done much good work in a locality which had special need of such effort. Its founder, Miss Freeland, is a Christian worker of long experience, and she has thus far supported the mission from her own means, until a point has been reached where the growth of the work and its enlarged necessities have made it advisable to bring it before the attention of those who may be disposed to aid in its extension.

The noon meetings give unmistakable evidence of the genuineness of the work. When thirty or forty men come at noon to hear simple music and a plain Gospel message, one may be sure "the excellency of the power is not of men, but of God."

The "testimonies" are mostly in English that shows early home and school training. It is not tramp dialect. They speak humbly of the degradation into which they had fallen, through a mis-step in business and laxity of moral principle, and of the joy of knowing Christ, and having him restore everything, even the dear, old family life. They seem, in the main, to be Americans, the men to whom a Christly hand has been extended to help them in the awful struggle from out the pit, down which their feet had slipped. They show their joy in their new faith by bringing to the evening meetings those whom they are trying to win for Christ.

The Superintendent, Miss Freeland, speaking of the principles on which she and her helpers work, says they have faith in the men.

"When they say they want to get out of the pit, we believe them and take hold of them with a grip that means no letting go till they grasp the Saviour's hand. Our little wood-yard in the basement keeps them busy,—a luxury for the unemployed, you know, after walking the streets all night, and facing starvation. It tides them over the first terrible days of their fight with the drink habit, and keeps them out of bad company. And in this way they work with the temporary aid given them in the way of meals and lodgings. We find work for them, if we can; but our main dependence is upon God. He does all that lasts, and we are sure of his part, for 'he is not willing that any should perish.'"

In the new mission, there is no flaunting of the old rags of vice—no ostentatious display of self-sacrifice. It is a work worth studying. With such eminent Christian endorsers as Gen. O. O. Howard, Rev. A. C. Dixon and others equally well known, it is entitled to the consideration of God's people everywhere.

When women of social position and culture are willing to devote their lives to service for the "submerged tenth," and show their ability to do successfully what every one knows must be done, the Lord's stewards should stand by them and give the most cordial encouragement.

Miss Freeland has an opportunity of securing a much larger building, which will, in every way, be better suited for the work of the mission, and which will afford an opportunity for establishing certain industries that will, in time, enable the mission to be practically self-supporting. An earnest effort is being made to secure the necessary funds to cover the cost of rent and equipment. Any reader of this journal who may be interested in learning further in regard to this work, which has already been signally blessed in the conversion of many souls, can do so by addressing the Superintendent, at 330 East Seventeenth Street, New York.

A SERVICE AT THE NEW YORK GOSPEL MISSION

AGUINALDO'S FLIGHT

His Capital Taken, His Army Scattered, and He is Now a Fugitive

WITH the occupation of Malolos, the Philippine capital, and the dispersion of Aguinaldo's army, our military campaign in the Asiatic archipelago has reached a point where no formidable organized resistance is longer expected. Cable dispatches from Maj.-Gen. Otis indicate that the rebel army has been thoroughly disintegrated.

The rebels had used the railway from Manila to Malolos during the early stage of the war for transferring supplies and reinforcements from the interior to the front. Our "Flying Column," under Maj. Gen. MacArthur, as it advanced, captured in rapid succession the stations along this railway, and kept in constant touch with the headquarters at Manila, using also the field telegraph to communicate with Major-Gen. Otis. At every point, the insurgents were found entrenched and prepared to repel attack, but their defense was weak and they invariably broke and fled before the fire of our troops. At Malabon they made a momentary stand, but as the Americans approached and opened fire, the Filipinos broke from their cover and retreated, leaving many dead on the field. This experience was repeated all along the line of advance.

At the taking of the town of Malinta, there was a sharp engagement in which Col. H. C. Egbert of the Twenty-second Infantry was killed, together with several men of the Oregon and Kansas regulars. In their flight, the rebels burned towns and villages and destroyed bridges and railways. At Novaliches and Polo, there was more sharp fighting, but the rebel entrenchments were quickly carried. Our heaviest day's losses during the advance were 2 officers and 25 enlisted men killed, and 8 officers and 142 men wounded. At Marilao, there was severe fighting, our loss being 6 killed and 40 wounded. At Maycauyan, near Malolos, the Filipinos were demoralized by the shouting of the Americans, and fled in panic, leaving 80 prisoners in our hands. On March 31, Gen. MacArthur's troops appeared before Malolos, which had already been evacuated by the enemy, who had left behind a single Filipino detachment, with orders to burn the town. Our troops occupied the capital, after some opposition. Soon the fugitive townspeople began to return. The rebel army had been scattered in confusion, the chief and his followers seeking refuge in the mountains to the eastward. It is reported that he has now only 1,400 men of the once large force. His recent losses in killed and wounded are estimated at little short of 10,000. The war has been continued by our troops with humanity and a due regard for the safety of non-combatants. Filipino prisoners captured by our troops have been astonished on being told that they were not condemned to instant execution. Many deserters are coming over to our lines.

The New Spurgeon Tabernacle

The Vast Edifice, the Scene of the Late Pastor Spurgeon's Labors, Now Rising, Phœnix-Like from its Ashes

BY the burning in the spring of 1898 of the Metropolitan Tabernacle in London, the whole Christian world felt a sorrow at the fall of the famous building so long hallowed by the successful labors of the late Pastor Charles H. Spurgeon. The loss came as a personal bereavement to the many thousands who found the better way of life in that place of large blessings, and there was mourning among thousands of Christians in many lands, that, so soon after the laying down of the life of its longtime pastor, the house of his ministries should also fall. But, while the flames were crackling and the hose-streams hissing among the roaring wreck, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon bravely announced to his people that the Tabernacle would be rebuilt better than before, and the next twenty-four hours brought many cablegrams from America and other lands to reinforce the offers of assistance at home in the worthy purpose.

SECTIONAL VIEW OF SPURGEON'S NEW TABERNACLE IN LONDON

So promptly was the work taken up that on New Year's day the members held a service in the basement of the wrecked Tabernacle, and the pastor joined with his people in the rejoicings over again entering their old home. The basement in which the service was held gives comfortable accommodation to nearly 2,000 people, awaiting the completion of the main auditorium above, which will hold 5,000 when again ready for occupancy. Work is now being steadily pushed upon the main portion of the building, and it is expected that it will be completed in about a year at a total cost of $200,000, which is more than the original Tabernacle represented. The builder is the son of the maker of the first building.

Pastor Spurgeon and his people are busily engaged in raising the $80,000 remaining to be supplied for construction, and large meeings have been held in Exeter Hall and elsewhere to push forward the effort to an early success. Americans and others visiting London next year en route to the Paris Exposition, may expect to see the New Tabernacle in its simple but imposing beauty, standing as a renewed hope to the people of South London and to many others who on that site, or through reading the sermons preached there, have gained such a knowledge of the truth as has changed their lives, and made the name of Spurgeon a blessed and imperishable memory to them. The spiritual work commenced in the old building will be worthily carried on in the new, by the son of the great preacher. The numerous agencies connected with the church are also continued, by Mr. Thomas Spurgeon.

· THE · METROPOLITAN · PULPIT ·

. . . A Stout Grasp . . .

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, II. Samuel 23: 10, . . . And his hand clave unto the sword.

WHAT a glorious thing to preach the Gospel! Some suppose that because I have resigned a fixed pastorate, I will cease to preach. No. No. I expect to preach more than I ever have. If the Lord will, four times as much, though in manifold places. I would not dare to halt with such opportunity to declare the truth through the ear to audiences, and to the eye through the printing-press. And here we have a stirring theme put before us by the prophet.

A great general of King David was Eleazar, the hero of the text. The Philistines opened battle against him, and his troops retreated. The cowards fled. Eleazar and three of his comrades went into the battle and swept the field, for four men with God on their side are stronger than a whole regiment with God against them. "Fall back!" shouted the commander of the Philistine army. The cry ran along the host: "Fall back!" Eleazar, having swept the field, throws himself on the ground to rest: but the muscles and sinews of his hand had been so long bent around the hilt of his sword that the hilt was imbedded in the flesh, and the gold wire of the hilt had broken through the skin of the palm of the hand, and he could not drop this sword which he had so gallantly wielded. "His hand clave unto the sword." That is what I call magnificent fighting for the Lord God of Israel. And we want more of it.

I propose to show you how Eleazar took hold of the sword and how the sword took hold of Eleazar. I look at Eleazar's hand, and I come to the conclusion that he took the sword with a very tight grip. The cowards who fled had no trouble in dropping their swords. As they fly over the rocks I hear their swords clanging in every direction. It is easy enough for them to drop their swords. But Eleazar's hand clave unto the sword. In this Christian conflict we want a tighter grip of the Gospel weapons, a tighter grasp of the two-edged sword of the truth. It makes me sick to see these Christian people who hold only a part of the truth, and let the rest of the truth go, so that the Philistines, seeing the loosened grasp, wrench the whole sword away from them. I like an infidel a great deal better than I do one of these namby-pamby Christians who hold a part of the truth and let the rest go. By miracle, God preserved this Bible just as it is, and it is a Damascus blade. The severest test to which a sword can be put in a sword factory is to wind the blade around a gun-barrel like a ribbon, and then when the sword is let loose it flies back to its own shape. So the sword of God's truth has been fully tested, and it is bent this way and that way, and wound this way and that way, but it always comes back to its own shape. Think of it! A Book written near nineteen centuries ago, and some of it thousands of years ago, and yet in our time the average sale of this Book is more than twenty thousand copies every week, and more than a million copies a year. I say now that a Book which is divinely inspired and divinely kept and divinely scattered is a weapon worth holding a tight grip of.

Do not be ashamed, young man, to have the world know that you are a friend of the Bible. This Book is the friend of all that is good, and it is the sworn enemy of all that is bad. An eloquent writer recently gives an incident of a very bad man who stood in a cell of a Western prison. This criminal had gone through all styles of crime, and he was there waiting for the gallows. The convict standing there at the window of the cell, this writer says, "looked out and declared, 'I am an infidel.' He said that to all the men and women and children who happened to be gathered there. 'I am an infidel,'" and the eloquent writer says: "Every man and woman there believed him." And the writer goes on to say: "If he had stood there saying, 'I am a Christian,' every man and woman would have said: 'He is a liar!'"

This Bible is the sworn enemy of all that is wrong, and it is the friend of all that is good. Oh, hold on it! Do not take part of it and throw the rest away. Hold on to all of it. There are so many people now who do not know. You ask them if the soul is immortal, and they say: "I guess it is; I don't know. Perhaps it is, perhaps it isn't." Is the Bible true? "Well, perhaps it is, and perhaps it isn't. Perhaps it may be, figuratively, and perhaps it may be partly, and perhaps it may not be at all." They despise what they call the apostolic creed; but if their own creed were written out, it would read like this: "I believe in nothing, the maker of heaven and earth, and in nothing which it hath sent, which nothing was born of nothing, and which nothing was dead and buried and descended into nothing, and arose from nothing, and ascended to nothing, and now sitteth at the right hand of nothing, from which it will come to judge nothing. I believe in the holy agnostic church and in the communion of nothingarians, and in the forgiveness of nothing, and the resurrection of nothing, and in the life that never shall be. Amen!" That is the creed of tens of thousands of people in this day. If you have a mind to adopt such a theory, I will not. "I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, and in the holy Catholic Church, and in the communion of saints, and in the life everlasting. Amen." Oh, when I see Eleazar taking such a stout grip of the sword in the battle against sin and for righteousness, I come to the conclusion that we ought to take a stouter grip of God's eternal truth—the sword of righteousness.

As I look at Eleazar's hand I also notice his spirit of self-forgetfulness. He did not notice that the hilt of the sword was eating through the palm of his hand. He did not know it hurt him. As he went out into the conflict he was so anxious for the victory he forgot himself, and that hilt might go never so deeply into the palm of his hand, it could not disturb him. "His hand clave unto the sword." O, my brothers and sisters, let us go into the Christian conflict with the spirit of self-abnegation. Who cares whether the world praises us or denounces us? What do we care for misrepresentation, or abuse, or persecution in a conflict like this? Let us forget ourselves. That man who is afraid of getting his hand hurt will never kill a Philistine. Who cares whether you get hurt or not if you get the victory? Oh, how many Christians there are who are all the time worrying about the way the world treats them. They are so tired, and they are so abused, and they are so tempted, when Eleazar did not think whether he had a hand, or an arm, or a foot. All he wanted was victory.

We see how men forget themselves in worldly achievement. We have often seen men who, in order to achieve worldly success, will forget all physical fatigue and all annoyance and all obstacle. Just after the battle of Yorktown, in the American Revolution, a musician, wounded, was told he must have his limbs amputated, and they were about to fasten him to the surgeon's table—for it was long before the merciful discovery of anæsthetics. He said, "No, don't fasten me to that table; get me a violin." A violin was brought to him, and he said: "Now go to work as I begin to play," and for forty minutes, during the awful pangs of amputation, he moved not a muscle nor dropped a note, while he played some sweet tune. Oh, is it not strange that with the music of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and with this grand march of the church militant on the way to become the church triumphant, we cannot forget ourselves and forget all pang and all sorrow and all persecution?

What have we suffered in comparison with those who expired with suffocation, or were burned, or were chopped to pieces for the truth's sake? We talk of the persecution of olden times. There is just as much persecution going on now in various ways. In 1849, in Madagascar, eighteen men were put to death for Christ's sake. They were to be hurled over the rocks, and before they were hurled over the rocks, in order to make their death the more dreadful in anticipation, they were put in baskets and swung to and fro over the precipice that they might see how many hundred feet they would have to be dashed down, and while they were swinging in these baskets over the rocks they sang:

[illegible]
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While [illegible]
While the [illegible]

Then they were dashed down to death. Oh, how much others have endured for Christ, and how little we endure for Christ. We want to ride to heaven in a Pullman sleeping car, our feet on soft plush, the bed made up early so we can sleep all the way, the black porter of Death to wake us up only in time to enter the golden city. We want all the surgeons to fix our hand up. Let them bring on all the lint and all the bandages and all the salve, for our hand is hurt, while Eleazar does not know his hand is hurt. "His hand clave unto the sword."

As I look at Eleazar's hand, I come to the conclusion that he has done a great deal of hard hitting. I am not surprised [illegible] and his three companions—drove back the army of Philistines, that Eleazar's sword clave to his hand, for every time he struck an enemy with one end of the sword, the other end of the sword wounded him. When he took hold of the sword, the sword took hold of him.

Oh, we have found an enemy who cannot be conquered by rose water and soft speeches. It must be sharp stroke and straight thrust. There is intemperance, and there is fraud, and there is gambling, and there is lust, and there are ten thousand battalions of iniquity, armed Philistine iniquity. How are they to be captured and overthrown? Soft sermons in morocco cases laid down in front of an exquisite audience will not do it. You have got to call things by their right name. You have got to expel from our churches Christians who eat the sacrament on Sunday, and devour widows' houses all the week. We have got to stop our indignation against the Hittites and the Jebusites and the Girgashites, and let those poor wretches go, and apply our indignation to the modern transgressions which need to be dragged out and slain. Strike for God so hard that while you slay the sin the sword will adhere to your own hand. I tell you my friends we want a few John Knoxes and John Wesleys in the Christian church today. The whole tendency is to refine on Christian work. We keep on refining on it, until we send apologetic word to iniquity we are about to capture it. And we must go with sword silver chased and presented by the ladies, and we must ride on white palfrey under embroidered housing, putting the spurs in only just enough to make the charger dance gracefully, and then we must send a missive, delicate as a wedding card, to ask the old black giant of sin if he will not surrender. Women saved by the grace of God and on glorious mission sent, detained from Sabbath classes because their new hat is not done. It seems as if in our churches we wanted a baptism of cologne and balm of a thousand flowers, when we actually need a baptism of fire from the Lord God of Pentecost. But we are so afraid somebody will criticize our sermons, or criticize our prayers, or criticize [illegible] the world's redemption is lost in the fear we will get our hand hurt, while Eleazar went into the conflict, "and his hand clave unto the sword."

But I see in the next place what a hard thing it was for Eleazar to get his hand and his sword parted. The muscles and the sinews had been so long grasped around the sword he could not drop it when he proposed to drop it, and his three comrades, I suppose, came up and tried to help him, and they bathed the back part of the hand, hoping the sinews and muscles would relax. But no. "His hand clave unto the sword." But after awhile they were successful, and then they noticed that the curve in the palm of the hand corresponded exactly with the curve of the hilt. "His hand clave unto the sword."

You and I have seen it many a time. There are in the United States to-day many aged ministers of the Gospel. They are too feeble now to preach. In the church records the word standing opposite their name is "emeritus," or the words are, "a minister without charge." They were a heroic race. They had small salaries, and but few books, and they swam spring freshets to meet their appointments. But they did in their day a mighty work for God. They took off more of the heads of Philistine iniquity than you could count from noon to sundown. You put that old minister of the Gospel now into a prayer-meeting, or occasional pulpit, or a sick room where there is some one to be comforted, and it is the same old ring to his voice and the same old story of pardon, and peace, and Christ, and heaven. His hand has so long clutched the sword in Christian conflict he cannot drop it. "His hand clave unto the sword."

I had in my parish in Philadelphia a very aged man who in his early life had been the companion and adviser of the early presidents, Madison and Monroe. He had wielded vast influence, but I only knew him as a very aged man. The most remarkable thing about him was his ardor for Christ. When he could not stand up in the meetings without propping, he would throw his arm around a pillar of the church, and though his mind was partially gone, his love for Christ was so great that all were in deep respect and profound admiration, and were moved when he spoke. I was called to see him die. I entered the room, and he said, "Mr. Talmage, I cannot speak to you now." He was in a very pleasant delirium, as he imagined he had an audience before him. He said: "I must tell these people to come to Christ and prepare for heaven." And then in this pleasant delirium, both arms lifted, this octogenarian preached Christ and told of the glories of the world to come. There, lying on his dying pillow, his dying hand clave to his sword.

Oh, if there ever was any one who had a right to retire from the conflict it was old Joshua. Soldiers come back from battle have the names of the battles on their flags, showing where they distinguished themselves, and it is a very appropriate inscription. Look at that flag of old General Joshua. On it, Jericho, Gibeon, Hazar, City of Ai, and instead of the stars sprinkled on the flag, the sun and the moon which stood still. There he is, a hundred and ten years old. He is lying flat on his back, but he is preaching. His dying words are a battle charge against idolatry, and a rallying cry for the Lord of Hosts as he says: "Behold, this day I go the way of all the earth, and God hath not failed to fulfill his promise concerning Israel." His dying hand clave unto the sword.

There is the headless body of Paul on the road to Ostea. His great brain and his great heart have been severed. The elmwood rods had stung him fearfully. When the corn ship broke up he swam ashore, coming up drenched with the brine. Every day since that day when the horse reared under him in the suburbs of Damascus, as the supernatural light fell, down to this day when he is sixty-eight years of age, and ill from the prison cell of the Mamartine, he has been outrageously treated, and he is waiting to die. How does he spend his last hours? Telling the world how badly he feels, and describing the rheumatism that he got in prison, the rheumatism afflicting his limbs, or the neuralgia piercing his temples, or the thirst that fevers his tongue? Oh, no. His last words are the battle-shout for Christendom: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand; I have fought the good fight." And so his dying hand clave unto the sword.

It was in the front room on the second floor that my father lay a-dying. It was Saturday morning, four o'clock. Just three years before that day, my mother had left him for the skies, and he had been homesick to join her company. He was eighty-three years of age. Ministers of the Gospel came in to comfort him, but he comforted them. How wonderfully the words sounded out from his dying pillow: "I have been young, and now am old, yet have I never seen the righteous forsaken, or his seed begging bread." They bathed his brow, and they bathed his hands, and they bathed his feet, and they succeeded in straightening out the feet; but they did not succeed in bathing open the hand so it would stay open. They bathed the hand open, but it came shut. They bathed it open again, but it came shut. What was the matter with the thumb and the fingers of that old hand? Ah! it had so long touched the sword of Christian conflict that "his hand clave unto the sword."

I intend this sermon as a tonic. I want you to hold the truth with ineradicable grip, and I want you to strike so hard for God that it will react and while you take the sword, the sword will take you. You notice that the officers of the Northern army every year assemble, and you notice that the officers of the Southern army every year assemble. Soldiers coming together are very apt to recount their experiences and to show their scars. Here is a soldier who pulls up his sleeve, and says, "There, I was wounded in that arm," and shows the scar. And another soldier pulls down his collar, and says, "There, I was wounded in the neck." And another soldier says, "I have had no use of that limb since the gunshot fracture." O my friends, when the battle of life is over, and the resurrection has come, and our bodies rise from the dead, will we have on us any scars showing our bravery for God? Christ will be there all covered with scars. Scars on the brow, scars on the hand, scars on the feet, scars all over the heart won in the battle of redemption. And all heaven will sob aloud with emotion as they look at those scars. Ignatius will be there, and he will point out the place where the tooth and paw of the lion seized him in the Coliseum, and John Huss will be there, and he will show where the coal first scorched the foot on that day when his spirit took wing of flame from Constance. M'Millan, and Campbell and Freeman, American missionaries in India, will be there—the men who with their wives and children went down in the awful massacre at Cawnpore, and they will show where the daggers of the Sepoys struck them. The Waldenses will be there, and they will show where their bones were broken on that day when the Piedmontese soldiery pitched them over the rocks. And there will be those there who took care of the sick and who looked after the poor, and they will have evidences of earthly exhaustion. And Christ, with his scarred hand waving over the scarred multitude, will say, "You suffered with me on earth; now be glorified with me in heaven." And then the great organs of eternity will take up the chant, and St. John will play: "These are they who came out of great tribulation and had their robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb."

But what will your chagrin and mine be if it shall be told that day on the streets of heaven that on earth we shrank back from all toil and sacrifice and hardship. No scars to show the heavenly soldiery. Not so much as one ridge on the palm of the hand to show that just once in all this battle for God and the truth, we grasped the sword so firmly, and struck so hard that the sword and the hand stuck together and the hand clave to the sword. O my Lord Jesus rouse us to thy service.

Thy saints in all this glorious war
Shall conquer though they die;
They see the triumph from afar,
And seize it with the eye.

When that illustrious day shall rise,
And all thy armies shine
In robes of victory through the skies,
The glory shall be thine.

FAMINE · FOLLOWS · FLOOD · IN · CHINA ·

. . . The "Yellow River" Inundates a Vast Territory, Spreading Disaster and Death Among Millions of Peasants . . .

A CHINESE BEGGAR

"CHINA'S Sorrow" is the name by which the Hwang Ho river is known throughout the empire. That the name is not misapplied is proved by the record of appalling disaster which is the history of the river for generations past. This year, the tale of destruction and suffering has been repeated, with tenfold intensity, and it is one which, when known to the world, will fill it with amazement and sorrow at the fate of those multitudes who have already perished and the pitiful plight of the survivors whose cry now ascends to heaven.

REFUGEES FROM THE YELLOW RIVER FLOODS

The first intimation of the disaster came by way of San Francisco, the news being brought by steamers plying between that port and Hong Kong. It was supplemented by letters from American missionaries in the Shantung province, where the greatest suffering exists. United States Consul Fowler, at Chefoo, sent out an appeal in behalf of the inundated population, in which he said:

Hundreds of villages are submerged, cities surrounded by water, homes, furniture, clothing—in fact everything—is under water or destroyed; the natives themselves are living in straw huts; many have absolutely no shelter from the winter's cold and snow, subsisting on bark, willow twigs, roots, etc. The crops have been a failure, the seed for next sowing is gone, and there is nothing for these starving millions to hope for in the future. We shall be glad to receive contributions of money and corn. We earnestly beg the merchants and others on the Pacific Coast to contribute a steamer load of corn.

Dispatches from other sources state that great numbers of the destitute have tried to obtain relief from the people of the southern districts, but have failed, as those districts are unable to extend help.

The present suffering recalls some of the plagues mentioned in Scripture. Last fall an army of frogs appeared and terrified the natives, who regarded it as an omen of evil. When the floods came, the panic was widespread. Some of the mandarins came upon the city walls, in full state costume, to worship the flood-god. The river, leaving its banks, spread over the country on both sides for many miles, obliterating all landmarks except those on high ground and covering farms and dwellings. "China's Sorrow" had indeed vindicated its name.

A few days ago, our own State Department published the substance of recent dispatches from consular officials, and urged that aid be sent from this country to the sufferers. The proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at once telegraphed to the Secretary of State, desiring to know the fullest details in the possession of the Department concerning the flood and famine and offering, in behalf of the readers of this journal, to undertake the raising of a cargo of corn, if the need were really of the exceedingly urgent character represented. To that telegram, Secretary Hay replied as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON.
March 28, 1899.

Louis Klopsch, Esq.,
Proprietor of "The Christian Herald,"
New York City.

Sir—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of the 25th, in which you state that "The Christian Herald" will undertake to raise a cargo of corn for the relief of the two million sufferers from the Yellow River floods in China, provided the United States Government will furnish transportation facilities from San Francisco, and you suggest that one of the United States transports about to leave for the Philippines might be utilized for this purpose.

Although this Government has, on several occasions, aided in alleviating the suffering in various parts of the world by the transportation of supplies contributed by the people of the United States, the employment of United States vessels for such purpose has usually been done under some special authority of law.

During the Indian famine in 1896 and 1897, for example, the action of this Government in transporting supplies was authorized by Public Resolution No. 14, February 19, 1897. It would not come within the competency of this Department to decide that this Government could act, as you propose, without the authorization of Congress, or, in the absence of an available appropriation, could direct the employment of any public funds for the purpose of chartering a vessel to convey the offered relief to China. I will, however, refer to the War and Navy Departments your suggestion of utilizing a United States vessel for the transportation of the relief supplies generously offered by "The Christian Herald," in order that it may be ascertained whether any Government transport or naval vessel proceeding to Asiatic waters may be found available for the purpose.

Complying with your request for full particulars of the suffering in China as reported by Consul Fowler, I beg to enclose for your information copy of the printed appeal of the American residents of Chefoo for aid for the sufferers; also a copy of Mr. Fowler's dispatch to the Department, No. 113, November 29, 1898, with enclosures. I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,
JOHN HAY.

Accompanying Secretary Hay's letter were several official reports from U. S. Consuls in China. Consul John Fowler, at Chefoo, in a letter to the State Department, writes:

"It is stated that one million people are in distress, and there can be no doubt that thousands will die of starvation and exposure.

We appeal to the pitiful in every place to which these words may go, on behalf of the sufferers from the appalling Yellow River flood of this year. Public appeals for aid should be made only when the calamity is of vast extent, awful in the misery it causes, and requiring means for its alleviation quite beyond the power of local government organization or private charity. In August last, the Yellow River burst its banks in four places, and the river poured its waters over many counties; the official returns state thirty-one are affected. The great break was on the south side at Ho-t'ou-ch'uan, where an opening of about seven miles was made. Through this gap practically the whole body of the river is now pouring, flooding, and in many parts devastating nine counties.

The members of the committee, in journeying over the flooded district, have seen hundreds of villages submerged and many district cities entirely surrounded by water. Thousands of homes are in ruins; furniture, winter clothing and grain are buried beneath, while that which has been rescued is only useful to people who have fallen into the depths of misery. The people themselves are either living in mat huts on the wrecked ruin of their homes or have found temporary shelter with relatives, or are begging in more prosperous places.

The distress is rendered more acute since on account of drought the spring wheat crop was a general failure.

Every effort of local charity is being made to meet the needs of the people. But all sums likely to be given will yet be wholly insufficient, therefore we appeal to philanthropic men and women in China and in the home countries to assist by generous gifts.

A memorial was addressed by the foreign missionaries in the flooded provinces to the foreign legations at Peking, in which they said:

Thousands are not only destitute of food and clothing, but are homeless and without shelter. Grain has been washed away or spoiled, animals drowned or sold for present means of subsistence, household utensils and building materials are being sold to meet the necessities of the owners thus suddenly rendered destitute by the flood.

Commenting on the situation, one of the leading journals says:

We know what government relief is in China, at its best. It will accomplish much, though far less than its obligations require. There are many generous-hearted individuals among the Chinese, too, who will subscribe to the relief fund; but even when all is done that will be done by foreigner or native, there is no likelihood that more than a portion of the distress can be relieved.

Jesus the Way, the Truth and Life

S. S. Lesson for April 23. John 14: 1-14
Golden Text, John 14: 6

"I AM the way, the truth and the life." Oh, the perplexity, the misery, the despair of a man who had lost his way upon the mountains, in the forest, or on the sea! Oh, the unspeakable relief and joy of having found the way! All impossibilities become possible when we have found the way. And there is a way, a "new and living Way," to be saved, to be holy, to do continually and perfectly the entire will of our God. And this Way is no system of rules, no special experiences which we have to go through: it is a living Way, a living Person—Jesus himself. As the Word became flesh, He made the way by treading it, and he treads it anew with everyone who sets foot upon it. His own death for us, and his own life in our nature, have made this way possible for us, and the steps which he as man has taken, are open for all who will follow him.

"Let not your heart be troubled" or conscious. It is true that the enemy of souls, "the prince of this world," arrays all his power to withstand us in our allegiance to our God, but he who is the Way, has been "tempted in all points like as we are," and has not left one step untried of the way which one of his own must tread: he has left us an example that we should follow his steps, and in his Word his steps are to be found in every circumstance in which we are placed. Where he as Man has gone, there we can go, too. Therefore, it is disloyalty to him to have a troubled heart: the remedy always is. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." "The Lord (Jehovah) is my Shepherd, sung David"—David's Son, when he was in the flesh: "I shall not want:" and we can take up the song, and say, "The Lord (Jesus) is my Shepherd, I shall not want." He must break a way through wherever he leads me: all the power of the enemy cannot conquer him.

"In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." First he came on earth to prepare a way to heaven, and now he is gone to prepare the heavenly mansions, perhaps of different degrees of glory. "And if I go, and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." What is this? He, the Word, become flesh (R.V.), "the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth," is gone to prepare a place for such as we are, and not content with all he has already done, is coming again to receive us unto himself, that we may be with him in his glory! And we can yet doubt him? And we can remain troubled and anxious? And we can go on comparing our experiences with other people's experiences, instead of being taken up with him? Shame on us that we appreciate him and trust him so little: that we can dishonor him by a troubled heart.

"But I have such weak faith, and my love is so cold," says a feeble, doubting Christian. "And I am wholly sanctified, and full of the Holy Ghost," says some young, enthusiastic Christian, who does not wait, like the early Christians, until someone else says it of him. And neither the one nor the other has his eyes on Jesus, both are equally occupied with themselves and their experiences, but they do not behold his glory. He is the Way out of the weakness of the one and the self-confidence of the other. It is what he is, manifested to us, seen, received, and understood by us, which causes us to be "changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

Three years and a half these men had companied with the Son of God, and they knew him not! They did not understand his words! They were taken up with preconceptions, religious prejudices and their own experiences, just as before being finished, Christ has a few parting words to utter to these friends with whom he had lived for over three years, from whom he was about to be separated, and who were to carry on his work after his departure. At last, they understood, though still only vaguely, that bitter humiliation and death awaited him in the near future and they were depressed. He had not come then to redeem Israel and be its king, after all. They could not be other than disappointed. Then, he who was about to suffer, who needed comfort and sympathy, set himself to comfort them. In doing so, he uttered words more significant and impressive than had ever before fallen from his lips. He seems to long to tell them everything, to draw aside the curtain and show them the grandeur and the glory awaiting him beyond the humiliation. But words fail him. This, however, they understood, that in spite of appearances he was not being driven or forced out of the world, but was going voluntarily and for a definite purpose. He was going to prepare a place for his people. Where that place is and how he would prepare it, he does not say. Probably it was not possible to be more explicit. As on a winter's night we look up at the glittering orbs in the sky, it almost seems as if they might be the "many mansions" he referred to. But his main concern was to inspire faith in himself. He is the way by which men may come to God: the truth which satisfies every inquiring soul: and the life which gives the power to follow him. Philip wants to see the Father. He, like others, would walk by sight. Again Christ enjoins faith. The Father cannot be seen by mortal man, but all that man can see of him, they had seen in Christ. The only way in which a man can understand God is to conceive of him living and acting in the world. This they had seen in Christ. He that had seen him had seen the Father. So, all centered in him. And for the future, it is still to him that they must look. In preaching and working, they would be conscious of a new mysterious power. This would be a proof to them that his words were true—that he had gone to the Father.

"I GO TO PREPARE A PLACE FOR YOU."

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

I am the way. "During a journey in Switzerland," says a well-known writer, "I engaged [illegible] a guide and a nervous gentleman who had been persuaded to join a party in climbing the Alps. The nervous man was questioning the guide who answered fully his questions as to what he should take with him. But when the questions turned on the path and how this and that difficulty would be surmounted and whether the guide had a chart of the way, he answered bluntly, "I am the way." I thought then that the faith the guide required was just that which Christ expects of us. A traveler writes: "I was sick, full of doubts and unable to realize the presence of God. I was on a vessel, the owner of which was a friend of mine, and we were sailing on the Bay of Fundy. One night I was aroused from sleep by loud whistles and the stopping and starting of the engine. I went on deck and found that we were enveloped in a thick fog. I stayed on deck half an hour watching the captain as he gave his orders. I saw how carefully he navigated the steamer, how intently he listened to the fog-bell, how he noted the report of the man who was sounding with the plummet, and how intelligently he took precautions for the safety of his vessel. I returned to my berth feeling that I could trust such a captain as that. The fog was still around my soul, but I had a still better Captain for that and for the first time in many weeks I rested in the full assurance of faith."

The truth. Milton describes truth as a beautiful creature who came once into the world with her divine master and was most glorious to look upon: but when he ascended, there arose a race of wicked deceivers who hewed her in a thousand pieces as the Egyptian Typhon hewed the god Osiris and scattered the fragments to the four winds. But as Isis made careful search for the fragments of the god, going all over the world to find them, so the lovers of truth have sought her. They have found here a limb and there a limb but never will they find the whole until they see her again perfect in her divine Lord. An eminent judge and an eminent theological professor were brought together at the same dinner table, the host hoping that the conversation of two such great men would be a rare treat to his guests. To his disappointment, after a few minutes' talk, both remained silent. Afterwards, the judge expressed the opinion that the professor was a much over-rated man. "He is ignorant," he said, "he does not know the first principles of jurisprudence." To another person the professor was expressing a similar opinion of the judge. "Would you believe it," he asked, "that man did not even know the decisions of the Council of Trent?" Each was learned in his own sphere, but unfamiliar with others'. The truth as Jesus uttered it goes to the heart of every class and is appreciated by learned and ignorant alike.

The Life. There are many men who know the way in which they should walk, and are convinced of the truth, yet continue in sin, and have no power to overcome their bad habits and propensities. While admiring goodness, they are unable to follow it. What such men need is power or life. They want vigor of will. So Christ fulfills the wants of human nature. He is not only the way and the truth, he is the life and the giver of life. Moody compares the situation to a locomotive. It is in perfect order. Its wheels and pistons and valves are all of the best and without a flaw. But the engine does not move. It is there a dead weight on the track. What must be done? Why, build a fire under the boilers. Let that be done and the engine moves.

Mrs. Bird Visits "Suicide Hall"

The "Mother of the Bowery" Draws a Terrible Picture of the Pitfalls that are Spread for Simple Country Girls in Vile Dens—Vice that Flourishes Unrestrained

"SUICIDE CORNER," ON THE BOWERY AND FIRST STREET, NEW YORK
Here three girls, sick of a sinful life, killed themselves lately

FOR months past the public has heard at frequent intervals, of a notorious resort on the Bowery in New York, to which many young girls had been lured to disgrace and ruin. They had read with a shudder how these poor, hapless beings had formed a "Suicides' Club," with the avowed purpose of ending their wretched lives, one after another, as the opportunity offered. The public had also read further, with amazement, that this dreadful purpose had actually been carried out, as far as three of the poor unfortunates were concerned, and that these miserable girls had ended their lives by poison, in quick succession, on a certain corner of the Bowery, which has since become known as "Suicide Corner." They had selected, evidently by common consent, a place for the final tragedy from which their dying gaze might be fixed upon the resort which had been the scene of their downfall.

MRS. SARAH J. BIRD

It is almost inconceivable that such places should be permitted to exist in any civilized community. Mrs. Bird's graphic and fearlessly truthful description of this evil den which those poor girls and their companions in wickedness frequent, will be read with intense and sympathetic interest. Her story furnishes the strongest argument ever made in behalf of preventive and rescue work among young girls in large cities. To this work she has already devoted a great part of her life, and her experience, no less than her eminent Christian character, entitles her to speak with authority. Her article is given below.

Mrs. Bird Tells Her Story

"Is it not time for a Christian woman to speak? This question has forced itself upon me since my nightly visits at 'Suicide Hall.' Shall I take the risk of offending the delicacy of dearest friends by this protest? My whole nature recoils from this publicity; but the time has come when silence is criminal.

"I am writing this at three o'clock in the morning, having just returned from a morning visit to McGurk's dance hall. The law compels the closing of saloons at one A.M., so of course I found the front of the saloon in darkness; but, opening the side hall door at the end of a narrow passage, was a scene of revelry such as can never be described or forgotten. Liquor of all kinds was brought on waiters from the rear doors of this supposedly closed saloon. Think of the horror—the death of the soul being celebrated by boisterous music and vulgar dance. Young men and girls crazed to madness by the so-called 'soft-drinks,' that can transform human beings into fiends in so short a time. If your corner druggist should sell arsenic to your boys and girls, would you not arrest the guilty party for murder? Is it any less diabolical to serve, in dainty glasses, a liquid which sooner or later will drive those who frequent these dance halls to the suicide of soul and body? Ten years ago, when I went to search for unfortunate young women buried in the dives, I was repeatedly refused admittance. Finally the policeman told me, if I expected to get entrance to the closed doors, I must go in disguise. This I did, frequently assuming the garb of a beggar that I might come in touch with those I longed to save. Now, although McGurk and his assistants know me to be a Christian worker, they open wide their doors, and this also I find to be the case in all of the vilest resorts. Some deem this a hopeful sign. I think not; for these hideous criminals, by their publicity, are making the young—lured by the music and free entrance—familiar with the vilest dives; and the indifference shown by our Christian community is most appalling in its effect.

MRS. BIRD (MOTHER OF THE BOWERY), VISITING THE GIRLS AT MCGURK'S SALOON
She remained for hours pleading with them to abandon their life of sin

"I said to the manager one night: 'I am here to try and induce these girls to leave this place and return to their mothers.' He replied; 'That is right. I would not put anything in your way'; but could I believe that, when the awful machinery for their destruction was all about me?

"About midnight there is some chance of getting the attention of the girls, and they give me their confidence; but as the morning hours come, the frightful intoxication increases, and renders them incapable of any serious impressions. One young woman told me exultingly that they had formed a 'Suicide Club!' Last week, one night, I saw a sad-faced girl by my side. She was too sick to join in the revelry, so she listened to my words of sympathy and gave me her address. The next morning I went to the number given, and the woman of whom she rented her room opened the door. Upon my inquiring, she said she had just put the girl on the street; that she had not paid for her room for three weeks, and was too sick to bring in any money. I asked if she could tell me where I might possibly find her. She called upstairs to a lodger, and found the poor girl had been sheltered by her. There I found this child, a perfect wreck, only twenty-two years old, and a graduate of one of our first colleges. Three years of this hideous life had brought her to say, 'Death is my only friend.' No home, no father or mother, penniless, there seemed to be but one place for her, and that was the hospital. It took two days of much urging before she would consent to go there. She is now lying in an isolated room in the contagious ward.

"In another dance hall, not far away, there had been a terrible fight. A girl told me herself that she attacked her companion with a knife and cut off his cheek. A pistol shot rang out, a bullet entered her side, and she is doomed.

"The scenes of revelry and awful demoralization surpassed anything I could have ever imagined. I met a bright-faced girl and asked her to introduce me to some of her friends. I found I was cordially received, and soon the manager was brought up and introduced to me. There were from seventy-five to eighty girls seated at the tables drinking liquor, and for a time it was comparatively quiet. There were perhaps fifty men; and the most exciting music and coarse round dancing. As the hours went by at the time of my leaving the conduct was too terrible to describe. I have seen many terrible sights in the lowest dives of our city, while in my rescue work, but this surpasses what I could ever have believed would be permitted in a civilized country. It needs a good deal of nerve to spend three hours in this wild confusion of open shame and sin. I could not think of any sleep after such a night of horrors. I feel as though I had spent the night in an insane asylum. The echo of the weird calls and shrieks that filled that Satanic hall will never be forgotten.

"McGurk's is but one evil resort prominently before the public now; there are many others equally vile, where there is a constant repetition of the description given in Quo Vadis of the orgies of Rome. We believe it is a good thing to send money and missionaries to the degraded heathen across the seas, but we should constantly have a display of equal zeal in trying to reach the worse than heathenism at our own doors; and unless our good citizens, as well as our earnest Christians soon awaken to their responsibility for so horrible a condition of affairs, we shall have a hell in our own city, which like Sodom and Gomorrrah will deserve to be destroyed for its wickedness.

An Unprecedented Proposition!

WE have just had bound in Divinity Circuit, Overlapping Edges, Red under Gold, a Small Edition of the London Art Bible, 1,334 Pages, with 852 Beautiful Illustrations, which originally sold, by subscription only, at $12. Now, in order to increase our subscription list, we make to subscribers of The Christian Herald exclusively—and none but subscribers will be permitted to avail themselves—the following Unparalleled Offer:

SEND US ..... Two New Subscriptions at $1.50 each, and 50 cents additional to pay for boxing and expressage, and we will send you, all charges prepaid, a copy of the Genuine London Art Bible, beautifully bound and illustrated as described, and carefully wrapped and boxed to insure undamaged delivery.

You cannot avail yourself of this EXTRAORDINARY OFFER unless you comply with the following conditions:

You must send a letter stating that to your own personal knowledge the persons thus subscribing were not within a year subscribers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and that these new subscribers do not represent or take the place of an old or present subscriber, and that you yourself are now a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In addition you must give the date of your own subscription as printed on the yellow label bearing your address.

Never before have we made such an exceptional proposition as this. It is made with a view to largely increasing our subscription list, now about 200,000, and thus succeeding in our determination that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD shall be a regular visitor in a quarter of a million homes. We believe that in thus placing this beautiful Bible and in thus introducing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we are doing the best kind of home missionary work.

Remember, that to earn this magnificent Art Bible you have to send only two - positively New - subscribers at $1.50 each, and 50c. in cash additional, to pay for boxing and expressage. The book weighs nearly five pounds. It is beautifully bound, soft and flexible, and is a genuine work of art. Hundreds of fortunate possessors of this Bible enthusiastically testify to its exceeding helpfulness in securing a more correct understanding of the Word, and many of the original purchasers at $12 would not part with their copy at double the money.

As this Edition is limited, you will do well to act to-day and AT ONCE DROP US A POSTAL CARD asking that a copy be retained for you.

Subscribers sent in under this proposition CANNOT be counted on account of the book reward and cash prize competition published in our last issue.

Helen Gould as a Philanthropist

THE opportunity of such a career as that before Miss Helen Gould insures a beatitude. What she did for the soldiers in the field and the hospital, what she has lately done at the Windsor Hotel calamity, will make her name smell sweet and blossom from the dust. She will require no other monument. It is this use of money, that saves money from being a curse to the possessor, and a temptation to those who possess it not.

It was the Being who came as God's great gift to our race, who said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." It is a beatitude that grows with the exercise of giving. When Miss Gould had the poor unfortunates from the awful fire right opposite her queenly mansion, in her kitchen, when she was herself dealing out bread and coffee to the firemen on the day of the great hotel calamity, she entered again upon the precincts of this beatitude. She never can lose the memory of the blessedness of the experience. The family name will henceforth be known, not especially for wealth and luxury, for the manipulation of vast railroad interests, but for dealing bread to the hungry. The example, too, will be contagious. What has once been done by such a woman, will be repeated; and other thousands will yet have occasion to say, "Helen Gould. God bless her."

Hands Off

THE manner in which the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church completely ignored the wrong teachings of one of its ministers, passing the subject by as of no importance, is something admirable. The mistaken man evidently expected to be made a martyr, as had some others we wot of. But the complaint against him as a false teacher was not taken up, and there are not a hundred men who could easily recall his name. One reason for this dismissal of the annoying subject was that other denominations took no interest in the subject.

It will be better for the disciples of each religion to cultivate their own field. In other words, it will be best for us all to mind our own affairs. Every denomination is a family, and I think we have all observed that it is best for every family to manage its own affairs. It always makes a row when outsiders interfere. Unless you are called as an arbiter in domestic strife, you had better abstain from having anything to do with the trouble in a neighbor's household. What is true of domestic broils is true of ecclesiastical discussion. Keep your hands off contests in denominational households. "He that passeth by and meddleth with strife belonging not to him is like one that taketh a dog by the ears." It must, however, be evident to all denominations that it would make for peace if, when a man finds himself differing with a church, which he has sworn to uphold, he would step right out upon an independent platform, where he would be allowed the largest liberty of thought and utterance. If the time should ever come when I could not conscientiously subscribe to the doctrines or the government of the denomination to which I belong, I would hire some public hall and set up my standard of belief, announcing frankly that thereafter no one would be responsible for my sentiments or behavior. Some writer has said with a great deal of wit, as well as wisdom: "If the windows of a church are to be broken, let the stones be thrown from the outside instead of from the inside."

It is an unfair thing for a soldier to stay in a fortress and eat its rations and take its pay and yet be insubordinate to the commands of its officers. When Professor Swing, of Chicago, could no longer adhere to the doctrines of the Presbyterian Church, he did right to step out and preach every Sunday in Hooley's Theatre. When Dr. Thomas, of Chicago, could no longer subscribe to Methodism, he was wise in hiring a public hall where he could say what he would without embarrassment. This world is so wide there is plenty of room for all beliefs and all preferences. Two Illinois farmers on a prairie, each owning 2,000 acres of land, might as well work so near together that their hoe handles perpetually hit, or two ships in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean might as well fight for sea room, or two antagonistic men persist in standing close to each other when there is about 6,000 miles of open field on either side of them, or whole Atlantic and Pacific oceans of sailing room around them. Plenty of room for all of us. Let there be no controversy. That was good advice which Abraham gave to Lot when he said: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, between my herdsmen and thy herdsmen, for we be brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee from me. If thou wilt take the left hand then I will go to the right, or if thou depart to the right hand then I will go to the left."

Typhoid Epidemic in Philadelphia

IT ought to be enough to call the attention of the country to the Keystone State, that she can not elect a member to the United States Senate. But it seems there is something more alarming than this. An epidemic directly traceable to political conflict, if not corruption, has, since January, 1899, afflicted 3,232 citizens of Philadelphia, and occasioned 341 deaths. Last year there were 6,097 cases and 639 deaths. To-day there are many cases in the hospitals, with the prospect of additional mortality. The money—a loan of $3,200,000—is in litigation, though authorized by the city for an improvement of the water supply. A typhoid epidemic! What a comment upon municipal corruption! Has the great city of Brotherly Love descended so low? It used to be thought that plagues and pestilences were the direct scourge of God. How far this is from the hand of God man should not undertake to say. That it might have been prevented: that it has been promoted by an unwholesome if not poisonous water-supply, even a purblind politician ought to be able to discover. "By the blessing of the upright the city is exalted: but it is overthrown by the mouth of the wicked."

A Plea from General Howard

The Veteran Christian Philanthropist Writes Asking Our Readers to Aid in a Worthy Project

To the Readers of "The Christian Herald":

DEAR FRIENDS:—It has been a marvel to me to witness how much you have done [illegible] THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the line of active benevolence. After the dreadful massacres of the Armenians, in Turkey, when the remnant was left in distress—really in indescribable impoverishment [illegible] contributing in sums small and large upwards [illegible] people, who in vast numbers were left by [illegible] catholicity of spirit was exemplified in a contribution of nearly $50,000. The dreadful destitution of India, where wide sections of the country were covered with people crying for food, received nearly $200,000, and a valuable cargo of corn from the [illegible] source. The destitute and starving Cubans [illegible] realized from you at least $130,000 when their needs were greatest. In our own Western section [illegible] for a while there was no rain for more than two years, and famine set in. Your [illegible] then exceeded $30,[illegible] the Mississippi floods [illegible] tions, you not only [illegible] hamlets and villages, and through them to the plantations still inhabited, in the midst of the waters. You can also count in among your enduring charities The Bethesda Home, The Children's Home and the Bowery Mission.

Full of sympathy for our soldiers, when the cloud of sickness came to all the camps, you sent in your contributions so promptly and so freely that you rivalled the great generous givers of New York City. What you gave to the Army and Navy Christian Commission especially touched my heart, and I do not believe that any charity was ever better bestowed or more thoroughly distributed all through our Southern border, reaching into Cuba and Porto Rico, than yours.

Once more, dear friends, we come to you; this time for an immense Christian endeavor; not the setting up or equipping of hospital or relief ships, but of a group of schools which [illegible] nest in the heart of the mountains in a central place, and we anticipate great fruits to humanity and to the world. Already you have had this enterprise fully set forth in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with illustrations, and many of you have sent in small sums, since the first publication, which aggregate, up to the present time, $118.00.

By our teaching of the most practical kind at the famous Cumberland Gap, Tenn., we are giving boys a good start in life. They [illegible] their support and many have secured, thus far, a complete support by working on our 500 acres of good land. The girls have had like advantages in their own line of industries, and as soon as sufficient funds can be secured we shall go on to extend the whole sphere of practical education, especially fitting teachers for the mountain districts, and sending them back home well fitted to help their people to better things.

I very much desire that you will give us, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, your generous aid in this project. We need at least $1,000. I have already received word from Cuba that a native student desires to come to us from that country, and work his way to a good practical education, and we purpose immediately establishing a class for such Cubans and Porto Ricans as may desire to study with us. The cost would probably be about $50 a year for a single pupil. But my main plea at present is for securing our property, free of every obligation. This work is nearly done. So dear friends, coveting for every one of you the choicest of God's blessings, I ask you to send for us, to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, such amounts as your heart and your judgment may dictate. In the very best of bonds, very gratefully yours,

O. O. HOWARD,
Major-General U. S. Army (Retired),
Managing Director.

Our Correspondence

IF people understood the amount of correspondence that comes to our tables in New York and Washington, they would never blame us for not answering their letters. For instance, I received a letter from a stranger in Nebraska, saying he had bought a large tract of land, and wanted me to loan him $15,000. I told my wife to send him the $15,000 right away, but as she did not happen to have that money about her, the probability is it was not sent. I received a letter from a young man saying he would get married if I would send him money enough to pay for his wedding trip. A man in New England wants to become a lecturer, and won't I write him two or three lectures? Two letters from people who are desperate, and if I do not send them relief they will commit suicide. A man writes me for my autograph, enclosing a postage stamp: not getting an answer, he writes me to be honest enough to send back the postage stamp. Getting no answer to that he writes me: "You scoundrel! You stand there and preach the Gospel, and yet dare cheat a man out of a postage stamp." Letters through Washington post office and New York post office are handed in at my door, and left for me at my office, until my pockets are full, and my tables are full, and the closets are full, and one of my ideas of the loveliness of Heaven is that there will be no morning or evening mails. I have huge piles of letters of good advice, and the poorer the syntax and etymology, the more urgent the counsel. Letters discussing theological points, spelling the word God with a small "g." Multitudes of welcome letters of encouragement which are to me a perpetual and everlasting help. I shall forever thank God that I received them. But all reasonable people will realize that so great a number of letters makes reply, in many cases, an impossibility.

BRIEF NOTES

Baroness de Hirsch, the widow of the fa[illegible]

English daily newspapers have heretofore [illegible] Sunday editions are, however, now announced by two of them, The Daily Telegraph and the Mail.

Secessions from the Roman Catholic church continue in Austria. Dr. Zimmerman, a Protestant pastor in Vienna, reports a hundred converts to his church from Romanism, and a neighboring minister has received as many more, including a number of students.

A new translation of the Bible into Korean will shortly be issued. The work of translation is being done under the auspices of three Bible societies—the American, the British and Foreign, and the Scottish. An agent living in Seoul has practical charge of the publication.

The municipal authorities of Odessa, in southern Russia, have decided to found three Sunday Schools to commemorate the Czar's peace manifesto. This is a hopeful sign. Perhaps, after all, the hope of universal peace and disarmament is in the Sunday School, rather than in the councils of diplomats.

Homer M. Messenger, of the Fourteenth Infantry, now at Manila, in the Philippines, desires to thank the readers of this journal who have responded to his appeal by sending copies of the paper to the boys at the front. He adds that the papers do incalculable good, and hopes that the senders will not grow tired of their work.

The soldiers in Porto Rico will be saved from temptation by the opening of a first-class [illegible] Christian Association. Besides the ordinary restaurant, it is to have reading rooms, writing facilities, and rooms for quiet games. This will save the boys the need of going to native saloons for relaxation, and as no intoxicating liquor will be sold, it is hoped that it will be well patronized.

Several deserving institutions receive large legacies under the will of the late Mr. John Quincy Adams, of Wheaton, Ill. The public bequests, which amount to $158,000, include: $20,000 to the American Sunday School Union, $10,000 to the Chicago Theological Seminary, $10,000 to the Illinois Home Missionary Society, $10,000 to the American Bible Society, $10,000 to the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago, and $50,000 to Rockford College.

The question of substituting the Revised for the Authorized Version of the Bible was considered recently by the Bishops of the Church of England. It was decided to permit, but not to order, its use. The Bishops, some of whom are eminent scholars, spoke in its praise, recommending it as more accurate, more comprehensible, more rhythmical and superior in every way. It is winning its way in popular favor more rapidly than did the King James version.

An effort is being made to relieve the Manhattan East Side Mission, in New York, of its financial burden. It is located opposite Bellevue Hospital, and its work is done among the patients and the people who pass the mission coming and going to Blackwell's Island. For twenty years it has conducted charitable and evangelistic work with marked success. It has library, lodging-house and restaurant, and is fully equipped. It is, however, in urgent need of funds to continue its usefulness.

New Samoan Trouble

THE conflict in Samoa reported by Rear-Admiral Kautz, our naval representative at Apia, is deplorable from all points of view. It appears that when the Philadelphia, his flagship, arrived there, that the condition of the islands was little removed from anarchy. He called a meeting of the consuls and naval commanders of the United States, Germany and England, the three powers responsible for the good order of Samoa, to discuss the situation. It is obvious that at this meeting there was the same division of opinion which has existed ever since the late king's death. The Germans supported Mataafa, while the English and Americans upheld the decision of Chief Justice Chambers, who had awarded the crown to Malietoa Tanu. The majority of the votes at the conference would, therefore, be opposed to Mataafa, and a proclamation was issued by Rear-Admiral Kautz requiring him to withdraw his forces from Apia. He obeyed, but when a second proclamation was issued by the German Consul declaring that Kautz's proclamation was unauthorized, Mataafa returned, and, in attempting to reoccupy the city, killed an American marine and three British sailors who were guarding their respective consulates. Thereupon, the British and American warships opened fire upon Mataafa's men, and for eight days a desultory bombardment of the villages in which they were congregated, was kept up. Several of the villages to the east and west of Apia were set on fire by the shells. One of the shots, or a piece of defective shell, struck the German Consulate, doing some damage to the property. A new proposition, emanating from Germany, for the settlement of the trouble, has, it is believed, been practically accepted by the other two governments. This is, that a commission, consisting of a representative of each of the three powers, be organized and sent to Samoa, with full power to investigate the situation and the past troubles, and to formulate a plan for the settlement of the present difficulty and for the future government of the islands. Whether a commission so constituted would be more free from national prejudices than the present representatives of the powers, may be doubted. It would be well if each commissioner received among his instructions the apostolic warning which applies to nations as much as to individuals.

Where envying and strife are, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure then peaceable (James 3: 16).

A SCENE IN APIA, THE CAPITAL OF THE SAMOAN ISLANDS

A Mother Puzzled

A kindly benevolent lady in New York, inadvertently caused some anxiety to a Polish mother one day last week. In driving through Broome Street she saw a child crying bitterly. The little one was about five years old and an extremely pretty girl. The lady stopped her carriage and tried to ascertain what was troubling the child; but all she could learn from her between her sobs and cries was that she was lost. The lady took her to her house and comforted her. She washed the dirt off her tear-stained face and gave her a bath which the child sorely needed. She looked so bright and pretty after the experience that the lady dressed her in good clothes and sent out and bought a new hat and shoes for her. The child was delighted, but still fretted for her mother. Finally, realizing that the mother was probably worrying about her child, the lady drove with her to the nearest police station. The sergeant said a woman had been there inquiring for a child of about that age, and would doubtless be there again soon. He advised that the child be left with him, which was done. The little one played around the room for some time, and at last, tired out, fell asleep on a bench. Presently the woman came in again and was shown the child. One glance was sufficient. That was not her child, she said. The sergeant urged her to look again. She looked more closely at the sleeping child's face, and then clasped her to her breast. The unwonted cleanliness and the new clothes had so transformed her, that even then she looked at her doubtfully, until the child opened her eyes and recognized her. She did not know till then how pretty a child she had. Perhaps the revelation may cause her to pay more attention to her in future. If she takes a real interest in the child's welfare she will learn that something more than such a transformation is needed. That change may be worked through the love of Christ.

And such were some of you: but ye are washed; but ye are sanctified (1 Cor. 6: 11).

A Bejeweled Mouth.

Among the prisoners arraigned before the police-justice in a court in New York one day last week, was a woman whose appearance attracted general attention. She had been arrested the preceding night for disorderly conduct and when placed on trial was voluble in her defence. The peculiar feature which was conspicuous every time she opened her lips, was a diamond set in one of her front teeth, which glistened with a novel effect from its strange setting. The diamond, however, did not help her case, though she took care that the judge should not miss a sight of it. She was found guilty and was fined, with the alternative of imprisonment. It is a pity that she did not realize that something different from a jewel in her mouth was necessary to make her attractive. Long ago the wise king uttered the warning that no outward adornment, or personal beauty could make a woman really what she ought to be, but rather served as in this case, to emphasize the contrast between degradation and respectability.

As a jewel of gold in a swine's snout so is a fair woman who is without discretion (Prov. 11. 22).

The Steamboat Disaster

Scenes of heroism and noble self-sacrifice were witnessed on board the steamer Stella which sank in the English channel on March 31st. It was a fine double-screw excursion boat which left Southampton about noon with about two hundred persons on board, most of whom were going to Jersey and Guernsey to spend the Easter holidays. When about half way to their destination a dense fog set in, which the Captain thought was of no great extent. He kept up the speed in the hope of quickly passing through it, but must have miscalculated his course for in about an hour the steamer crashed on a well-known group of low-lying rocks called the Casquets. They stove great holes in the steamer's bottom and sides through which the water poured in torrents. In about twenty minutes it reached the boilers which exploded with a noise like thunder and the steamer reared on end and went down stern foremost. Directly the steamer struck, Captain Reeks realized the hopelessness of the disaster, and ordered the life-boats lowered. Four of these were filled with women and children and cast adrift. Life-belts were handed out to the men and they jumped into the sea; but it is feared that most of them went down in the suction caused by the sinking of the steamer. The Captain and first mate stayed on the bridge till the last and went down with the steamer. The boats drifted for fifteen hours before being rescued and some of the persons in them were then dead of shock and exposure. It is feared that fully seventy persons, and probably more, lost their lives in the disaster. The scenes of parting when the boats were filled were most pathetic. Some of the women begged to stay and die with their husbands. One woman clung convulsively to her husband's neck and refused to go in the boat but was ultimately persuaded by her husband to go for the sake of their children, who, if she remained, would be deprived of both parents. The first mate's wife besought him to accompany her, but he said his duty was to go down with the steamer. One man who was jumping into the sea, saw a woman without a life-belt and he took off the one he was wearing and gave it to her. Such conduct in so terrible a crisis arouses our admiration, yet how few remember how our own salvation, from a worse fate than drowning, has been won by the highest example of that spirit!

I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep (John 10: 11).

Made Birds Her Messengers

A sergeant of the Forty-Seventh New York Regiment, while stationed in Porto Rico, discovered a singular evidence of superstition. While seeking specimens of the birds of the island for a friend in Cincinnati, who is an amateur ornithologist, he caught a bird resembling an oriole. Attached to one of its legs was a small card requesting prayer for the soul of Julie Valdez. He was curious about the identity of the person who took this strange method of asking for prayers. After some inquiries in the city of San Juan, he learned that Julie Valdez was a widow who died some months ago. She had lived on an annuity provided for her by her deceased husband, and had been known for her eccentricities. On receiving her income near the close of last year, she went to a dealer in birds and purchased several birds and took them to her home. Then she had a grave dug near her home, and a coffin lined with silk and fine wool lowered into it. Having made this preparation for her decease, she tied the cards to the legs of the birds and liberated them. Then she calmly laid herself in the coffin, and was found in it dead. It was not thought that she had committed suicide, but had felt a premonition of approaching death, which proved to be true. The poor creature was evidently demented. But there are many who are accounted sane who are similarly hoping that the safety of their souls which might be secured in their lives through Christ, may be gained after death by the prayers of others or by God's infinite mercy.

There remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a fearful looking for of judgment (Heb. 10: 26).

Life Savers at Niagara

Every year tragedies at the great Falls are of frequent occurrence, and various measures have been suggested to prevent them, all more or less difficult of execution. One of these was to have a great wire strainer from shore to shore. Another was to have men stationed with lassoes on the banks to lasso anyone who fell in. During the past winter, however, a plan has been adopted which is practicable. This is to organize among the people living beside the great cataract a life saving "crew" with over sixty members, who are to be trained and equipped for the work of rescuing from the rushing waters as many as possible of their accidental and voluntary victims. Boats, of course, will not be of utility, but the buoys, life-lines, and most of the other implements found in ordinary coast and lake life-saving stations are to be provided. As soon as this is done men from the Government station at Fort Niagara will go to the Falls and give the members of the new association a course of lessons in the effective use of the available devices. Experiments will be made in lowering men to the water at various points above and below the Falls and from the bridges, and others will venture into the Whirlpool Rapids at the end of life lines held by skilful hands. It is hoped that before the height of the season the crew will have gained considerable dexterity in the work. It appears that the number of suicides almost equals the number of accidental deaths. The life-savers will try to rescue the one as well as the other. The great army of soul-savers also have to do with both classes. It is not always possible to rescue a man bent on evil, but the effort must always be made.

Say unto them, As I live saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live (Ezek. 33: 11).

INSTITUTION FOR INSTRUCTION OF DEAF MUTES

HELEN KELLER, THE WONDERFUL DEAF-MUTE

A CLASS IN DRAWING

HOW can a dumb child be taught to speak? And how can a deaf child be made to comprehend spoken language? The latter is being accomplished most successfully: the former with a marked degree of success at the Institution for the Improved Instruction of Deaf-Mutes, on Lexington Avenue, between Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth streets, New York: a school which has pupils from every State in the Union. In comprehension of spoken language, these deaf-mutes may be said to have the advantage of people with good ears. Whisper in their presence, if you please, and imagine that they do not understand! If they see your lips, they know every word you have uttered. Some one asks a question in a tone you do not easily catch, and while you are saying: "Beg pardon, but what did you say?" the deaf mutes are making prompt response. Prof. Mitchell, Principal of the Institution, explained the theory to the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and then showed its operation in various class-rooms in the establishment. "In oral instruction," he said, "we do not use or permit the use of the finger alphabet. We pay particular attention to the articulation, and subsequently to the teaching of vocal English. You can see what advantages the orally-instructed child has over the one limited to sign language, when you reflect that he can understand and make himself understood by a stranger. Granted that the deaf mute taught by other methods may acquire general information more quickly than by this, his means of imparting it being limited to sign language and writing, are more circumscribed. We find among parents the almost universal desire that children be taught to speak, so that they, as well as the promoters of this method of instruction, are willing to sacrifice somewhat in the way of general information in order to advance the child in the one particular which shall make it more nearly natural.

"We press into service every other faculty and every instinct to supplement the missing sense. We make use of sight, imitation, natural language of gesture, and the sense of touch. Simple words, as 'papa' and 'mamma,' are very easily caught, also many words that interest childish fancy. A cat comes into the room. I point and say 'cat;' the motion of the lips which produces 't' is what the child at once catches and imitates. I put his hand on my chest, and again on certain muscles of my throat, and repeat the word: he feels the movement of chest and throat muscles, imitates both, reproduces 'at,' and finally the whole word 'cat.' In other words, 'going,' for instance, muscles of the nose are brought into play, and these the little scholar through sense of touch perceives and imitates. We teach them thus to utter letters, words and sentences. Voice and pitch of voice are produced and regulated thus through sense of feeling. In exercises which we call 'tongue gymnastics,' we train children to certain movements of the tongue essential in the production of sound. We try in every way possible to create the habit of speech. The tendency is to relapse into sign language unless we exercise much vigilance over them and over ourselves. I, myself, do not understand the deaf mute alphabet; I do not dare to. I should find myself speaking to or answering pupils in it. To encourage pupils in using spoken language in their intercourse among themselves, we award medals to those most proficient and conscientious.

IN THE BLACKSMITH SHOP

A CLASS IN CLAY MODELING

IN THE MANUAL TRAINING DEPARTMENT—THE CARPENTER'S SHOP

"Lip-reading they are very fond of, and they very soon acquire facility in it. This is carried on by teaching them first the elements of sounds in the alphabet until they are able to take from the lips any combination of sounds without reference to meaning. Presently they will write these on the slate. As, for instance, a doll will be shown, spoken and written until the children connect the uttered and written word and the object."

In the kindergarten, all this was forcibly illustrated. A number of bright little tots with alert eyes sat around their teacher, Mrs. Gruver, who conducted the lesson in an ordinary voice. The little creatures "saw" (one cannot say they "heard") every word as quickly as uttered, although unaccompanied by any gesture. "I employ gestures at first," said Mrs. Gruver, "as, for instance, I would beckon when saying 'Come here' to a beginner, but I have had most of the children in this class since September." A short time in which to convey so much to these little ones, who understand and speak words, yet who never heard the faintest sound! How attentive, how bright-eyed they were, and how proud of their ability to comprehend what was said to them! One wee lassie—she was not over five—had pretty eyes that fairly danced with delight as she "ran," "hopped," "skipped," "jumped," and brought out all the kindergarten toys for exhibition at her teacher's soft-voiced command. A little fellow—the "baby of the class"—knew all the animals in a Zoo picture by name. Some one tried to confuse him by asking where the fox was; but there was no fox in the picture, and the little man was positive and undaunted in his assertions to that affect. As a matter of curious interest, it may be noted that these children write better than young people of similar ages with good hearing. The "baby's" fluent o's and r's and unfailing punctuation was a matter of wonder. Through an interesting divided-slate system, originated by Miss Barry of Philadelphia, they differentiate quickly and easily between parts of speech and right relations of words. The slate is divided into five parts; the subject is written in the first part, the verb in the second, subject in the third, preposition in the fourth, and so on. Thus, in the sentence, "The boy put the pencil in the basket," the thing itself is done under the teacher's guidance; the boy is led to the blackboard and stationed in front of the space where the subject should be written; his act is indicated and the verb is filled in; the pencil, as object, is placed in the third compartment; as it is dropped into the basket, the preposition is written. The little class was well up on their grammar. What infinite and loving care, pains and patience must have been employed to bring about such results! In the intermediate department, under Miss M. E. Potwin, and the advanced department, under the supervision of Mr. Mitchell, the same system and methods are applied to higher studies. Much attention is paid to manual training throughout the whole course, which comprises kindergarten exercises, mechanical and free-hand drawing, needle work, dressmaking, cooking, wood work, metal work, use of machine tools, art work, oil painting and clay modeling; instruction in every department is oral. There are carpenter, shoe and smithy shops where the boys work away; play-rooms and playgrounds for the children; a gymnasium and a teacher of physical culture. Religious instruction is not neglected; chapel exercises are held every Sunday afternoon. The institution numbers about seventeen instructors and 200 inmates. There are very few pay pupils. The State contributes to its support. Its objects, as stated in articles of incorporation, are: "To introduce the articulate methods as practiced in Germany, by the establishment of an institution based upon the eclectic system. And to provide for the care and the education of deaf mutes." New York has other institutions for the instruction of deaf mutes. There is St. Joseph's at Fordham, and there is the New York institution for the deaf and dumb on Washington Heights. An illustrated description was given of the latter place in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is a most flourishing institution, with sixteen instructors and three hundred pupils; and an eclectic system of instruction. It was opened about eighty years ago, and owes its existence to the Hartford Institution, the leader of American schools for the deaf and dumb. Any article upon work for the deaf and dumb is incomplete without reference to Rev. Dr. Thomas H. Gallaudet, founder of the Hartford College, which, we believe, has the distinction of being the first school in the world providing a full collegiate course for the deaf and dumb. Dr. Gallaudet's sons, Rev. Drs. Miner and Thos. Gallaudet, have continued their father's labors. The latter established the Home for Deaf Mutes near Poughkeepsie, and has accomplished in New York City and at Hartford excellent results along missionary and educational lines. Rev. Dr. E. M. Gallaudet divides with Amos Kendall the honor of establishing the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, Washington, D. C., from which, through Dr. Gallaudet's agency, sprang the National Deaf Mute College on Kendal Green. The work performed by this institution has given it a very high grade, and its graduates have distinguished themselves in numerous professions. The studies in the collegiate department embrace Latin, French, German, the higher mathematics, the natural sciences, philology, history, etc. America stands abreast if not ahead of the world in care for the deaf and dumb. Liberal provision is made for their care and instruction by most of the State Governments. So highly was our system rated by Europe that Dr. E. M. Gallaudet was requested by the British Government to visit England and give information concerning it to the Royal Commission.

His father it was who conceived the idea of holding religious services in the deaf-mute sign language, and in Hartford it may thus be claimed that the Gospel was first taught clearly and intelligently to these afflicted ones. The religious services of the institution which is the subject of this article, are conducted in vocal language. The advancements which have been made in the last two centuries for the improved instruction for deaf-mutes is startling when compared with that of all preceding ages. No school was established for them until the eighteenth century. Lucullus wrote:

To instruct the deaf no art could ever reach
No care improve them and no wisdom teach.

St. Augustine's verdict was the same. St. Augustine and Lucullus would be astonished to discover that in this nineteenth century, deaf-mutes are among our most highly educated and useful citizens; that from their ranks the world receives brilliant scholars, and pulpits are supplied with able ministers. The American nation is proud of Helen Keller and Laura Bridgeman, to both of whom, as well as to many other charming and useful people, is due the mastery of not only deafness and dumbness, but blindness. The New York papers, in their society columns, mentions a young lady, socially very delightful, who understands and makes herself understood by articulation. It may be interesting that a military company of deaf-mutes have asked the Government to remove their disabilities, and permit them to enter active army service, claiming that they can be more effective in the field than men who can hear the thunder of cannon and hiss of shrapnel. By their perseverance in overcoming natural limitations our deaf and dumb friends have already fought the good fight of high endeavor.

It must be admitted that the art of speaking is not acquired quickly, nor ever perfectly; that the voice of the deaf is never of musical modulation. Still, it is better than silence that can not be broken. The father and mother who have never heard the words "Papa" and "Mamma" from the lips of a beloved child feel that the result, when attained, is a precious one. The art of teaching the dumb to speak and the deaf to hear (through lip-reading), is in comparative infancy and further advances are hoped for.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

His Sister's Keeper

Mamma's Opportunity—Little Missionaries in the Home and Schoolroom

"DID you take good care of sister, to-day?" mamma asked Fred, when she had the small man to herself at his bedtime hour. Fred was so little that it seemed absurd to question him about "taking care" of anybody. He reflected, looking wise and cute, and, after due deliberation, nodded and got a kiss.

"What did you do for sister?" mamma asked, interested.

"I carwi'd 'er lunch," he responded. "an' I got 'er a banana wif my penny. An' 'er figgers wouldn't come wite, an' she kied, an'—an' I des looked at 'er." Mamma bestowed a kiss for each grand accomplishment. "Cose I 'scorted 'er 'bout." There had been times when "'scortin' 'er" back and forth from school was not a matter of course if ruder playmates tempted him to leave her to a lonely walk; under such stress he had even played truant from school. Mamma had not been severe. She simply set her wits to work to make the little fellow see and live up to his privileges of being sister's companion—her loyal knight. "It would break my heart," she thought, "if, when he grows up, he should behave like a selfish cad to her, as I have seen some men behave to sisters." Mamma enlisted Rosie's interest in living up to the important position of "lovely lady" of her brother's devotion. Rose would be asked—in interested, not inquisitorial, way: "Were you very nice and agreeable to Fred to-day?" Rosie came to take great pride in saying: "He'd rather be with me than anybody else, mamma." "Of course, we don't want him to be girlish," mamma would remark, "nor seem tied to our apron-strings. Have him walk with the boys sometimes while you come home with a girl friend." This clever scheme of mamma's worked both ways, for Rose was older than Fred, and in his first school days it had been a temptation to leave him to his own devices while amusing herself with chums of her own age.

One night Fred said: "W'en sister was at te b'ackbo'd, Polly Smif tooked te lunch out of 'er desk. An' I tole teacher, an' didn' Polly catch it!" Here was opportunity. Mamma said: "Maybe Polly hasn't a nice brother to love her. That makes a girl better, you know. Maybe, too, she hasn't a mamma to fix her a nice lunch. Be patient with her, you and Rosie." A few days later, when Polly had gotten over being vexed, Rose and Fred carried a dainty lunch to her. By degrees, mamma brought him to feel that he could help all little girls to be "lovely ladies" like Rosie by being true and kind. "Jesus," said mamma, "was everybody's brother." Through Rosie's love for Fred, she taught her the responsibility of sisterhood to less fortunate little boys. So it came about that mamma had two missionaries in that school—two who grew up feeling that they must answer before God the question: "Am I my brother's keeper?" The poorest mother in the humblest home can accomplish like results. Dealing out slices of bread to the little man and woman starting forth to school, she can give counsel and prayer with it, and make her little folks powers for good in helping the world to be better because they live in it.

The "School City"

The Gill School City is attracting attention among educators, and interesting little folks. The first "School City" was organized, 1897, in Norfolk street Vacation School, New York, by the well-known reformer, Wilson L. Gill, founder of the Patriotic League. Since then it has been introduced in various public and private schools, East and West. The plan places self-government in the hands of the children. The school is organized and incorporated, charter drawn up, municipal board of mayor and aldermen elected: police, health, fire, and other boards of city government appointed, the children holding all offices and casting all votes. The "City" government is modeled on that of the town in which the adopting school exists. "You can't be alderman in our ward if you don't stop throwing rocks," says one small boy to another, and the threat is effective. The object is to teach children the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. Teachers are helped by the children who maintain discipline. Colonel Waring found the children his "ablest seconds" when he interested them in street-cleaning.

Ladies of Havana

Havana ladies are fond of wearing old lace mantillas, and parties of them are frequently seen on Obispo street shopping without hats or bonnets. Fans are important trifles in such a climate, and they have very pretty ones. Obispo, the chief street for retail shopping, is not more than eighteen feet wide at any point; and sidewalks are so narrow that people walk them single file. When two persons meet, the one with the nicest manners steps off into the street and gives the other the sidewalk. How about side walks in other towns, where three or four people walking abreast, let those who meet them step off into the mud?

Kaiulani's Hospitality

Kaiulani, the young Hawaiian princess, who died very recently, was most kind to the soldiers of our Philippine expedition, entertaining them with a generous hand at the residence of her father, Governor Cleghorn. Until 1893, she thought she would occupy the Hawaiian throne as the successor of her aunt, Liliuokalani, but when she saw that that could never be, she accepted the situation gracefully. She was very accomplished and amiable and greatly beloved. One of her warmest American friends was Mrs. Cleveland.

The Blind Hymn-writer's Birthday

Fanny J. Crosby, the well-known Gospel hymn-writer, whose spiritual poems have delighted thousands of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, reached her seventy-ninth birthday on March 24th. A few friends met her on that day at the office of The Biglow & Main Co., where a collation was served and poems for the occasion were read. The following verses were her contribution to the occasion:

NO FRIENDS LIKE MINE

How can I thank you, precious friends,
For all your care for me;
'Tis your [illegible] my natal day
As bright as bright can be.
And while I hear your loving words,
And clasp your hands in mine,
I feel, as I have ne'er before,
There are no friends like mine.

I could not thank you if I tried;
I have no power to speak;
For there are times when language fails,
And words are all too weak.
This is my prayer: God keep you all
Beneath his smile divine.
And while I live, I'll ne'er forget
There are no friends like mine.

"THE BOUNTIFUL MOTHER"

Our illustration—the reproduction of a famous painting—gives the picture of one who was truly her brothers' and sisters' helper. Beautiful Lotte Buff, later Frau Kestner, was greatly admired and revered by Goethe, the famous German author, because of her motherliness to her little brothers and sisters. Through her true character of daughter, sister, mother and wife, she influenced Goethe for good—which is more than can be said of all his friends. Herself and husband were faithful friends to the poet.

Our Babe with the Golden Hair

Still [illegible]
The sweet blue eyes were curtained
Amid the blossoms fair,
Our babe with the golden hair,
As proud as a little angel
Astray from the better land
As sweet as the dewy rosebud
That lay in her dimpled hand.

We thought the Father gave her
To cheer our earthly way:
It seems, he only lent her,
And she is his to-day.
Will grace a brighter clime,
Beyond the chill of winter—
There, in immortal gardens,
'Mid flowers divinely fair,
Our babe with the golden hair.

A Model "Auntie"

MISS JANE WHYTE BALFOUR, Robert Louis Stevenson's best-beloved aunt, and subject of some of his best verses, lives in a house in Edinburgh, Scotland. She is over eighty, but full of energetic kindness in the oversight of her young nephews and nieces. "Little Lou," as she still speaks of the great writer, was one of her heart's darlings. Her room is littered with mementoes of him. His toy horse, his high chair, his bits of childish manuscript are treasured by her. She saved up his early writings, and triumphantly shows them as evidence that she always recognized her "laddie's" genius. Every mail that came over from Samoa used to bring "Auntie" a letter from him. Stevenson wrote of her, in an old blank book in which he had begun an autobiography:

In her youth she was a wit and a beauty, [illegible]
But as she grew up she began to suffice for all the family as well. An accident on horseback made her nearly deaf and blind, and [illegible] and the children of the family came to her to be nursed, to be educated, to be mothered, from the infanticidal climate of India. There [illegible] children about the manse; and all were born [illegible] It was strange when a new party of these sallow young folks came home, perhaps with an Indian ayah. This little country manse was the centre of the world; and Aunt Jane represented charity.

In one of his poems, he says:

"Chief of our aunts not only I,
But all your other nurslings cry,
What did the other children do,
And what were childhood, wanting you?"

The famous author's life is not the only one enriched by the tender care of an "old maid" and his tribute to Miss Balfour is a tribute to everybody's "model aunt."

The Slum Child's Bugaboo

"The goblin or bugaboo of the more fortunate child," says Jane Addams, of the Hull House Settlement, Chicago, "has come to be the need of coal. A little Italian lad came to a party at Hull House and was interested in nothing save a gas stove in the kitchen. He became excited over the discovery that fire could be produced without coal. "I will tell my father of this stove," he exclaimed. "You buy no coal; you need only a match. Anybody will give you a match!" Taken to a country residence, he inquired first thing of his hostess how much rent she paid, and on being informed that she paid none (she owned her house), was quite wild over the solution of a troublesome problem. "Me and my father will go to the country," he declared. "You get a big house, all warm, without rent." The astonishment of guests at our Children's Home in seeing flowers and fruits grow for the plucking, and in being provided with food and clothes for love's sake has been one of the most touching features of this blessed fresh air work.

The Study of the Bible—Faint Heart Never Won Fair Lady—Children's Home Study—A Correction

IT is an open question whether or not there is as much Bible reading and study in these days as there used to be in former times, when people were less pressed by the hurry and business of life. Certainly the good old habit of family prayer has gone out from many a Christian home. The imperative whistle of the train in the morning calls the business man from his breakfast in a rush so that he may catch his train, and at night the father is tired out; the young people scatter to their various evening engagements; friends come in to call, and so it comes to pass that there is no family altar any longer in the home. Quite recently I was a guest in a household in which this beautiful custom of family worship is observed with as much scrupulous care as ever. Before breakfast, all the family gathered in the dining room, and the father read a portion of Scripture and a hymn, then led in prayer, closing with "Our Father, who art in heaven," in which all joined. The day seemed consecrated as by a breath of heaven, and we went to the breakfast room with a cheer in our hearts impossible to those who have no family prayer. The beautiful Christian custom is one which more than all else cements the family bond. Sons and daughters in distant lands remember how they assembled to worship God at morning and evening by the old fire-side, and the tender memory of this rite keeps them pure and true to the principles in which they were brought up.

Closet prayer is another matter. Every Christian should make a point of reading a portion of Scripture alone at least once a day, and it would be better if both morning and evening there were a lingering for a little while over the word of God. A friend writing on this subject has some very important truths to enforce. Her letter is so beautiful and sensible that I venture to quote it in full:

"IT goes without saying that Christians will read the Bible, but mere reading, I care not what kind of reading it may be, will not answer. It will not put one in possession of the real contents. Study, systematic study, is what we are to consider. The Bible, further, is not simply the New Testament, but the Old Testament as well. Go anywhere, read anything, talk with anyone, and the Bible as some portion of it, some discussion of it meets one face to face. Not to know it betrays ignorance of what constitutes one of the greatest elements in modern civilization. In spite of the great and glorious work of the International Sabbath School system, the ignorance which prevails with respect to the well-known book is something stupendous, and the ignorance is an ignorance of the very facts that lie upon the surface. We should study the Bible because of what it is as a history; there is no history like that of the chosen nation, the most wonderful and unique nation that has ever existed upon the face of the earth. We should study the Bible because it shows the gradual development through centuries of a divine plan for man's redemption; our own individual development along the same plan, more rapid but after all gradual. All history previous to Christ's birth was preparatory to his coming as the pivotal event. We search the ancient world for a law that shall equal the Mosaic system, but in vain, because these laws were prescribed by Jehovah and rest upon eternal principles. Study the Bible if you would know how to act as a citizen; how to govern as a ruler. Finally, we should study the Bible because it alone furnishes a true conception of God. If you desire to make this life worth living; if you desire to attain that position in the Kingdom of God which is open to you, reach God through the Word, by which he has shown himself; by which he gives you entrance to his presence."

ONE of our friends is very much disturbed because he loves a woman, and is not certain that she loves him in return. Let me remind him of the old proverb, "Faint heart never won fair lady." How in the world is he to solve his problem unless he takes his courage in both hands and asks the lady whether or not she can reciprocate his affections. A woman in such circumstances is somewhat peculiarly placed, custom and delicacy forbidding her to take the initiative. She cannot herself walk up to a man and say, "Sir, will you marry me?" and although, indeed, in many subtle ways known to women, she may very properly disclose her preference, it is still her privilege to be the wooed and not the wooer, and therefore my advice to all diffident lovers is without delay to make known their wish to the objects of their affections. A woman has, of course, the privilege of saying no, but all good and sincere women are quite above the meanness of flirting with a man who has shown that he admires them. A flirt of either sex is a contemptible being. Usually a girl knows by many signs and tokens whether or not her lover is in earnest. If she intends finally to reject him, she can in some tactful way which will not wound him, so behave that he will not have to suffer the mortification of a refusal. The poet says that, "In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love." When the blossoms wave upon the bough, and the birds are singing in the tree-tops, and the brooks are dancing for joy that summer has come, all nature combines to suggest to men that they, too, should find congenial hearts to love and protect. After love and the happy period of the betrothal comes marriage and the building of the new home. One of the sweetest things in life is the building of the nest, whether it be that of bird or human being. It does not need gold or jewels, fine dresses or any of the show and display of life to make a true woman happy. If she love a man she will be willing to share with him the day of small things and to work that she may help him build up his own fortunes. One important qualification for happy marriage is that both parties shall be servants of the Lord, for how can two walk together unless they be agreed.

TALKING about homes, one of the familiar evening scenes which always pleases me best is the sight of little heads bent over maps and slates while the children are doing their home work for school the next day. A father said to me the other day that he found it impossible to help his children very much about their examples in arithmetic and their school work generally because since his day formulas had very much changed, and so had methods of working, so that when he helped Johnnie and Jamie with their examples, the teacher was quite apt to say that they were not right. One thing is evident, and that is that the principles of mathematics and grammar do not change, though the system of instruction may. It does not hurt a father and mother to go to school again with their young people, and those children succeed best in school whose parents at home take a true interest in the home work. It is not right, however, that growing boys and girls should be obliged to devote too much of their home time to study. One hour of earnest study in the evening will not hurt any child over twelve. More than this should not be permitted. Children under twelve should have their studies so arranged that they may do all their work in school. It does no good to a child's brain to force any of the processes of development. Better far let the children develop naturally, gaining in strength and health of body as well as in improvement of the mind. Parents are sometimes much too ambitious, pleasing rather their own vanity than consulting the best good of children. It may be very agreeable to us to have our children carry off the prizes, but the prizes of life are not always given to those who are most proficient in the school curriculum. I read the other day that Rudyard Kipling was by no means a show pupil, and we all have heard of the backwardness of Gen. Grant.

SEVERAL weeks ago reference was made here to the gifted wife of a clergyman who took his place in the pulpit when he was ill. I desire, having been furnished with fuller information than I had when I wrote the paragraph, to say that the lady did not offer her services, but yielded to the entreaties of the church committee, and that, far from pronouncing the benediction, she simply—as any Christian might do—closed the service with prayer. This correction is most cheerfully made.

PERPLEXED HOUSEKEEPER. The waitress should pass her dishes to the left, so that the family and guests may help themselves with the right hand. It is usual at many tables to pass everything, have the carving done in the kitchen or the butler's pantry, but I myself like better the old-fashioned custom of placing the roast on the table, and having it carved by the man of the house. The table looks prettier if not crowded with dishes, so that many ladies have their vegetables served from a side table, by the waitress who passes them. If there are no guests she begins with the lady of the house. If guests are present, she first helps the lady guest of honor, who sits at the right of the host. Ladies are of course helped before gentlemen.

Crumbs are brushed from the table before the dessert is brought on. The maid removes the dinner plates and everything else on the table, except flowers and bonbons before she brushes the cloth. She may do this with a silver crumbscraper and tray, a crumb-brush and tray, or simply with a napkin and tray.

Coffee, served after dinner, is very strong and black, and should be served in small cups. Cream is not served with after-dinner coffee.

ANABEL D. Others beside yourself are asking why first cousins should not marry. For the reason that the marriage of blood relations seldom results favorably for the children born of such a union. These are often deficient in vitality, lacking in intellect, and are in some way handicapped badly from birth, in the race of life. Please do not think of marrying your cousin.

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

[illegible] away and Evadne still wore her cousin's ring. A great tenderness was growing up in her heart toward him. She yearned over him as only those can understand, who know what it is to carry the burden of souls upon their hearts by night and day, but no thought of love ever crossed her mind. To Evadne Hildreth, love was a wonderfully sacred thing. The ring fretted her and she longed to be freed from its presence, but Louis held her to her promise. If he only waited long enough, he persuaded himself, his patience would be rewarded. Some day this shy, sweet bird would nestle against his heart. In the meantime, he would keep the ungenerous advantage which his illness had given him. He forgot that it needs more to tame a bird than merely putting it in a cage. Isabelle had been intensely curious about the reason of the ring being on Evadne's finger, but her questions had elicited no satisfaction from her brother, and Evadne had answered simply:

"Louis took a fancy to put it on my finger. I am wearing it to please him, that is all," and even Isabelle found her cousin's sweet dignity an effectual bar against a morbid inquisitiveness.

They had seen comparatively little of each other. Evadne was constantly busy, either at private or hospital nursing, and very short were the furloughs which she spent under her uncle's roof.

Louis had spent the first winter after his illness with his mother in the South of France, now he was in Florida, but he wrote regularly, and Evadne answered, when she could. Her's were sweet, pleading letters which he read over and over and honestly tried to be better. But it was only for her sake; he knew no higher motive yet.

It was a perfect day. Down by the river an alligator was sunning himself, and the resinous breath of the pine trees swept its aromatic fragrance over Louis as he lay at full length in a hammock with his hands behind his head. He had thrown the magazine he had been reading on the ground and it lay open at the article on Heredity which he had just finished. His desultory thoughts were roaming idly over the subject, when one, more far reaching than the rest, made him start up with a sudden shock of unwelcome surprise.

"Can it be," he asked himself "that I am a victim of it too? It looks confoundedly like it, though even my sweet little Puritan has not felt it a sin against her conscience to keep me in the dark."

He thrust his fingers with an impatient gesture through his hair. "Now I come to think of it, the case grows decidedly clear. The South of France one winter and Florida this. Simple nervous prostration would seem to the uninitiated better fought in the exhilarating ozone of Colorado or—the North Pole—than in this languorous atmosphere. 'An inherited tendency.' Is this the pleasant little legacy which my respected ancestor has bequeathed to his only grandson? It skipped the Judge, but it caught poor Uncle Lenox, and now it has nabbed me! What a fool I have been not to surmise what this confounded pain meant between my shoulders! Grandfather Hildreth kept himself alive with nostrums until he was seventy, but he was an invalid all his life. He ought to be punished for his contemptible selfishness in bringing so much suffering upon the race! There's none of the taint about Evadne, bless her! Russe told me the hospital examiners said they had never passed such a perfect specimen of health."

He stopped suddenly, and bit his lips in pain. Would he not follow his grandfather's example,—if he had the chance? He would stay no longer in this southern land. He would go north, if for nothing else but to know the real truth, which he instinctively felt was being kept from him. He put his resolution in effect, and at once. As he entered his father's house he asked:

"What in the world is the meaning of all this"

He had arrived by an earlier train than he was expected, and only his mother was at home to greet him. The hall was in confusion, workmen's tools lay about, and ladders stood against the walls. Mrs. Hildreth laughed lightly, as she laid her hand within her son's arm.

"Oh, they are only getting ready for the floral decorations," she said, "we give a reception to-morrow in honor of your return. How well you are looking, Louis. I am so delighted to have you at home!"

"Thanks, lady mother. I do not need to ask how you have survived my absence. How is Evadne—and the Judge and the girls?"

His mother laughed again as she drew him on the sofa beside her. She seemed in wonderful good humor.

"Rather a comprehensive question," she said. "Sit down, and we will have a comfortable talk before the others get home. Your father looks wretchedly, but he says there is nothing the matter. I suppose it is just overwork and the usual money strain. Isabelle, too, is not as well as I should like her to be—suffers from nervousness a great deal, and depression. There is a new physician here now, a Doctor Randolph, who, we think, is going to help her, though he is very young, but she took a dislike to Doctor Russe because he belongs to the old school. And now I have a surprise for you—Marion is engaged!"

"Engaged! Why you never hinted at it in your letters!"

"It has all been very sudden. I wrote you there was a young New Yorker very attentive to her."

"Yes, but that is an old story. There were two fellows very attentive when I went away. How long since the present devotion culminated?"

"Just a week ago to-night, and they are so devoted!"

"A second Romeo and Juliet, eh?" Louis' laugh had a bitter ring. "By the way, what is his name?"

"Simpson Kennard."

"Brother Simp! Rich, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes, very. In fact he is eligible in every way."

"I see," yawned Louis. "Possessed of all the cardinal virtues. It is a good thing if his wealth is not all in his pockets, for they are apt to spring a leak. But Evadne—how is she?"

"Oh, she is always well, you know," said his mother carelessly.

Louis insisted on a message being sent to Evadne at the hospital announcing his arrival, and that evening she joined the re-united family in the Hildreth home.

"Who is that call, Evadne, standing by the piano?" Louis put the question to his cousin as they stood together listening to the music.

"That is Mr. Simpson Kennard."

Louis surveyed the fashionably-dressed, weak-faced, sandy-haired young man from head to foot. "He will never get above his collar," he said, in a tone of infinite scorn.

Evadne laughed. "You must confess it is high enough to limit the aspirations of an ordinary mortal."

Marion fluttered up to them, her cheeks aglow with excitement.

"Louis, where are you? I want to introduce you to Simpsy: he has just arrived."

Evadne looked after her as she led her brother away. "Poor little soul! What a butterfly it is! Fancy having a husband whom one could call Simpsy!"

She started. Her knight of the gate was standing before her with outstretched hand. A great light was in his face.

"Do you remember?" he asked, and Evadne's eyes glowed deep with pleasure as she laid her hand in his. They would [illegible] "Life is a beautiful possibility," she said. "I am proving it so every day. But—oh, the awful suffering in the world! I cannot understand."

And John Randolph answered, with his [illegible] We do not need to, always, otherwise we would have no room for faith."

They were standing in an alcove, partially screened by a tall palm from the crowd which surged up and down through the rooms. He took from his pocket a morocco case, and, opening it, held it towards her. What made the color flush her cheeks, while her eyes fell beneath his gaze? She only saw a little square of lawn and lace, but the name traced across one corner was "Evadne."

"Did you leave nothing behind you at Hollywood that day?" he asked gently.

"My handkerchief!" she cried. "I missed it before we reached Marlborough. I must have left it at the gate." But Evadne had left more behind her than she knew.

"I will keep it still," he said, "with your permission. Will you give it to me?"

"Oh, Dr. Randolph"—Isabelle's voice fell shrill upon Evadne's silence—"they are calling for you in the other room to decide a knotty question—something about microbes. I told them I was sure you would know. Will you come?"

John Randolph put the case quickly in his pocket and smiled as he turned away. He thought he had read consent in her gentle eyes.

After the reception was over, Evadne knelt by her window until the stars faded one by one from the sky. Then she turned away with a happy sigh. When he came to get his answer, she would know. The next day, though she knew it not, her answer was sought.

"Give that to me!" Isabelle spoke imperiously to the servant, who was passing through the hall with a note in her hand. From where she stood she recognized the clear handwriting of the prescriptions which the new doctor wrote. Her demon of curiosity overcame her. The tempter was very near. The girl held the note towards her.

"It is for Miss Evadny," she said. "Miss E. Hildreth,' you see."

Isabelle gave a careless laugh. "It is a mistake," she said. "I know the writing. The note is meant for me."

When John Randolph called that evening he was ushered into the presence of Isabelle.

"I am so sorry about Evadne," she exclaimed, before he had time to speak. "She had an engagement with my brother. He monopolizes her whenever he is at home." She laughed affectedly. "Oh,

I cannot tell you when it is coming off, but she has worn his ring for years. They will not give us any satisfaction deep as the sea, you know. It seems so strange to me, but then I am so transparent. She is a clever girl, but very peculiar. Does not seem to have much natural feeling, you know—but I suppose I am not fitted to judge. I am so emotional!"

John Randolph bit his lip hard. It startled him to find how sharp a pain could be.

Day after day Evadne waited, but to her surprise her knight did not ask for his answer. She began to meet him professionally, for his reputation was steadily increasing, but he made no attempt to resume the conversation which had been so rudely interrupted. He treated her with a delicate chivalry always. That was John Randolph's way, and once she had caught such a strange, wistful expression on his face as he looked at her and then at a patient's arm which she was deftly bandaging. She was puzzled. What could it all mean? Well, God understood.

Meantime her work grew more and more absorbing. The surgical ward in the new hospital was filled to its utmost capacity, and Evadne found her work no sinecure. The force of nurses was inadequate to meet the demand. Often she would be called from her rest to minister to the critical cases which were her special care, and she would go down to the ward, saying, softly, "The Master is come and calleth for thee," and bending over the sufferers would behold tenderly as in a vision the face of Christ.

"My dear Miss Hildreth," the superintendent exclaimed one day, "how is it that you make the patients love you so?"

"If they do," she said, "it must be because of my love for them." And the superintendent answered in a hushed voice, "Why, that is the Gospel!"

They called her "sister," these rough men in the patients' beds. She liked it so. She felt herself a sister to the world.

It was evening, and the lights were turned low in the ward. Evadne was making her round before going to her room for a sorely needed rest. John Randolph, who had come to pay a second visit to an interesting case in the medical ward, stood in the shadow of a doorway and watched her hungrily. Each one wanted to say something, and Evadne listened patiently. To her the mission of a nurse meant something higher than gruel and bandages. She never forgot, as she ministered to the body, that she was dealing with a soul.

John Randolph, standing with folded arms in the doorway, heard her low sweet laugh as she strove to brighten up a lachrymose patient, and caught at intervals the name of Jesus, as she reminded one and another of the Friend whose sympathy is strong enough to bear all the weight of human pain, and once he thought he heard the sweet note of a prayer. He started forward. Evadne was bending over a man who had been badly crippled in a saw mill. His left arm was gone and all the fingers from his right hand. With the morbidness of those who delight in concentrating attention upon their own sufferings, he had pulled off the loosened bandage with his teeth and held up the stump for inspection, and Evadne had laid her cool soft hands on either side of the unsightly mass of red and angry flesh, and was holding them there while she talked!

"She gives herself!" cried John Randolph with a great throb of longing. "It is what Jesus did in Galilee."

A wave of passion broke over him. It was not true, this story. It could not be! How could her nature, sweet as light, ever be attuned to that of her cynical cousin? She was coming nearer, nearer. He would stay and meet her. He thought he had read his answer in her eyes. Now he would have it from her lips as well. But then, there was the ring! Isabelle had been right. It was no lady's ornament, and he had seen the initials "L. H." graven in the heart of the stone as their hands had met one day in dressing a wound. Evadne Hildreth was not one to wear a man's ring lightly. And John Randolph bent his head and groaned.

"Sister, Sister, won't you sing before you go?"

"Oh, yes, Sister, give just us one song!" The men raised themselves on their elbows in pleading entreaty, and Evadne stood in all her sweet unconsciousness before him, and began to do their will. Soft and clear the music fell about him. The air was "The Last Rose of Summer," but the words were "Jesus, Lover of my Soul." When the song was ended, John Randolph, hushed and comforted, walked noiselessly down the stairway and out into the quiet street.

Evadne had sung her message, while she folded its leaves of healing down over her own sore heart, and human love had paled before the exquisite beauty of the love of God!

In the Hildreth mansion the judge was sitting in his library alone. He had left home immediately after dinner, ostensibly to catch the evening train for New York, and had sent the carriage back from the station to take his family to the choral festival, which was the event of the year in Marlborough, and then returning in a hired conveyance, had let himself into his house like a thief. When we sacrifice principle upon the altar of expediency, truth and honor, like twin victims, stand bound at its foot. He wanted to be undisturbed, to have time to think, and God granted his wish, until his reeling brain prayed for oblivion!

No sound broke the stillness. With the exception of the servants in a distant part of the house, he was absolutely alone.

He drew out his will from a secret drawer of his desk, and looked it over with a ghastly smile. "To my dear niece, Evadne, the sum of thirty thousand dollars, held by me in trust from her father." Then came a long list of charities. It read well. People could not say he had left all to his family and forgotten the Lord. If his executors should find a difficulty in realizing one-quarter of the values so speciously set forth, they could only say that dividends had shrunk and investments proved unreliable. It was not his fault. He had meant well. Besides he had no thought of dying for years. There was plenty of time for skilful financing. Other men had done the same and prospered. Why should not he?

But the letters relating to Evadne's property must be destroyed. He had come to a decision at last. It was an imperative necessity. His hesitancy had been only the foolish scruples of an over-sensitive conscience. The tremendous pressure of the age made things permissible. He was "torn by the tooth of circumstance" and "necessity knows no law." So he entrenched himself behind a breastwork of sophisms. Long familiarity with the suggestions of evil had bred a contempt for the good.

He stretched out his hand towards the drawer. There should be no more weak delay. If a thing were to be done, 'twere well it were done quickly. The horror of a great fear fell upon him. Again his hand had fallen and this time he was powerless to lift it up!

HONESTY

Laxity in Our Just Obligations a Sin

SOME Christian people seem to think that the code of civil law is all the standard that it is necessary to recognize, and also that fulfilling its claims exempts them from higher obligations. But there is a moral law, based upon principles of divine righteousness, that God has instituted, which is binding upon mankind, whether they acknowledge it or not, and specially is it binding upon Christians. It is in the light of this moral law, which the world recognizes, that a Christian's life is judged. A professed follower of Christ, who directs his life by no higher standard than that recognized by a court of justice exerts no influence for his Master, and is frequently a stumbling-block and cause of offense to the world.

Nowhere is this more strikingly illustrated than in the laxity with which nominal Christians regard their just obligations. When the Pharisees and Herodians sought to entangle the Master in an argument regarding the lawfulness of paying tribute to Cæsar, he took a Roman coin in his hand and said, "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's." In these words Christ emphasized the inviolability of human obligations, no less than he declared the importance of meeting the demands of God. While he would have his disciples render full-hearted and loyal service to him in all things, such service must be accompanied by a consistent life in business relations as well. It is the failure of some Christians to recognize this fact, that has caused on many occasions a scandal to the Church of Christ.

The Mad Rush for Wealth

THIS IS A matter that is far too lightly thought of by many people. The mad rush for wealth seems to blind many men, and those who have once been useful in the church are overcome by the temptation to acquire great wealth. First, there is borrowing money to enlarge the business, then come the speculating investments with borrowed money, often followed by questionable methods and dealings to avert the crash. When, at last, the failure comes, the cause of Christ has to suffer as well as the man's family.

Some men try to keep up appearances by giving to Christian objects, even when they know they are insolvent. They excuse their hypocrisy by saying that it is business and it is a justifiable means of keeping their credit. But in the sight of God this is no less stealing than if the theft were made with no disguise of technical terms. These scandals have already cost the church too dearly, and no man has any right to remain upon the church rolls who would thus use the cause of Christ to abet him in fraud.

What God demands of his children is righteousness, and he who reads men's thoughts, and knows their secret purposes, cannot be deceived.

The Debt Question

TAKE ALONE the question of indebtedness. A debt is an obligation to meet a promise and should be considered in the light of an inviolable contract. Of course, it is possible for a man by entering bankruptcy to avail himself of legal provisions by which he may avoid the full payment of his indebtedness, and a large percentage of the amount may be canceled. But in such a case, the full indebtedness is still morally binding. For by what law of God may a man shirk the full responsibility of his pledge? It is the man who is faithful in a few things that God is able to entrust with great power and influence in his kingdom. A man who conducts his business on no higher basis than that which will keep him beyond the reach of the law, will be a greater benefactor to the Church by ceasing to be enrolled as a member, than by remaining in it and contributing generously to its support. It is just as much a divine command to render to man a hundred cents on a dollar as to render service to God himself.

As to Bankruptcy

BUT SHOULD a Christian man never avail himself of bankruptcy provisions? If it is with the intention of defrauding a creditor of less than his due, No. On the other hand, it may be necessary for the settlement of a business to make a consignment, but because a civil court no longer holds a man to his full contract, it does not follow that in God's sight he is no longer liable. Time and again instances are repeated of Christian men failing in business, paying only a fraction of their debts, and thereafter returning to business and making money without clearing up the past. Such things are the keenest injuries to Christianity, and hinder men from becoming Christians. For, why should they become Christians, when their lives are as consistent and upright as those who make a profession?

A Word to Borrowers

BUT, THE excuse is made, without incurring debts no man can run a successful business. If a man is unfortunate in a business venture, is he always to remain under the harrow? Right here is one of the great evils in business! It may be right to borrow money for a short time for convenience in carrying on business, but never should a man borrow more than he can offer ample and ready collateral for. No man has a moral right to incur risks that will jeopardize his character, to say nothing of the welfare of his family. Many a man has proved that it is possible to conduct business on a cash basis, without risking funds that belong to another, or risking his reputation as a Christian man. But, in any event, it would be wiser to be employed by another, and still retain an influence for righteousness, than run a large business in such a way as to be in constant danger of bringing reproach to the cause of Christ.

R&G CORSETS

An exclusive corset dealer in New York is known to cut the trade-mark out of R & G dollar corsets and sell them as her own make for five dollars.

Nothing can more clearly show the folly of paying exorbitant corset prices. The various styles of R & G Corsets are modeled on perfect human figures of varying proportions, and among them are styles and sizes that will perfectly fit any normal figure. Simply find the style that suit your figure, and the fit is assured.

No corset material will wear better than that used in R & G dollar corsets. No corsets are more carefully cut, stitched, boned and finished.

R & G Corsets of higher price are made of finer material with more trimming —the fit is the same.

All R & G Corsets are tested and stretched on steam-heated iron forms. By a pressure of 600 pounds all the stretch is taken out of the goods. An R & G Corset never stretches with wear. It is the same size forever. It doesn't have to be "broken in." It is comfortable first, last and always.

Our new number 397—the long-short corset—is our latest and best production. It is sold at $1 by over 10,000 dealers. If you don't find it easily send us your dollar and your dealer's name and we will see that you are supplied.

Our booklet, "CHOOSING A CORSET," contains corset facts every woman should know. A postal card request will bring it FREE.

One OXYDONOR will keep an entire family in good health, and will last a lifetime if taken care of. A 150-page book of Directions with each OXYDONOR.

Rev. John A. Thompson, Presiding Elder of M. E. Church in Newport, Ore. writes: THOMSONVILLE, Ga., Feb. 6, 1889

I have used the Oxydonor for Insomnia, and got a most perfect cure. It is the speediest and most thorough remedy I ever knew. This is the first and only commendation or endorsement of a cure of disease the writer has ever given, and in this instance he is moved to do so because of his faith in Oxydonor, and to do what may be in his power to render service to the afflicted. I would not be without Oxydonor for many times its cost.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Vegetable World*

THE vegetable world contains all the elements necessary to human sustenance, and in a much more prime condition than they are found in the diseased tissues of our mistreated servants, the lower animals. The belief that we cannot have peach in our dimples and diamonds in our brains without dead bodies in our digestion, is a belief having no foundation except ignorance. Vegetable fibrin is identical with animal fibrin, and vegetable albumen is identical with animal albumen. Even in albumenoids, in the supply of which meat is supposed to be rather exclusive, there are vegetables, nuts and grains that far exceed chops and steaks. Fish, for instance, contain about 13 per cent. of albumenoids, pork on an average of 16 per cent. and beef 17½ per cent., while nuts furnish 8 to 25 per cent., grain 7 to 15, eggs 14 per cent., cheese 29 per cent., peas 22 per cent., lentils 25 per cent. and beans from 22 to 35 per cent. The vegetable world, in fact, is the natural storehouse, and the only original storehouse from which animals may derive energy. No animal can produce protoplasm, which is the basis of all life and energy. This is a function of the plant, and of the plant only. All an animal can do is to take it after it is produced, and burn it up. Animals are simply locomotives, consuming the energy which plants slowly accumulate from the sun. It is a graceful and perfect process—plants storing up energy from the soil and sun, the inorganic, and the animal using this energy and completing the circle by sending the elements back again to the inorganic. And it is a "barbarism" in nature for animals to violate this beautiful arrangement by turning round and swallowing each other.

Lost in the Storm†

FOR days together, David could not cross the stony bottom to Kenmuir. His enforced confinement to the Grange led, however, to no more frequent collisions than usual with his father; for M'Adam and Red Wull were out at all hours, in all weathers, night and day, toiling at their work of salvation. At last one afternoon, David managed to cross the Bottom at a point where a fallen thorn-tree gave him a bridge over the soft snow. He stayed but a little while at Kenmuir, yet when he started for home it was snowing again. By the time he had crossed the ice-draped bridge over the Wastrel, a blizzard was raging. The wind roared past him, smiting him so that he could barely stand, and the snow leaped at him so that he could not see. But he held on doggedly, slipping, sliding, tripping, down and up again, with one arm shielding his face. On, on into the white darkness, blindly on; sobbing, stumbling, dazed. At length, nigh dead, he reached the brink of the Stony Bottom. He looked up and he looked down, but nowhere in that blinding mist could he see the fallen thorn-tree. He took a step forward into the white morass, and sank up to his thigh. He struggled feebly to free himself, but sank deeper. The snow wreathed, twisting round him like a white flame, and he collapsed, softly crying, on that soft bed.

"I canna, I canna!" he moaned.

Little Mrs. Moore, her face whiter and frailer than ever, stood at the window, looking out into the storm.

"I canna rest for thinkin' o' th' lad," she said. Then turning, she saw her husband, his fur cap down over his ears, buttoning his pilot coat about his throat, while "Owd Bob" stood at his feet waiting.

"Ye'er no goin', James?" she asked, anxiously.

"But I am, lass," he answered; and she knew him too well to say more. So those two went quietly out to save life or lose it, nor counted the cost. Down the wind-shattered slope, over a spar of ice, up an eternal hill—a forlorn hope. In a whirlwind chaos of snow, the tempest storming at them, the white earth lashing them, they fought a good fight. In front, Owd Bob, the snow clogging his shaggy coat, his hair cutting like lashes of steel across his eyes, his head lowered as he followed the finger of God; and close behind, James Moore, his back stiff against the storm, stalwart still, yet swaying like a tree before the wind. So they battled through to the brink of the Stony Bottom —only to arrive too late. For, just as the master peering about him, had caught sight of a shapeless mass lying in front, there loomed across the snow-choked gulf through the white riot of the storm a gigantic figure, forging doggedly forward, his great head down to meet the hurricane. And close behind, buffeted and bruised, stiff and staggering, a little dauntless figure holding stubbornly on, clutching with one hand at the gale; and a shrill voice, whirled away on the trumpet tones of the wind, crying:

"Noo, Wullie, wi' me! Here he is, Wullie!"

The brave little voice died away. The lost sheep found. And the last James Moore saw of them was the same small gallant form, half carrying, half dragging the rescued boy out of the Valley of the Shadow and away.

FELL OCCASIONALLY

At Church Suppers, Weddings and Parties.

"The minister liked coffee. His long Sabbath day's work was begun with a cup of the strongest coffee and ended in the same way. Gradually the physical and mental machinery became clogged, tongue coated, dull headaches and a generally depressed condition of the system, turned his delightful occupation into a dreary treadmill.

One day his attention was brought to the fact that the unsuspected coffee was very likely the cause of his trouble, and it was suggested that if he would use Postum Food Coffee and induce the good wife to be particular to boil it long enough to extract the delicious flavor and the elements which go to rebuild the broken down nerve centres, his trouble would be gone.

This was two years and a half ago, and since that time not a pound of coffee has been purchased by the minister's family. Morning, noon and night Postum makes its appearance on the table, and is enjoyed by all. With the departure of coffee went the minister's bad feelings, and with the coming of Postum came a feeling of exhilaration, a better appetite and a constantly increasing weight.

From the start the minister's Postum has been properly made, because of the warning.

At one time, during the absence of housewife, the domestic, not being particular about preparing Postum according to directions, made it weak and insipid, which we find is a very common complaint among those who do not understand that there is no way to extract the delicious flavor from Postum except by long boiling. Made properly it is clear, black and has a crisp, pungent, fascinating taste. Occasionally the minister has been induced to drink a cup of coffee at weddings, parties, etc., but many sleepless hours of the night are passed in consequence. This is a true experience."

"The King's Children"

A New Order of Christian Service Established in New York City

DOWN in the most crowded quarters of the crowded East Side of New York is a house with a pure white door. The house itself is not unlike the other buildings surrounding it. Tall tenements these are, for the most part, or old-fashioned piles of dingy red brick, which have stood there since the days of New York's earliest history, and which know nothing of "modern improvements." It is a region of rear tenements, and from ill-ventilated rooms and malodorous hallways, throngs of little children seem constantly passing out to group wistfully around that white door. "The house with the white door," they all call it. In their childish minds the outside whiteness is the intranslatable something which stands for the brightness within. There are dirty little finger-marks on that door sometimes, and its whiteness has been known to be disfigured by kicks from stubby little boot-heels. It is a "neighborhood house"—the Gospel Settlement—and the children of the tenements and alley-ways have learned that happy things are always happening there.

It was the wistful faces of these girls and boys that founded the Order of "The King's Children." They knew so little of the royally good times which are the royal right of childhood! They were so pathetically unconscious of the beauty and the gladness in the world! Their very plays and games were copied from the sorrow and sordidness about them; their lives were shadowy, instead of sunlit—yet they were the king's dear children.

A resident worker at the Settlement, who knew what happy childhood meant—a lady who loved little children and who sometimes wrote stories for them—heard in her heart the message of the King, and went out to tell it to his children, who thronged daily around that white door. She tried to draw their thoughts away from ugly, ignoble things, by showing them their Father's wonderful kingdom of "everywhere." With the thought of his Presence came the thought of his Power; vague ideas of a mysterous, far-away God floated out of the haze in their darkened young minds and formed in a beautiful, child-like faith in a Father who knew them and loved them.

It is an easy thing to bear the King's message. He, himself, opens heart-roads to receive it. These children on the East Side were quickly formed in bands of twenty and taught of their Father, the King. Each was given a badge, each learned sweet words and sweet songs, each is now trying to live as shall please him. The King of kings is the God of Jew and Gentile; and Russians, Germans, Poles and Syrians unite in love and harmony with Italians, Americans and Irish, as the King's dear little children march forth beneath his banner. Little boys and girls in uptown homes, who have slight knowledge of the dreary East Side, are also being formed in bands that they may feel the joy of helpfulness and may heartily work for the King.

This newly-formed Order will grow and spread far, for the blessing of God is upon it. Soon a detailed account of its organization will be in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, together with the incidents attending its beginning. A brief outline of its plan of work is given below:

The Order of "The King's Children" has its headquarters at the Gospel Settlement, 211 Clinton St., New York. It is founded upon the thought that God is Love, and that he wishes his children, great and small, to lovingly work together with him in giving happiness to the world. Any child of any age not exceeding twelve years, may become a member of the Order. Each child, on becoming a member, repeats the following words, and signs (by name or by mark) the little covenant-card containing them:

"I am the King's child. The King is God. God, my Father, knows everything. He can do everything. He always loves me and he is with me everywhere. A King's child should live nobly. I will try to do and speak and think the things that will please my Father who is the King of kings."

The children are united in bands of twenty, each band having a separate leader. This leader may be a Sunday School teacher or a day-school teacher, a mother in the neighborhood, an elder sister, or any lover of children. Each band will choose its own plan of work. The only object of the organization is to encourage the King's dear little children to live pure, true, noble lives; to be happy themselves, and to co-operate with their Father in radiating happiness through his world. Suggestions for work, and a little manual of exercises appropriate to the weekly meetings, will be furnished to each leader of a band on application to the Secretary-General, 211 Clinton Street, New York City. Each band should send to the same address as soon as possible a list of its members and an outline of its proposed work. The badge of the [illegible] a wreath of laurel, with the words "The King's Children," interwoven. This badge will be sent from the Central Office to any band requesting it. The price of each badge is twen[illegible]

It is proposed to extend the order to every State in the Union. Any one wishing to organize a band should address the Secretary of the King's Children, at the address given above.

A Philanthropic Woman

Mrs. Martha B. Stevens, of Castle Point, Hoboken, N. J., who died last week, was noted for her Christian philanthropies. She was the widow of Col. Edwin A. Stevens, and, like her husband, came of a patriotic family, distinguished for noble deeds. During her lifetime she devoted a large po tion of her great wealth to charitable objects. She was the principal founder of Martha's Institute—an industrial school for girls—which was named in her honor. She greatly aided the movement for a free public library in Hoboken, founded a ward in St. Mary's Hospital, and was a liberal contributor to many public charities and to almost every Christian church in Hoboken, regardless of denomination. Her private benefactions were numerous, and she delighted to keep them secret. Her latest public act was to arrange for the erection of a recreation pier on the water front for the use of the poor. In these and many other ways she was a faithful steward, and made her wealth a blessing to many.

STARCH FOODS.

The great majority of all our daily food contains starch. Potatoes, wheat, rice, fruits—in all starch is an important element. Yet, strange to say, medicine has hitherto had no remedy for inability of the digestive system to care for these amylaceous (starchy) foods. Pepsin, pancreatin, are efficient in digest ng meats and albumens, but have no good effect on starch foods.

Such being the case, it is small wonder that the medical press of the country has shown great interest in a new digestive principle recently discovered by a Japanese chemist, Mr. Jokichi Takamine. The Medical Times speaks thus of it: "In this product, Taka-Diastase, we have what the profession has so long desired . . . a reliable method of treatment."

The Medical News of February 14 contains a long article by Prof. R. W. Wilcox, of the New York Post-Graduate School, of which the following is part: "When I found that a diastase had been isolated by Takamine, and its value certified by Lascar, I again experimented with the substance. This diastase possesses the remarkable power of within ten minutes converting into sugar one hundred times its own weight of starch, and within three hours fifteen hundred times its own weight in starch." He then describes fourteen cases which he has successfully treated with the new remedy. The record of this treatment is making a profound impression among all classes of physicians.

This new cure for an hitherto incurable ailment is offered to the public in the form of Kaskola Tablets, prepared by the P. L. Abbey Co., of Kalamazoo, Mich. So unvarying have been the beneficent results of the treatment, that this Company gladly sends any reader of this paper a full-sized fifty-cent box of tablets on the condition that if benefit comes from their use the price be mailed within two weeks. Otherwise no charge will be made.

The Man with the Pitcher

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 23. Mark 14:12-16

FAMILIAR as is the story of that wonderful, solemn night which closed the ministry of our Lord, it may be useful to dwell on one of the accessories of the picture which may have been dwarfed into insignificance by the sublimity of the main features. Christ had been looking forward to that night with sad, but intrepid feelings. He said to his disciples: "With desire, I have desired to eat this Passover with you, before I suffer." It had been in his mind to have the familiar faces around him at the farewell meal, and to utter words which should console them in the impending bereavement and inspire them with courage to go on when they were leaderless. But where should the meeting take place? At this day how gladly would magnificent homes be thrown open to Jesus for such a celebration! How many thousands there are now who would count it the highest honor they could achieve, to have him under their roof and have him use their houses for his purpose! But then, comparatively unknown; despised and ridiculed and hated by the chief men of his nation, where would he find a door open to him? He, whose influence can reach any heart, provided for the emergency and the honor of entertaining the party was conferred on some unknown man, who was to be recognized by his carrying a pitcher.

A very humble man we should judge this man to have been. Such duties were usually performed by female servants. It was they who brought water from the well for the uses of the household. In those countries, where woman is accounted inferior, it would be a mark of degradation for a man to be doing a woman's work. But this was the man for whom the disciples were looking, and through him the need of the Master was to be met. In the work that Christ has been doing in the world since then, such men have been eminently useful. The men of humble mind, who quietly go about their ordinary work, caring nothing for their lowliness, have often been the connecting link between their Lord and the soul that receives and welcomes him. The greatest preacher of modern times, who probably brought more souls to Christ than any man of this generation—the late Charles H. Spurgeon—was himself converted under the preaching of such a man. A humble Methodist exhorter trying in his simple way to make the Gospel plain to his hearers, had among them this young man who casually strayed into the room and listened. Little did he know what was to be the effect of his sermon. But he did his duty and he carried the word that Spurgeon needed right to his heart. It was only one soul, but from that soul what a harvest! Thousands in his own land and multitudes in other lands were to be brought in through that one seed. And Spurgeon did not even know his name. He was simply a man carrying a pitcher.

It is remarkable how often the call to service has come to men while they were engaged in their ordinary worldly work. As Elijah looking for a successor found him in the person of a man ploughing the field, so this man was honored by being made useful while he was doing menial work. True, it was only a humble service, but just then it was a very necessary service. He was the guide to the men who were looking for a place in which the most memorable meal in the history of the world was eaten. How happy any man might be to render even the humblest service to Christ. It is so little that we can do for him compared with what he did for us, that even that man bearing a pitcher is enviable. And we may do like service in a better way. Christ is still asking, "Where is the guest-chamber where I shall eat the Passover?" He wants to know where there is a heart to which he will be welcome, where there is a soul that will admit him. As we go about our daily work we may find such a refuge, which will be blessed by his presence. We cannot preach, perhaps, or do any great thing for the Master; but if we can be guides, if we can be the means of bringing him to the soul that needs him, we may well be grateful. It is not in meditation or in withdrawal from the world that we reach the dignity of serving him. In going about our daily tasks, in doing our ordinary work, it is possible that we may be instrumental in facilitating something on which he has set his heart, and so may be honored by being employed as was this man with the pitcher.

Free Catarrh Remedy

Dr. Blosser, the celebrated Catarrh Specialist of the South, offers a trial sample of his valuable remedy to any one suffering from Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness, etc. The remedy is applied in the form of a medicated smoke-vapor, which, being inhaled, makes a direct application to the diseased parts.

Wonderful success has attended the use of this remedy. Thousands of cases have been cured—many of them were of 15, 20, 25 and even 40 years standing. The cost of the treatment is very moderate. A book, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," and a three days treatment will be mailed to any sufferer who will write at once. Address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

Farm Wagon for Only $19.95.

In order to introduce their Low Metal Wheels with Wide Tires, the Empire Manufacturing Company, Quincy, Ill., have placed upon the market a Farmer's Handy Wagon, sold at the low price of $19.95. The wagon is only 25 inches high, fitted with 24 and 30-inch wheels with 4-inch tire.

This wagon is made of best material throughout, and really costs but a trifle more than a set of new wheels, and fully guaranteed for one year. Catalogue giving a full description will be mailed upon application by the Empire Manufacturing Co., Quincy, Ill., who also will furnish metal wheels at low prices, made any size and width of tire to fit any axle.

CLOTHING SALESMEN WANTED.

$150.00 PER MONTH AND EXPENSES MADE BY ALL OUR ACTIVE MEN. WE PAY MANY FAR MORE.

WE WANT MEN IN EVERY COUNTY in the United States. If your reference is satisfactory we will start you at once. No experience necessary. No capital required. We furnish a full line of samples, stationery, etc. A tailor's-for-the-trade complete outfit ready for business. NO COMMISSION PLAN. You regulate your profits to suit yourself. No house to house canvass. This is not one of the many catchy advertisements for agents, but one of the most few advertisements offering a rare opportunity to secure steady, high-grade EMPLOYMENT AT BIG WAGES.

We are the LARGEST TAILORS in America.

We make to measure over 300,000 suits a year. We occupy entire one of the largest business blocks in Chicago. We refer you to the Corn Exchange National Bank in Chicago, any Express or Railroad Co. in Chicago, any resident of Chicago. Before engaging with us, write to any friend in Chicago and ask them to come and see us, then write you if it is a rare opportunity to secure steady, high-class, big-paying employment. Better still come to Chicago yourself and see us before engaging and satisfy yourself regarding every word we say. You can get steady work and big pay. Work in your own county 300 days in the year and you can't make less than $5 every day above all expenses. WE WANT TO ENGAGE YOU to take orders for our Made-to-Order and Measure Custom Tailoring, (Men's Suits, Pants and Overcoats). We put you in the way to take orders from almost every man in your county; a business better than a store with a $20,000.00 stock. You will have no competition.

WE ARE THE LARGEST TAILORS IN AMERICA Of Fine Custom-Made Garments. We buy our cloth direct from the largest European and American Mills. We control the product of several Woolen Mills. We operate the most extensive and economic custom tailoring plant in existence, thus reducing the price of Suits and Overcoats made to order to $5.00 and upward; Pants from $1.50 to $5.00. We show a large line of suits at from $5.00 to $8.00. Prices so low that nearly every one in your county will be glad to have their suits made to order.

RIO, WIS., June 20th, 1898.

GENTLEMEN:—In reply to your letter requesting the use of my photograph for advertising purposes, and asking how I am pleased with the work, would say I do not object to your using my photograph, as your prices are very low and garments so exact to my measurements that I gladly recommend you. I would add that I have never made less than $80.00 per month since I received your first outfit, and in the best months have made as high as $150.00 per month. Very truly, E. J. DOYLE.

Should you write Mr. Doyle, be sure to enclose a 2c stamp for reply.

We have hundreds of letters similar to Mr. Doyle's.

We Furnish You a large, handsome leather bound book, containing large cloth samples of our entire line of Suitings, Pantaloonings, etc., a book which COSTS US SEVERAL DOLLARS; also Fine Colored Fashion Plates, Instruction book, Tape Measure, Business Cards, Stationery, Advertising Matter, and your name and address on rubber stamp with pad complete. We also furnish you a Salesman's Net Confidential Price List. The prices are left blank under each description so you can fill in your own selling prices, arranging your profit to suit yourself. As soon as you receive your sample book and general outfit and have read our book of instructions carefully, which teaches you how to take orders, and marked in your selling price, you are ready for business and can begin taking orders from every one. At your low prices, business men, farmers, and in fact every one will order their suits made. You can take several orders every day at $1.00 to $5.00 profit on every order. EVERY ONE WILL BE ASTONISHED AT YOUR LOW PRICES.

YOU REQUIRE NO MONEY. Just take the orders and send them to us, and we will make the garments within 5 days and send direct to your customers by express C. O. D., subject to examination and approval, at your selling price, and every week we will send you a check for all your profit. You need collect no money, deliver no goods, simply go on taking orders, adding a liberal profit and we deliver the goods, collect all the money and every week promptly send you in one round check your full profit for the week. NEARLY ALL OUR GOOD MEN GET A CHECK from us of AT LEAST $40.00 every week in the year.

THE OUTFIT IS FREE. We make no charge for the book and complete outfit, but as each outfit costs us SEVERAL DOLLARS, to protect ourselves against many who would impose on us by sending for the outfit with no intention of working, but merely out of idle curiosity. As a GUARANTEE OF GOOD FAITH on the part of EVERY APPLICANT, we require you to fill out the blank lines below, giving the names of two parties as reference, and further agreeing to pay, merely as a temporary deposit, ONE DOLLAR and express charges for the outfit, when received, if found as represented and really a sure way of making big wages. The $1.00 you agree to pay when outfit is received does not begin to pay the cost to us, but insures us you mean business. WE WILL REFUND YOUR $1.00 as soon as your orders have amounted to $25.00. WHICH AMOUNT YOU CAN TAKE THE FIRST DAY YOU WORK.

Fill out the following lines carefully, sign your name, cut out and send to us, and the outfit will be send you AT ONCE.

AMERICAN WOOLEN MILLS CO., West Side Enterprise Bldg., CHICAGO. ILL.

GENTLEMEN:—Please send me by express, C. O. D., subject to examination, your Sample Book and Complete Salesman's Outfit, as described above. I agree to examine it at the express office and if found exactly as represented and I feel I can make good big wages taking orders for you, I agree to pay the express agent, as a guarantee of good faith, and to show I mean business (merely as a temporary deposit) One Dollar and express charges, with the understanding the One Dollar is to be refunded to me as soon as my sales have amounted to $25.00. If not found as represented and I am not perfectly satisfied I shall not take the outfit or pay one cent.

THE LATE BARONESS DE HIRSCH

This excellent portrait of the late Baroness (the story of whose splendid liberality to the suffering and the oppressed is told on another page), is reproduced for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by special permission of the owner. It is the only authentic photograph of the famous philanthropist in this country. Our other illustrations are from photographs, taken specially for this journal, of a typical philanthropy, one of many established in the Eastern States by the late Baron and Baroness: The Hirsch Agricultural and Industrial Training School, at Woodbine, N. J. The illustrations are: (1) A Woodbine Residence; (2) Workers in the Fields; (3) The Colony School-house; (4) The Synagogue; (5) A Worker's Dwelling and (6) The Farm Buildings, with group in foreground which includes Prof. H. L. Sabsovich, M.A., Superintendent of the Colony. The Woodbine experiment, now eight years old, is a pronounced success, and the Colony's farm products have repeatedly been awarded valuable premiums (See page 300)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Mrs. S. H. P. (Subscriber). The worship of the "Bambino" is common in many Catholic countries, and images and effigies of saints, etc., are publicly displayed to adoring multitudes.

E. E. C., Rome, O. 1. Is the name of the river known, by the brink of which Moses was laid, Exodus 2:3? 2. Were the immediate surroundings level or mountainous? 3. Can you give a description of the "bulrushes" and "flags" that grow in that place?

1. It was doubtless the Nile, near Tanis, (now called San), the ancient capital. 2. Level. 3. They are like the tall, weedy grasses that grow in the low, marshy banks of many other rivers, particularly in tropical countries. A bulrush is a long, slender, rounded plant of the papyrus species. It was once very abundant in Egypt, but is now scarce. The little ark or basket in which Moses was exposed was woven of those weeds. The flag is a grassy weed, broader and coarser than the bulrush. A mummy, supposed to be that of the Princess Nofretari, who adopted Moses, has been found by recent investigators in Egypt.

Helen E. Thompson, Macon, N. C., writes to ask whether some reader will send her a copy of the verses beginning: "I have many things to tell, but ye cannot bear them now." The title of the poem is, "O! Christ in Heaven."

Willa T., Chicago, Ill. I have been asked whether a thing is right when we believe it is right, and I am in doubt. It seems to be a question whether conscience is an absolutely safe guide.

It is possible for a person to believe that a wrong thing is right. A case in point is that of the Apostle Paul, who said that when he was persecuting Christians he honestly believed he was doing God service. The conscience needs to be enlightened. It is often possible to show a person that a certain course of conduct is wrong, even after he has come to a conclusion that it is right. The conscience is sometimes blinded by sophistry or by a strong desire for some coveted pleasure or gain. Or it may have been affected by education or environment. We are bound to follow its dictates and do what we believe to be right, but we have to be careful to get all the light we can to aid it in coming to a right decision.

A reader writes us, apropos of the recent opening of the Alaska Railroad: "Far up north, in Sweden, on the Bay of Bothnia, at the city of Lulia, a railroad was built, and has been in operation for the last eight years, that runs from Lulia to Gillivare, a mining place, seventy-five kilometres (forty-seven miles) north of the Arctic Circle." This is farther north than the Alaska Railroad

We are always glad to hear from our boys in blue in distant lands. This letter from a well-known Y. M. C. A. worker now in Porto Rico, shows that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a regular and welcome visitor in our military camps abroad:

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, April 5, 1899.

Publisher "The Christian Herald":

Dear Sir:—On behalf of the soldiers in this far-away island, I wish to thank you for the copy of your publication which comes so regularly. If you could see the smile of welcome on the faces looking up into ours from hospital cots, and the crowds who run to meet us at the gate of Morro Castle your thoughtful service to the men who are so often homesick for a sight of the United States, and who receive their news principally through your paper, I hope you will continue your co-operation, and if your readers have magazines and books which they would like to have circulated among the soldiers, ask them to send them to me prepaid and I will attend to their distribution.

See'y Army and Navy Y. M. C. A.

E. A. G., Blanchard, Ia. You reported some time ago that Mary Reed, a missionary in India, had been healed of leprosy. How was it done? By medicine, or the "Leaves of Healing," or by faith?

We reported that the disease had made no progress, and that it was believed by Miss Reed and her friends in India that she was completely cured. She consulted one or two physicians in Europe and in India, who, we believe, prescribed for her. Whether she took their medicine we do not know. It is so unprecedented for any leper to be healed that Miss Reed is convinced that she was healed by Christ's interposition, in answer to her own prayers.

J. F. R., Mundan, Kan., writes:

My father has a Bohemian Bible printed in 1787, and a Prayer Book (miniature size—to be more easily hidden during the persecution) printed in 1630.

J. B. V., Guntersville, Ala. If a town taxes the saloons to support the public schools, ought Christian teachers to refuse to teach for money so collected, and ought Christian parents to refuse to allow their children to be educated with such funds?

The better way would be to work on the conscience of the town and to make an organized effort to convince the people that such a mode of raising school-funds is inconsistent and wrong. For teachers to leave their posts and parents to keep their children out of school on that account would be very unwise. It would be another wrong, and, according to the old adage, "two wrongs cannot make a [illegible]."

W. B., Washington, D. C. As every man has two parents, and each of these two parents, thus continually doubling for each generation backward he would have over one billion grand-[illegible] generations ago, and as that is more than all the people that then lived on the earth, how are we to explain this?

It requires no explanation. You have simply erred at the outset in stating that "every man has two parents," which is true, but misleading, since it may with equal truth be asserted that six, eight or ten men have two parents in common. This principle, working backward (as you will doubtless perceive), speedily reduces the whole human race to its two original progenitors.

Edmund H. S., Lee, Mass. I send you a clipping from a New York paper, in which Rev. Dr. Buckley is quoted as making a certain statement. Is the reverend gentleman correct?

The clipping enclosed by our correspondent relates to the proceedings of the New York East Conference, which adopted a resolution approving of the efforts of the Czar of Russia to establish universal peace. As originally presented, it contained a clause directing that the resolution be sent to St. Petersburg. Dr. Buckley, who is usually credited with a prodigious memory, is quoted as saying that he was "afraid the Czar did not know of the New York East Conference, and that the only minister ever known to a Czar was Dr. Talmage, and the Czar he knew was dead." Dr. Buckley's impulsiveness in debate here led him into error. Dr. Talmage was received by and conversed with both Alexander and Nicholas, the latter then Czarowitch and now Czar. The Conference, though perceiving Dr. Buckley's slip, generously let it pass.

Reader, Frankford. The balloting for a U. S. Senator must continue until a result is reached. The law directs that the joint assembly of both houses shall meet every legal day at noon and "take at least one ballot daily until a Senator is elected." A deadlock may be broken by a withdrawal or the nomination of a new candidate. The Governor certifies the election. He may appoint, ad interim, when Legislature is not in session.

R. S. McD., Germantown, Pa. What is the present status of relief work in Cuba?

There is no longer starvation, according to the reports of our army officials. General Brooke has been, and probably still is, issuing rations to reconcentrados in certain districts, but the keen suffering is over. Many thou[illegible] dos have returned to their own localities in the country, whence they were driven by W[illegible]. Free rations are being supplied by Government in some thirteen towns in the Department of Matanzas and also in several places in the Department of Santa Clara, but the number of dependents is stead[illegible].

A very touching little note accompanies the following letter:

[illegible], April 6, 1899.

[illegible] Mr. Blackburn [illegible] forward them to you. LILLIAN SMITH.

The note which is written, baby fashion, in sprawling capitals, says:

WAITING FOR THE BULL-FIGHT—A FAMILIAR SCENE IN MEXICO

In a recent letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bishop McCabe, then in Mexico City, told of the shameless desecration of the Lord's day by bull-fighting. It is true, as the Bishop pointed out, that the brutal spirit is supported largely on the Sabbath by the presence of hundreds of visitors from the United States, whose entrance fees often constitute the principal source of revenue for the day. Were they to discontinue their attendance, the desecration would soon die out for lack of support.

No one claims that it excels the old, but probably a Presbyterian or a Baptist would prefer it to your favorite catechism, and you would doubtless prefer it to the "Assembly's Shorter Catechism." Its chief merit is that it represents the belief of so many Christians. This is no slight matter in union churches. There are many small towns in which it would be better to have one church with this catechism as a basis of creed, than four or five churches, poorly supported and burdened with debt. The new catechism shows that the great body of Christ's people are nearer akin in their belief than was previously supposed.

Little Diana, the Heathen

The Waif of a Congo Tribe, under Christian Training, is Developing Noble Qualities

THERE are doubtless many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who will recall the story, published in these columns several years ago, of Diana, the three-and-a-half-year-old daughter of Tia and Wah, of the Grebo tribe, in Liberia, Africa. She is the little African maid, whom the venerable Bishop Wm. Taylor took, as a "raw heathen" and placed her as an adopted daughter in the Christian home of an American missionary at Pluka Station, Liberia. A short time after that event, little Diana was brought to this country, where her diminutive stature and bright face, shining with intelligence, attracted much attention. The change from the Liberian climate to that of New York, even in May, proved dangerous to Diana, and the utmost care had to be taken to prevent her from succumbing to colds and lung troubles, which frequently attack natives of the tropics when they undergo a radical change of climate. But, thanks to the care of her good friends, Diana lived and throve, and when she returned to her native land, she was carefully trained by the missionaries and taught the manners and customs of civilization. Diana, like many other little heathen children, "got religion" early, and gave her heart to Christ in her tender youth. There are, in the great African continent, some forty millions of children in the same unenlightened condition in which Diana was, when the missionaries first took her from the heathen tribe to which she belonged, and by whose consent she came to her new home at Pluka.

LITTLE DIANA.
(Seven years ago)

DIANA, AS SHE IS TO-DAY

Seven years have passed since these events occurred. Children grow up very quickly in Africa, and Diana is now a tall, prepossessing girl, and is with Miss Lizzie Buckwalter, an American M. E. missionary, at Kambini, East Africa. She is a great help to her missionary foster-mother. In a letter to Mrs. Stephen Merritt, in this country, Miss Buckwalter writes:

"Diana is a great comfort and help to us. I hardly know how we could keep house without her, she is such a blessing. We hope to send her to Natal to school next year. We did not see our way to part with her this year."

Should Diana's life be spared, she, in her turn, will become a teacher and missionary among her own people, and thus the gifts of the Christian people who have supported these missions will be multiplied, and become the means of bringing many into the kingdom through the native children, who, like Diana, have been brought into the Gospel fold in childhood.

In the same letter, the missionary gives some interesting glimpses of the experiences she and her fellow-workers are now enduring. She says:

"We are twenty miles from Dr. and Mrs. Richards, and twenty-five from the post-office, and are therefore quite isolated. The arrival of the mail once a month is quite an event. Mrs. Richards and I are the only white women in the province. We try to see each other every two or three months but it seems long between visits. We have been at Kambini a little over a year, and feel quite encouraged over our work. Eight have been converted and have joined the church on probation, and several others have joined the class for instruction. All our services are in the native language. We have had some difficulty in learning this tongue, but since October have worked without an interpreter. We have learned from Bishop Hartzell that the appropriation for Africa has been increased, and we are to have money to support our school and dispensary work. During the past year we have continued this work from our own resources, and this has kept us very poor; but we rejoice daily in the blessings of our Heavenly Father, and are glad to be used to help a few of these poor people who are in such great darkness. Pray for us, for we are surrounded by heathen influences and shut off from all Christian association, except Dr. and Mrs. Richards.

Dr. Richards writes from Imhambane, East Africa, telling of the noble work that is now being done in that section by Mabumbi, a native teacher. She is in a very needy field and in addition to her own two children, she has taken five others—"little, raw heathen"—to raise and instruct in the Gospel of Jesus.

Thus far, Mabumbi's self-denying work has been supported by the gifts of a few godly ladies in the United States, but this source has lately failed, and Dr. Richards commends her strongly to the consideration of all who are interested in African evangelization, as one in every way deserving of encouragement.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

NATIVE HOUSES AT KAMBINI, AFRICA

Another Great Opportunity

The prize proposition placed last month before our readers proved so exceedingly popular, attractive and successful, that we are encouraged to repeat it for subscriptions secured during the month of April and mailed before April 30, 1899. No letter bearing post-mark later than April 30, can be recognized in connection with this competition.

In reply to many inquiries, we beg to say that it is always best to send in each subscription as soon as it is secured, with full remittance, thus avoiding delay and disappointment to the subscriber.

Unless instructed to the contrary, the names of all the successful contestants will be published in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the second issue in May.

Start in to-day, and you will be surprised how easy it is to get subscribers.

To every one desiring it, we will send subscription blanks, colored premium sheets and sample copies free of charge.

This is a great opportunity to earn a number of excellent books and a liberal cash reward. Remember, you earn the books, and, the cash rewards are an additional incentive to increased activity, and will be paid to those who are fortunate enough to come out ahead in this competition, in addition to whatever books they may be entitled. Thus, even if you should fail to win a cash reward, the books will afford you substantial compensation for any subscribers which you may secure.

We Offer the Following Exceptionally Liberal Rewards:

For One new subscription we will give free, all charges prepaid, any one of the following books:

"Onward to Fame and Fortune," by Wm. M. Thayer, 446 pages, beautifully illustrated, bound in cloth, red and gilt;

"Stepping-Stones to Happiness," Harriet Prescott Spofford's latest and greatest work, over 35,000 sold; 496 pages, about 175 illustrations.

For Two new subscriptions, the one sending them may select any one of the following rewards:

"Around the World with Eyes Wide Open," by Dr. H. Allen Tupper, Jr. The Greatest Book of Travel ever published for ten times the price; 464 pages, nearly 300 beautiful illustrations, very handsomely bound;

"The Art of Home-Making," Margaret E. Sangster's great home book for Mothers and Daughters—not a book on housekeeping, but on Home-Making; 448 pages, very generously illustrated; a magnificent specimen of modern book-making.

The Christian Herald Library No. 2, consisting of ten superb volumes. Their titles and authors are as follows:

The Wedding-Ring, by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.
Notable 19th Century Events, by John Clark Ridpath, LL.D.
Holiday Stories for the Young, by Margaret E. Sangster.
Winter Evening Tales, by Amelia E. Barr.
Recitations for the Social Circle, by James Clarence Harvey.
How to Succeed, by Orison Swett Marden, M.D.
The Fairy-Land of Science, by Arabella B. Buckley.
The Land We Live In, by Henry Mann.
The Secret of a Happy Home, by Marion Harland.
Thoughts of Many Minds, by Louis Klopsch, Ph.D.

These ten books aggregate 3,200 pages, and are beautifully bound in Olive Green, Red and Gilt Titles. We especially recommend lovers of good literature and those who desire to help their Sunday School Library to make an effort to get two new subscribers, either in the Sunday School, the Church, or among their friends, and then present to their Sunday School Library the ten volumes constituting this Library. These books are carefully packed in corrugated cardboard cases, ensuring safe and undamaged delivery.

For Three new subscribers we will send, all charges prepaid, a superb Long-Primer, Leather Bound and Leather Lined, Divinity Circuit, Red-under-Gold Edged Teacher's Bible, with patent thumb index, in either the Authorized Version, or the Revised Version. Our Revised Version Bibles are the only ones in verse form conforming exactly to the Authorized Version.

For Five new subscribers we will send, all charges prepaid, one of our Superb, Genuine London Art Bibles, 1,334 pages and 852 illustrations, Elegantly Bound in Leather, Divinity Circuit, Red-under-Gold and Overlapping Edges.

This Bible is set in extra large type, and is as serviceable for home reading as for Sunday School work. The 852 Beautiful Pictures which it contains elucidate the text more than references and an extensive commentary could do, and they invest the Holy Scriptures with new life to old and young. The pictures illustrate scenes and explain orientalisms which heretofore were but imperfectly understood. It is the greatest of illustrated Bibles, and will prove a prize indeed to every one fortunate enough to secure it.

We also Give $100 in Cash

In addition to the above rewards, we will distribute $100 as follows among the persons who, under the above offer, send in the largest number of subscribers:

For the largest list of all, in addition to the books	$25.00 in cash
For the next largest list,	20.00
For the next largest list,	15.00
For the next largest list,	10.00
For the Six next largest lists, each $5.00,	30.00

MAKING A TOTAL OF TEN EXTRA REWARDS, AGGREGATING $100.

And all this in addition to the book reward earned under the above proposition. Remember, you get the books anyway, and the cash if you come in ahead.

. . . Massacre of the Innocents . . .

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Judges 11: 36, . . .

My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth unto the Lord, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth.

JEPHTHAH was a freebooter. Early turned out from a home where he ought to have been cared for, he consorted with rough men, and went forth to earn his living as best he could. In those times it was considered right for a man to go out on independent military expeditions. Jephthah was a good man according to the light of his dark age, but through a wandering and a predatory life he became reckless and precipitate. The grace of God changes a man's heart, but never reverses his natural temperament. The Israelites wanted the Ammonites driven out of their country, so they sent a delegation to Jephthah, asking him to become commander-in-chief of all the forces. He might have said, "You drove me out when you had no use for me, and now you are in trouble you want me back;" but he did not say that. He takes command of the army, sends messengers to the Ammonites to tell them to vacate the country, and, getting no favorable response, marshals his troops for battle.

Before going out to the war Jephthah makes a very solemn vow, that if the Lord will give him the victory, then, on his return home, whatsoever first comes out of his doorway he will offer in sacrifice as a burnt-offering. The battle opens. It was no skirmishing on the edges of danger, no unlimbering of batteries two miles away, but the hurling of men on the point of swords and spears until the ground could no more drink the blood, and the horses reared to leap over the pile of bodies of the slain.

Jephthah wins the day. Twenty cities lay captured at his feet. Sound the victory all through the mountains of Gilead. Let the trumpeters call up the survivors. Homeward to your wives and children. Fill high the tankards. The nation is redeemed, the invaders are routed, and the national honor is vindicated.

Huzza for Jephthah, the conqueror! Jephthah, seated on a prancing steed, advances amid the acclaiming multitudes, but his eye is not on the excited populace. Remembering that he had made a solemn vow that, returning from victorious battle, whatsoever first came out of the doorway of his home, that should be sacrificed as a burnt-offering, he has his anxious look upon the door. I wonder what spotless lamb, what brace of doves will be thrown upon the fires of the burnt offering.

Oh, horrors! Paleness of death blanches his cheek. Despair seizes his heart. His daughter, his only child, rushes out the doorway to throw herself in her father's arms and shower upon him more kisses than there were wounds on his breast or dents on his shield. All the triumphal splendor vanishes. Holding back this child from his heaving breast, and pushing the locks back from the fair brow, and looking into the eyes of inextinguishable affection, with choked utterance he says, "Would God I lay stark on the bloody plain. My daughter, my only child, joy of my home, life of my life, thou art the sacrifice!"

The whole matter was explained to her. This was no whining, hollow-hearted girl into whose eyes the father looked. All the glory of sword and shield vanished in the presence of the valor of that girl. She cries out in the words of my text, "My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth unto the Lord, do unto me whatsoever hath proceeded from thy mouth."

She bows to the knife, and the blood, which so often at the father's voice had rushed to the crimson cheek, smokes in the fires of the burnt-offering. No one can tell us her name. There is no need that we know her name. The garlands that Mizpeh twisted for Jephthah the warrior have gone into the dust; but all ages are twisting this girl's chaplet. It is well that her name came not to us, for no one can wear it. They may take the name of Deborah, or Abigail, or Miriam, but no one in all the ages shall have the title of this daughter of sacrifice.

Of course this offering was not pleasing to the Lord, especially as a provision was made in the law for such a contingency, and Jephthah might have redeemed his daughter by the payment of thirty shekels of silver. But before you hurl your denunciations at Jephthah's cruelty, remember that in olden times, when vows were made, men thought they must execute them, perform them, whether they were wicked or good. There were two wrong things about Jephthah's vow. First, he ought never to have made it. Next, having made it, it were better broken than kept. But do not take on pretentious airs and say, "I could not have done as Jephthah did." If in former days you had been standing on the banks of the Ganges, and you had been born in India, you might have thrown your children to the crocodiles. It is not because we are naturally any better, but because we have more Gospel light.

Now I make very practical use of this question when I tell you that the sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter was a type of the physical, mental, and spiritual sacrifice of ten thousand children in this day. There are parents all unwittingly bringing to bear upon their children a class of influences which will as certainly ruin them as knife and torch destroyed Jephthah's daughter. While I speak, the whole nation, without emotion and without shame, looks upon the stupendous sacrifice.

In the first place, I remark that much of the system of education in our day is a system of sacrifice. When children spend six or seven hours in school, and then must spend two or three hours in preparation for school the next day, will you tell me how much time they will have for sunshine and fresh air, and the obtaining of that exuberance which is necessary for the duties of coming life? No one can feel more thankful than I do for the advancement of common school education. The printing of books appropriate for schools, the multiplication of philosophical apparatus, the establishment of normal schools, which provide for our children teachers of largest calibre, are themes on which every philanthropist ought to be congratulated. But this herding of great multitudes of children in ill-ventilated schoolrooms, and poorly equipped halls of instruction is making many of the places of knowledge in this country a huge holocaust.

In connection with this I mention what I might call the cramming system of the common schools and many of the academies: children of delicate brain compelled to tasks that might appall a mature intellect; children going down to school with a strap of books half as high as themselves. The fact is, in some of the cities parents do not allow their children to graduate, for the simple reason, they say, "We cannot afford to allow our children's health to be destroyed in order that they may gather the honors of an institution." Tens of thousands of children educated into imbecility: so that connected with many such literary establishments there ought to be asylums for the wrecked.

You may flatter your pride by forcing your child to know more than any other children, but you are making a sacrifice of that child, if by the additions to its intelligence you are making a subtraction from its future. The child will go away from such maltreatment with no exuberance to fight the battle of life. Such children may get along very well while you take care of them, but when you are old or dead, alas! for them, if, through the wrong system of education which you adopted, they have no swarthiness or force of character to take care of themselves. Be careful how you make the child's head ache or its heart flutter. I hear a great deal about black man's rights, and Chinaman's rights, and Indian's rights, and woman's rights. Would God that somebody would rise to plead for children's rights. The Carthagenians used to sacrifice their children by putting them into the arms of an idol which thrust forth its hand. The child was put into the arms of the idol, and no sooner touched the arms than it dropped into the fire. But it was the art of the mothers to keep the children smiling and laughing until the moment they died. There may be a fascination and a hilarity about the styles of education of which I am speaking, but it is only laughter at the moment of sacrifice. Would God there were only one Jephthah's daughter!

Again, there are many parents who are sacrificing their children with wrong systems of discipline—too great rigor or too great leniency. There are children in families who rule the household. The high chair in which the infant sits is the throne, and the rattle is the sceptre, and the other children make up the parliament where father and mother have no vote! Such children come up to be miscreants. There is no chance in this world for a child that has never learned to mind. Such people become the botheration of the Church of God and the pest of the world.

There must be harmony between the father's government and the mother's government. The father will be tempted to too great rigor. The mother will be tempted to too great leniency. Her tenderness will overcome her. Her voice is a little softer, her hand seems better fitted to pull out a thorn and soothe a pang. Children wanting anything from the mother, cry for it. They hope to dissolve her with tears. But the mother must not interfere, must not coax off, must not beg for the child when the hour comes for the assertion of parental supremacy and the subjugation of a child's temper. There comes in the history of every child an hour when it is tested whether the parents shall rule or the child shall rule. That is the crucial hour. If the child triumphs in that hour, then he will some day make you crouch. It is a horrible scene. I have witnessed it: a mother come to old age, shivering with terror in the presence of a son who cursed her gray hairs, and mocked her wrinkled face, and begrudged her the crust she munched with her toothless gums!

> How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is,
> To have a thankless child!

But, on the other hand, too great rigor must be avoided. It is a sad thing when domestic government becomes cold military despotism. Trappers on the prairie fight fire with fire, but you cannot successfully fight your child's bad temper with your own bad temper. We must not be too minute in our inspection. We cannot expect our children to be perfect. We must not see everything. Since we have two or three faults of our own, we ought not to be too rough when we discover that our children have as many. If tradition be true, when we were children we were not all little Samuels, and our parents were not fearful lest they could not raise us because of our premature goodness. You cannot scold or pound your children into nobility of character. The bloom of a child's heart can never be seen under a cold drizzle. Above all, avoid fretting and scolding in the household. Better than ten years of fretting at your children is one good, round old-fashioned application of the slipper! That minister of the Gospel of whom we read in the newspapers that he whipped his child to death because he would not say his prayers, will never come to canonization. The arithmetics cannot calculate how many thousands of children have been ruined forever either through too great rigor or too great leniency. The heavens and the earth are filled with the groan of the sacrificed. In this important matter, seek divine direction, O father, O mother.

Again: there are many who are sacrificing their children to a spirit of worldliness. In our day most boys start out with no idea higher than the all-encompassing dollar. They start in an age which boasts it can scratch the Lord's Prayer on a ten-cent piece, and the Ten Commandments on a ten-cent piece. Children are taught to reduce morals and religion, time and eternity, to a financial transaction. It seems to be their chief attainment that ten cents make a dime, and ten dimes make a dollar. How to get money is only equalled by the other art, how to keep it. Tell me, ye who know, what chance there is for those who start out in life with such perverted sentiments? The money market resounds again and again with the downfall of such people. If I had a drop of blood on the tip of a pen, I would tell you by what awful tragedy many of the youth of this country are ruined.

Further on, thousands and tens of thousands of the daughters of America are sacrificed to worldliness. They are taught to be in sympathy with all the artificialties of society. They are inducted into all the hollowness of what is called fashionable life. They are taught to believe that history is dry, but that fifty-cent stories of adventurous love are delicious. At thousands of marriage-altars there are daughters slain for time and slain for eternity. It is not a marriage: it is a massacre. Affianced to some one who is only waiting until his father dies, so he can get the property: then a little while they swing around in the circles, brilliant circles; then the property is gone, and having no power to earn a livelihood, the twain sink into some corner of society, the husband an idler and a sot, the wife a drudge, a slave, and a sacrifice. Ah! spare your denunciations from Jephthah's head, and expend them all on this wholesale modern martyrdom.

I lift up my voice against the sacrifice of children. I look out of my window on a Sabbath, and I see a group of children, unwashed, uncombed, unchristianized. Who cares for them? Who prays for them? Who utters to them one kind word? Who goes to snatch them from crime and death and woe? Who to-day will go forth and bring them into schools and churches? No. Heap them up, great piles of rags and wretchedness and filth. Put underneath them the fires of sacrifice, stir up the blaze, put on more faggots, and while we sit in the churches with folded arms and indifference, crime and disease and death will go on with the agonizing sacrifice.

During the early French Revolution at Bourges, there was a company of boys who used to train every day as young soldiers; and they carried a flag, and they had on the flag this inscription: "Tremble, tyrants, tremble; we are growing up." Mightily suggestive! This generation is passing off, and a mightier generation is coming on. Will they be the foes of tyranny, the foes of sin, and the foes of death, or will they be the foes of God? They are coming up! I congratulate all parents who are doing their best to keep their children away from the altar of sacrifice. Your prayers are going to be answered. Your children may wander away from God, but they will come back again. A voice comes from the throne to-day, encouraging you: "I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee." And though when you lay your head in death there may be some wanderer of the family far away from God, and you may be twenty years in heaven before salvation shall come to his heart, he will be brought into the kingdom, and before the throne of God you will rejoice that you were faithful. Come at last, though so long postponed his coming. Come at last!

I congratulate all those who are toiling for the outcast and the wandering. Your work will soon be over, but the influence you are setting in motion will never stop. Long after you have been garnered for the skies, your prayers, your teachings, and your Christian influence will go on, and help to people heaven with bright inhabitants. Which would you rather see? —which scene would you rather mingle in, in the last great day—being able to say, "I added house to house, and land to land, and manufactory to manufactory: I owned half the city: whatever my eye saw I had, whatever I wanted I got;" or on that day to have Christ look you full in the face and say, "I was hungry, and ye fed me; I was naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick and in prison, and ye visited me: inasmuch as ye did it to the least of these my brethren, ye did it to me?"

China's River of Death

An American Missionary Writes of the Terrible Record of the Hwang-Ho—The Last Great Famine, in which Millions Perished—A Sea that Engulfed Four Million Souls—The Present Distress Awakening World-Wide Sympathy

DRAGON BOAT READY FOR THE FESTIVAL, ON THE MIN RIVER, SOUTHERN CHINA

ALTHOUGH the sad story of China's visitation by flood and famine has only been partially told in the meagre advices that have been received, enough is now known to make it quite certain that the accounts of the suffering in Shantung and the adjoining provinces have in no sense been exaggerated. A general effort is now being made, not only by the Chinese government itself, but by many generous-hearted people in other lands, to aid the sufferers.

As stated in these columns last week, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, on ascertaining the character and extent of the suffering, communicated with our State Department at Washington, offering—should the need be so urgent as to make immediate action necessary—to provide a cargo of corn for shipment to Cheefoo, the nearest seaport to the famine region, and requesting government co-operation to the extent of supplying a vessel for transporting the same. This request was promptly transmitted by Secretary Hay to the Quartermaster General of the War Department, and the latter official now sends the following letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Quartermaster General's Office,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. Louis Klopsch, Esq.,
Proprietor of "The Christian Herald,"
New York City.

SIR:—In reply to your telegram of 25th ulto., addressed to the Department of State, I am directed by the Quartermaster General to inform you that as all army transports sailing from San Francisco have full cargoes, it will be impracticable for this Department to aid you in the matter of transporting a cargo of corn for the relief of the sufferers from the Yellow River flood in China, as requested in your telegram. Respectfully,

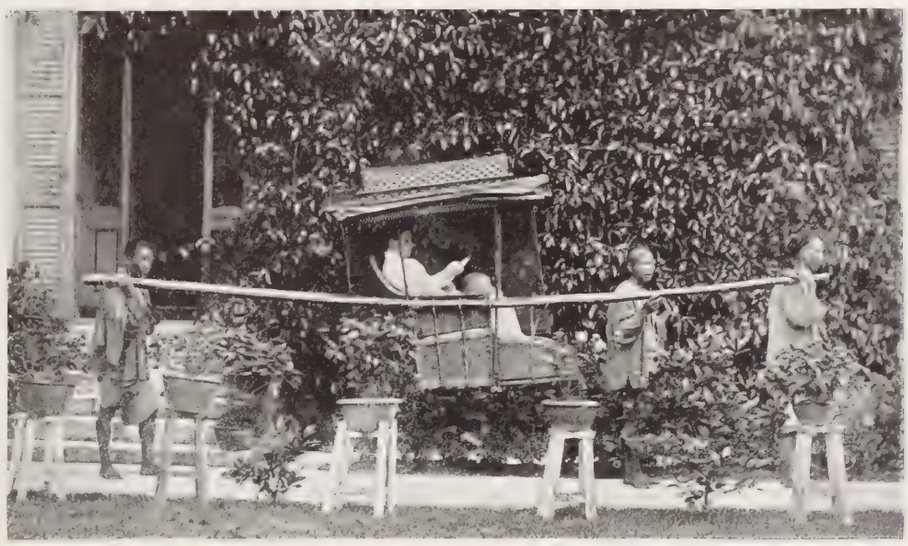
(Signed) CHAS. BIRD,
Col. and Quartermaster U. S. Vol.

This refusal was doubtless unavoidable, in view of the fact that our entire transport fleet has been kept actively engaged ever since the outbreak of the war with Spain, in carrying supplies to the West Indies and the Philippines.

Rev. Dr. S. L. Baldwin and Mrs. Baldwin have for many years been actively connected with American mission work in China, and only lately returned from an extended tour in that country. Mrs. Baldwin, who has traveled throughout the famine district, sends a letter which cannot fail to prove interesting to our readers at the present time. She writes:

"To those who know China, and how rarely she cries to other countries, either directly or through friends for help, the appeal for such aid by our U. S. Consul, Mr. Fowler, from Cheefoo, has a great and pitiful meaning of suffering such as few can comprehend in this favored land. China is probably the best supplied with waterways of any great country in the world. She has many great rivers, among which might well be numbered that marvelous structure her grand canal, extending broad and deep 600 miles from the Yang-Tsz to Tien-Tsin, while innumerable smaller canals of every length and width, link rivers and make easily accessible the mighty cities and numerous towns and villages of the many provinces. These serve well in the place of her long delayed railroads and gives food and work to her vast, industrious people. While China's greatest river—broader, longer, deeper, fuller than our Mississippi, and often called 'China Girdle,' because of its central location and its passing through so many provinces—rarely brings other than great blessing to the millions on its plains, the second great water-way, the Hwang Ho, (Yellow River), reaching in its wanderings from the north to within ninety miles of the Yang-Tsz, has made such a record of sorrow and desolation by its mighty floods that it is well termed 'China's Sorrow!' Year after year this uncontrolled river does its deadly work. Villages and towns are blotted out; millions of industrious, patient workers; little homes on the carefully tilled plots of ground; more pretentious homes in villages and towns; children, dear to their parents as are ours to us; women and men, human made to this country for help for China. The first was some years ago, and we were then at Foo Chow, Southern China. The second is the present appeal, and both due to the same cause, the floods of the Yellow River. I shall never forget the first occasion, for though far south of the scenes of suffering, they were vividly before us, and my heart was torn by the sorrows of the people. The flood covered an immense area as it does to-day, and then as now, towns, villages and farms were swept out of existence; more than 1,000,000 of people were destroyed, while as many more were left with absolutely nothing, houses, furniture, clothing, crops, seeds—everything gone, and that not in a warm climate, but in the cold North, which added greatly to the bitter suffering. The poor creatures tried to appease the gnawing pangs of hunger by eating seeds, bark of trees, willow leaves, earth, and even resorted in their hunger-insanity to human flesh. Others dug pits in the earth with their skeleton hands, crawled into them: sucked in eagerly the odors of the earth, died quickly, were passed out and others hastened to take their places. Those dreadful days I ate my own meals and gave to my family with a choke in my throat. Our missionaries and the foreign residents and native people did all they could, but all was so little to meet so great a need.

"As our missionaries went out into the famine districts to distribute relief, the sights were indeed appalling. Men and women and little children lay by the



A CHINESE PALANQUIN AND CARRIERS

In many parts of China in summer, the heat is so intense that Europeans and Americans employ this method of going about, instead of walking paths and in the fields in all stages of starvation and diseases that accompany such conditions, while living skeletons stood in mute, pitiful groups about them, having lost even the power of appeal save through the staring bones and hungry, sunken eyes. Our missionaries were in danger themselves of starvation, because when they went aside to eat their own food, these mute groups followed, uttering no word, but every bone and skeleton hand, and hungry deep-set eye, yea, their very silence, cried aloud for the food! I believe that in any country but China the poor people would have raided the homes of those who had supplies before coming to such suffering. Through the work of faithful missionaries of different denominations at that time, many a heathen heart was opened to the Gospel of love, and at least one missionary gave his life in this relief work, taking the inevitable famine fever and dying.

"The conditions of that awful time are being repeated now in Shantung Province, while from our Central China work, along the Yang-Tsz, we have word that for lack of the usual rains the crops are destroyed, and the vast millions of those great plains threatened with famine. Already our missionaries are forced to see the suffering as they go to their work, and one wrote: 'In the room with me as I write is one of these famine babes over a year old, weighing less than eight pounds.' While from our old home in the south comes the word, 'all the necessities of life are so high, even some of our best native pastors are suffering.'

"Last year going by rail from Tien Thir to Peking, we passed the so-called 'New Sea,' a vast body of water found on no map of the world, and it is the grave of four millions of people, made by a triple flood of the Yellow River, the Pei-Ho, and the Grand Canal. This occurred in 1890, and yet we never even heard of it! Now this sorrow and desolation are being repeated.

"Are there no benevolent Chinese to help their own people? I have never seen more generous giving than with them. One native firm in Cheefoo, we are told, has given $70,000 and 10,000 bags of corn, but as in India, so in China, the calamity is too great for local relief. Are they a worthless people, mere cumberers of the earth? I have often wondered what they would do with our improved implements—and here again are millions of dollars for us when the farming market of China is opened for our agricultural implements. The farmer ranks next to the literary man in China, they saying that 'the necessities of life came from the ground and are the direct gift of the gods.' The aristocracy of the land are the literati. Wealth is ever second to learning. They know nothing of a military aristocracy which may defend but ever degrades a people. China has never honored fighting, giving no attention to attain skill in killing, but a year ago last September, when her triennial examinations were on, 100,000 of her students went up to their literary halls, found in every capital city of their provinces, to write their themes and seek their degrees. Thirty thousand went to the hall in old Nanking alone. This wonderful fact cannot be duplicated in the world. The Merchant's Year Book gives us London's conclusions, not from sentiment, but from commercial experience, and the following is her startling summing up: For commercial integrity Chinese merchants lead the world at 95; Holland second, at 90; England third, at 85; United States fourth, at 80.

"The eyes of all nations are turned to China to-day. When that incomparably and immeasurably rich country is opened up, its coal and mineral wealth developed, railroads and factories established, a government in power that shall have the welfare of the people at heart, then, indeed, the millennium will be well on its way. The open market of commerce established by England and the United States means a wide open door for the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. China's greatest need. History is being made rapidly these days, and it is a great comfort to know that there is but One who makes the history of the world."

The Comforter Promised

S. S. Lesson for April 30. John 15 : 15-27
Golden Text, John 15 : 16

IN our last lesson we dwelt upon Christ's words: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do because I go unto the Father" (verse 12). He also shall do the works which shall destroy the works of the devil. The works of Christ which fulfil the will of God, and which represent him, are death to the works of the devil, which glorify man, and set up opposition to the will of God.

But how can feeble, fallen, helpless man come to do the works of God? How can man who has been overcome by the devil come to destroy the works of the devil? He who was the Word become flesh, has shown us in his own life. It is only by the power of God dwelling in man, as the Father dwelling in him, did the works. But God cannot dwell where sin reigns, and therefore the shedding of his blood who is the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Only as redeemed by his precious blood from the vain manner of life received by tradition from our fathers can we be indwelt of God. Only as redeemed and indwelt of God can we do his works, and so destroy the works of the devil. But it is a moment-by-moment dependence upon the cleansing blood which keeps us in touch with God, and out of reach of the enemy. "They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. 12: 11).

By his blood-shedding, and by his life on earth, our beloved Lord prepared the way for the Holy Ghost to come and to dwell in our mortal bodies as his temple: that he might have the full use of all our members as his "instruments of righteousness unto God" (Rom. 6: 13). A real conversion to God changes the whole direction of our lives: we are turned 'round from sin, from our "own way" (Isa. 53: 6), to desire supremely the will of God. We may have very much to learn as to what is his will, we may have many a conflict with our own will, but, if we are really converted and have truly received the Holy Spirit, which is part of a true conversion, it will be our meat, as it was our Master's meat, to do the will of God. It is the test which our Lord himself uses: "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments" (John 14: 15); you cannot do otherwise. "This is the love of God that we keep his commandments" (I. John 5: 3); love is not a sentiment, it is the ruling motive of a life.

"If ye love me, ye will" . . . and I will. Ye will obey, and I will provide you with power to obey. You shall have the same power as I have had: "I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth: whom the world cannot receive, for it beholdeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him: for he abideth with you and shall be in you." What a revelation! The world under the power of its prince, "the God of this world" is blindfolded! God the Holy Ghost is here on earth dwelling in his temples, but the world sees nothing of his presence, as although God the Father was on earth dwelling in the human body of Jesus of Nazareth, he was not recognized because the devil succeeded in blinding the minds of the unbelieving Jews of his time.

On our streets, in our offices, traveling with us in the same railway carriage, transacting all the ordinary business of life with us, are men and women whose minds are blinded by the great enemy that they should not see the light of the knowledge of the glory of "Christ who is the image of God" (II. Cor. 4: 4). And unknown to them are men and women in whose hearts the God who said, "Light be, and light was" (Gen. 1: 3), hath shined to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ! Light and darkness are side by side: the kingdom of God and the kingdom of this world's prince. The power of God's kingdom is his indwelling in the hearts of his own: the power of Satan's kingdom is also his indwelling in the hearts of the children of the wicked one.

The world "beholdeth him not, neither knoweth him, but ye know him, for he abideth with you and shall be in you." With you, in you, with disciples who could still strive which should be the greatest, still bargain, "We have left all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore?" (Matt. 19: 27), still deny him, still forsake him—in disciples who afterward were of one heart and one mind, neither said any among them "that ought of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common . . . and great grace was upon them all" (Acts 4: 32, 33). With them the Holy Spirit acted upon them: in them the Holy Spirit controlled and used them. The presence of the Holy Spirit, like the presence of Christ, cannot be hid. And where children of God are obliged to tell us they are filled with the Holy Ghost, the very necessity for such a statement raises the question whether, after all, they may not be mistaken.

The presence of the Holy Spirit within us is also the presence of Christ. He "shall be in you . . . I come unto you" (John 14: 17, 18). Strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith (Eph. 3: 16, 17). "Yet a little while and the world seeth me no more, but ye see me: because I live, ye shall live also. He shall be in you . . . I come unto you. He shall be in you, and my life shall be life to you, as the Father dwelling in me is life to me." "I live by [or because] of the Father" (John 6: 57). It is only as Holy Spirit dwells within us that we live by the life of Jesus: depending on him for spirit, soul and body, as he in his life as Man, depended upon his Father while all the power of the enemy was directed against him.

"In that day," the day when the Holy Spirit shall be in you, ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. In holy reverence, we may say that by the ministry of God the Holy Ghost dwelling in the hearts of the believing and obedient, they are made "partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust" (II. Pet. 1: 4), and thus is the very life of God which flows from the Head, the glorified Man, Christ Jesus, through the Spirit, to every member of his holy body. I in my Father, ye in me, I in you! O how holy is this mystery! What infinite grace that One so great and so holy should thus unite fallen man unto himself!

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

CHRIST'S teaching, in this passage following [illegible] what went before. He has been talking of believing: now he speaks of love. And he goes still another stage and speaks of obedience. So we get the three steps of the Christian life: faith, love and obedience. The product is peace. A whole philosophy of life is compressed into these few verses. To the young Christian setting out on the journey of life this compendium is invaluable. It contains that which men vainly seek in other religions, the power to live and act rightly, and the result is that beautiful, delightful serenity, which does more than anything else we know of, to make a man happy. Another secret is

THE ROOM IN WHICH, ACCORDING TO TRADITION, THE LAST SUPPER WAS EATEN

[illegible] came under discussion in the boys' room. One said it was legitimate, that it had always been done. Another said, "The doctor has forbidden it." Another said that the doctor would not know. It was impossible to detect the offence. But one of the leaders said: "If the doctor has forbidden it, that is enough for me. I could not bring myself to do a thing that [illegible] of his love than the tears he shed in his manhood over his beloved teacher's grave.

Another Comforter. Two words compose this word comfort, meaning, with strength. That is the sense in which Christ called the Holy Spirit, the Comforter. He gives power and energy. Many a man who has lost heart in his struggle with some evil habit, having been overcome in spite of his resistance, has besought the help of the Holy Spirit, and has renewed the fight with new power which has won the victory. He still has to continue the struggle, but no longer in his own might. God does not confer the victory upon him, but he gives him power to win. Like a man toiling hard with his oars and making no progress against the current, who hoists a sail and the wind carries the boat forward, the struggling Christian must put himself in the way of receiving divine aid.

Whom the world cannot receive. We should have expected that the word there would have been "will not receive." But Christ used the word cannot. It is true. When any one gives himself wholly to pleasure or ambition or avarice, he cannot receive the spirit of truth. It is related of a wealthy man, who in his youth put off the acceptance of Christ, that having made his fortune, and attained a period of rest and leisure, he deliberately set himself to become a Christian. The promises were as true as ever, Christ was willing as ever to receive him: but the man said sorrowfully: "I cannot feel: I cannot care for these things: I would give the world to feel as I once felt, but I cannot. I care only for my property and my position, and cannot bring myself to care for religion." His nature had become dense. The new Roentgen rays can penetrate wood or leather or even flesh, but they cannot penetrate glass. Its nature is impervious to them.

Bring all things to your remembrance. That promise explains the reports we have in the Gospels of Christ's sermons and arguments. The question is often asked by sceptical persons, how it was possible for the evangelists, writing so many years after Christ's death, to give so full a report, as they appear to do, of his words. This is the answer, for the promised Reminder was, as we know from Acts 2: 1-4, really sent. A man who was picked up from the wreck of the Central American, some years ago, said that while he was floating on the surface of the sea, expecting for hours that every minute would be his last, he heard distinctly a voice saying: "Did you eat your sister's grapes?" When a boy at home he had eaten some choice grapes which had been sent for a sick sister and, when questioned about it had lied. Twenty years had elapsed since that time and, he had never once recalled the circumstances, but in that hour his dormant memory awoke and reminded him of it.

My peace I give unto you. There has been no peace like that. Hated, ridiculed, reviled, beaten and finally murdered, it was unruffled to the end. Nothing could disturb his serenity, and it is this peace that he promises to give. Dr. Cuyler tells the story of a soldier lying mortally wounded on the field of Gettysburg, to whom an officer offered his services. Should he get him a drink of water? Would he like to send a message to his friends? "No," the dying man said: "I thank you, but I am dying, I want neither. If you would get the New Testament out of my haversack, I should be obliged to you." The officer found it. "Please turn to the fourteenth chapter of John. My eyes are misty with the shadow of death." The officer found the place. "Please read me that verse that speaks of peace." The officer read: "My peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you." The soldier's face was illumined. "It is true," he said: "he has kept his promise. I have that peace and it is better than all the blessings of life." He laid his hand on the open page and so he died.

. . Washington Presbytery's Tribute to Dr. Talmage . .

Many Eloquent Eulogies by an Assembly of Distinguished Pastors at the Nation's Capital—A Great Ministerial Life-work Fittingly Reviewed

AN important session of the Presbytery of Washington was held in the Gunton Temple Memorial Church in that city, a few days ago. There was a full attendance of well-known divines, and the chair was occupied by Rev. George S. Duncan, D.D., the Moderator of the Presbytery. After the transaction of some preliminary matters, the real business of the day was taken up.

Rev. Dr. Talmage, in a brief address, tendered his resignation to the Presbytery as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. He spoke as follows:

After a delightful pastorate in the First Presbyterian Church of this city, I now ask for the dissolution of the pastoral relation. For a long while I have felt called to a more general work than a fixed pastorate allows, but I have not before now seen the way clear to undertake it. The demands of religious journalism upon me have greatly increased, and my opportunities for religious service in other directions have been greatly multiplied. I do not propose to stop preaching, but if the Lord permits, I will preach more than I ever have preached. After a few more weeks of comparative rest from ab orbing work, I hope to be very busy.

In closing my service in the First Presbyterian Church, I wish to express the delight I have had in Gospel work, and in friendships that will last for time and eternity. I have had full and unhindered way of declaring the whole counsel of God, and what a joy it has been to me to offer the mercy and comfort of the Gospel Sabbath by Sabbath to the people! It has been to me a great satisfaction that I have been upheld by the unanimous support of the official Boards of the Church, and they have reinforced me in everything I have proposed.

Meanwhile the acquaintanceships I have formed with the members of churches of all denominations is something for which I thank God and thank them. It will be a matter of rejoicing to me forever that I pitched my tent in this glorious capital.

I desire to retain membership in this Presbytery, and I will not allow this occasion to pass without saying that though I have belonged to various ecclesiastical bodies, in none of them have I found a more consecrated and genial brotherhood than in this Presbytery, and I pray the blessing of God upon these brethren and the people of their charge, and I hope we may often meet in fields of Christian usefulness, and when our work is done meet in the great harvest home when the sheaves come in, and "the reapers are the angels." When we see "the King in his beauty" we will realize how very poor was our best earthly service.

At the conclusion of Dr. Talmage's remarks, which were received with much feeling by those present, brief addresses were delivered by Mr. T. F. Sargent and Mr. C. L. DuBois, elders of the church. Both spoke in behalf of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church. Mr. DuBois spoke as follows:

Address of Mr. DuBois

To the Presbytery of Washington:

BRETHREN: As Commissioner from the First Presbyterian Church, I beg to make the following report:

The session of our church received from Dr. Talmage notice of his resignation on Thursday evening, March 9th last, requesting an early meeting of the congregation to act upon it. By order of the session, notice of such meeting was duly given from the pulpit on Sabbath morning, March 12th, and pursuant to this notice a me ting of the congregation was held Thursday evening, March 16th, Rev. Mr. Stuchell presiding, all the business being conducted in due form in compliance with the provisions of our form of government. A motion was made and adopted that the request of Dr. Talmage be acquiesced in, although the sentiment among those present showed that the dissolution thus asked was very reluctantly granted. General regret was expressed at the necessity which Dr. Talmage felt impelling him to make the demand for the severance of the pastoral relation. As a member of both boards of our Church (Elders and Trustees), I feel it incumbent upon me to say a word or two in regard to the pastorate of this distinguished divine in Washington.

After reaching Washington, his first interviews and intercourse were with the Elders and Trustees to consult in regard to the work of the church, and we were all impressed with the importance and providential character of his acceptance of the call to our church, as it was a time in our history when we needed assistance greatly, especially in our financial matters, which were fast assuming very serious proportions. We were quickly made to feel in these interviews and conferences that there was no doubt as to the sincerity of the Doctor's wish to advance the prosperity of the cause of Christ in our midst. One of his remarks was: "What I think you need, brethren, is a good old-fashioned revival!" His frank statement at the outset that he did not come to our church to supplant any one; that he would not have the time to attend to such pastoral duties as calling upon any member of the church, and that his visits among the congregation would not be as extensive as he would like owing to the heavy demands upon his time, was accepted and understood by us, and the utmost harmony between himself and the officials of the church was thus established and prevailed to the end of his pastorate.

A GREAT LIFE WORK

Dr. Talmage's great life work and its results need no eulogium from me. They are written in the lives of thousands of Christian men and women who have been led to Christ by his eloquent pleadings and remarkable presentment of the truths of the Gospel.

His work in our church has had beneficent results. Whenever in the city he came to the mid-week meetings, and by his encouraging and inspiring presence, as Dr. Sunderland once remarked after prayer-meeting, "lifted up the whole meeting and put new life into it." His impressive way of conducting the communion services made every occasion of this kind a memorable one and thrilled every one present with a new fervor for the great cause.

SOME PASTORAL RESULTS

In alluding to results attending his pastorate here it must be borne in mind that the great throngs which packed our church to the doors at every sermon, were in most part from the outside: strangers or visitors from other churches, so that the seed sown in their hearts may have borne fruit in distant lands and in sister churches in this city. As for the immediate effect upon our own church membership, it is sufficient for me to point to the fact that at our annual meeting this year, our stated clerk, Mr. Dalrymple, in announcing the number on the church roll of membership, said it was the highest figure ever reached since his connection with the church, extending back some twenty years.

It is with profound sorrow that we take leave of him—he who has made his home with us for four years, and we feel that we have been singularly blessed in having for a spiritual guide one who has made so many thousands happy by his teachings. We are, however, grateful to a kind Providence that ours have been the altar-fires he has caused to flame with such brightness by his presence, and thankful that he is still with us and, as we understand, will be a member of our Presbytery for a long time to come.

The old First Church bids its retiring pastor God-speed and with a grateful appreciation of his wondrous work and achievements for Christ it proffers to him its warmest wishes for a long life of usefulness and the richest blessings that heaven can grant.

Many others spoke in terms of the highest praise of the retiring pastor's good work, not in Washington only, but in many other parts of the Union, wherever his spoken and printed eloquence reached. Rev. Thomas Chalmers Eaton, pastor of the Eastern Church, spoke at some length and his address was listened to with the deepest attention. He said:

Rev. Dr. Chalmers' Speech

MR. MODERATOR: I desire to say a few words upon this matter. The dissolution of the pastoral relation between the First Presbyterian Church and the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D. Twenty years and over have passed since the friendship between us was formed, and of course, this event to-day has a special interest to me. Our relations have been most pleasant during these years. It may not be known to many that when Dr. Talmage came to this city, there were invitations from all parts of the world to have the privilege and honor of his precious ministrations. Melbourne, Australia; Toronto, Canada; San Francisco, Calif.; Louisville, Ky.; Chicago, Ill.; New York City; Brooklyn, N. Y.; London, the great metropolis of the British Empire pledged him that a much larger and finer edifice than Spurgeon's Tabernacle would be erected for him.

A CONTEST OF MANY CITIES

All these cities promised to erect more spacious places of worship than the Brooklyn Tabernacle, if he came to them. But these were all waived aside, and he came to the First Church during a peculiar crisis, and for four years has given to it his best efforts.

But the pain of this action in his retiring from the First Church, is mitigated by the fact that he leaves this narrow circle for a far wider area of Christian work, and where his consecrated pen will be used more effec ively than ever in religious journalism.

His attentions are to be given more fully to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of which he is the editor—that marvelous religious paper, which stands unexcelled by any other product from the press of America. Its circulation is unparalleled among the religious press. At the close of last year it issued over a million free copies as samples of the brilliant genius, the matchless poetic fervor, the thrilling pathos and relentless logic of this great Master in Israel.

Wherever the English tongue is spoken or read, through all Christendom, his sermons are read as no other pulpit productions are read. In the Imperial Palace of Russia; Q een Olga, in the Royal Palace at Athens, Greece, and Queen Victoria, in her Highland home at Balmoral, Scotland—all delight in his brilliant discourses. Although he now leaves the First Church, he will still remain with us as a Presbyterian, and his home will continue to be in this city, the Capital of the nation.

DR. TALMAGE'S WIDER FIELD

He will have an opportunity to practice his long cherished desire of mingling with all other denominations, and, in accordance with his broad catholic spirit, his voice will be heard in Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Congregational and other pulpits. The nation, as a whole, has long claimed him as its preacher—the people's favored and beloved minister! His voice will still ring out the old Gospel in loving, pleading earnestness. He has endeared himself to thousands in this city not of his own church because he has been alive to the interests of the people and foremost champion in every phase of Christian reform in uplifting man and exalting Jesus Christ. His coming years will be beyond doubt the best of his life, and I believe that, like Samson of old, when he grasped the pillars of the temple and slew more in his death than in his life, so this deeply beloved and highly honored servant of God will, when he goes to his rest, find the glorious fruits of his ministry transcending all finite comprehension.

Rev. Dr. Stuchell's Remarks

Dr. Easton's address created a profound impression upon his auditors, many of whom were visibly affected. He was followed by Rev. Dr. Stuchell, who spoke with great earnestness and much eloquence. He said:

I never spoke to Dr. Talmage until last spring, but I have known him since the days of my childhood, when I used to forego the play or lay aside the tales of adventure, and in the company of my grandfather, revel in the fascinating imagery and the superb style of the renowned Brooklyn preacher. That grandfather had heard many of the greatest preachers of his time, but his repeated verdict was, "I tell you, Johnny, he is the most original preacher I ever read." Some of his magnificent descriptions are as much a part of my mental furniture as the recollection of my own acts.

THE VERDICT OF PROSPERITY

The esteem so begun has changed only to increase. We are all prone to hero-worship—or at any rate, I pity the man who is not—and I will confess to you now, that the eloquent preacher upon whose words the thousands hung, has a sincere and ardent admirer, though an obscure one, in me. I have traveled over the length and breadth of this land a good deal, and, while from a clergyman who could not get a congregation, and from laymen jealous of success, I have hear l harsh criticism, I have learned that Dr. Talmage has the ear of the people, and, what is more, the heart of the people. Whether in the palace of Chicago or San Francisco, or amidst the ignorance of the lonely hills, or the crudities of a mining camp, makes no difference; the delight with which his sermons are read was expressed by a plain man, who said to me away off in the mountains, "I would rather read them than a novel." And the man who believes that such religious productions can be read without great good resulting, utters a sad disparagement of the activity of the Holy Ghost.

You may remember that Southey consoled himself for the ill success of his poetry contrasted with that of Scott, by the reflection that a discerning posterity would cherish his writings long after those of his rival had sunk into oblivion. You would perceive how just his conclusion may have been were I to ask the brethren who among them has read his Joan of Arc, or his Vision of Judgment, and then ask who has read Scott's Marmion or Lady of the Lake. In like manner, I venture to say, that some who now are flattering themselves that after ages will exalt them, when their distinguished brother is submerged, are preparing for a grievous disappointment, should a glimpse from spirit-land be permitted them.

A FAME THAT TOUCHES EVERY LAND

A future age will value Dr. Talmage even more highly than we do, and I expect to have to extenuate even more than I have already been compelled to do, a fact that I regard as a singular impropriety in our Presbyterianism, that, in the assortment of prizes, Dr. Talmage the one man we have whose fame is in all lands—has never been the Moderator of our General Assembly. We boast of the similarity of our church to the republic. I fear that we must share in the censure that the greatest men are not called to its seats of honor—and my appreciation of the present Moderator of the Assembly is so well known, that I need not pause to qualify the statement.

This is not the time for one to make a formal estimate of my famous colleague. Some day, if God spare me, I promise myself to do so at length. But, Mr. Moderator, I trust that the brethren will not misunderstand me if in the ears of a living man I utter a tribute many might reserve as a panegyric for the dead. The success of our brother is due to no mere novelty of method, but to an innate force of genius that would have won distinction in many lines of activity. He is possessed of a mastery of language that would have amazed a Johnson; a picturesqueness of style of which Macaulay would not have been ashamed; a vividness of presentation that in art might have produced a Turner, and a command of imagery that in a poet would have ranked him with Wordsworth and Tennyson. I am satisfied that he has exerted a tremendous influence for good on the church, the ministry and the country at large—an influence greatest, perhaps, where it has been unfelt.

A WORD TO THE CRITICS

I am not surprised that all do not like him any more than I am surprised that Whitefield was hooted through the streets and Spurgeon denounced as a babbler and Beecher as a demagogue; nor shall I be greatly astonished if at a future day those four shall rank together as the characteristic preachers of the nineteenth century.

Temperament decides much for us, though I cannot but wonder at the uncharitableness of those who condemn all with whom they disagree. In such a case, condemnation is self-condemnation.

If you will indulge me a little on this occasion, I would like to say a word about our personal relations. Those who know me know that I abhor flattery. I am indifferent to the judgment of the rest, nor shall their ungenerous suspicions deter me from speaking what I think, though I am well aware a calculating prudence might redound to my immediate advantage. I would have hesitated long ere I became a sistant to another man after having had a church of my own, but in this case I felt that by such a position I honored myself.

AN ASSOCIATE'S HEARTY EULOGIUM

I have felt it a privilege to be associated with Dr. Talmage, and after an intimacy that some might think incompatible with admiration, I say calmly that I admire him more to-day than I ever did. As Paul treated Timothy, so has he treated me. By patient considerateness and generous praise, he has rendered pleasant a situation that would otherwise have been trying if not unendurable. In the great man I have found a father in the Gospel, and though after this temporary conjunction I may return to the obscurity whence I came, I shall carry with me a recollection of this benevolence that was not in word only, but in deed; of this whole-souled cordiality that forgot inequality of position in kindliness of friendship. It has been to me an opportunity for which I shall ever be grateful to listen to his sermons, so instructive in matter, so vivid in conception and delivery, so true to the old Gospel.

I regret this step of the Doctor because I see in it the parting of the ways that have led to so pleasant a fellowship, and the last of his relations with an individual church; and yet I rejoice in it, and I have no fear that he will misunderstand me in saying so.

THE WHOLE COUNTRY CLAIMS HIM

When a man reaches his years and his fame, it is scarcely fair that the precious time that would delight thousands should be spent in the routine duties of a single pastorate; the country at large, that has read his productions and followed his movements, has a kind of a claim upon him. The First Church has felt privileged to have its auditorium crowded, Sunday after Sunday, by people from all over the world, to hear the old, old story with new freshness and charm, and to return to invigorate and bless their particular homes. I therefore rejoice that the Doctor is freeing himself from this field that the country may be his field, and that it is to reap the benefit of that personal contact which it has hitherto been our especial and selfish privilege to enjoy. Of his generosity to the church I will not now speak, but unt l gratitude be dead it will be a theme of grateful recollection for all.

My hope is that these, the latter days of our brother, may be copiously blessed; that the clouds may flee from an untroubled sky; that the twilight may be long and serene, and that hereafter his soul may be rejoiced by the thousands in bright array, who, won by his tireless efforts and his consecrated eloquence, shall crowd to the heavenly portals to meet him and to bring him with the "abundant entrance" to the presence of his God.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

The Peace Conference

THE conference suggested by the Czar of Russia will soon take place. What will be the outcome? Probably no one expects anything radical. It will be a peace conference. The possible disarmament of nations, the absolute need of some standing army in all nations, discountenancing all competition and rivalry as to the size of standing armies, the obligation upon so-called Christian nations, to favor adjustment of differences by arbitration: these, doubtless, will be some of the topics discused. Only God can see how great may be its results.

It will be a great thing to turn the world's thought to these subjects: to study the things that make for peace: to look at the progress that the principle of arbitration has been making, to consider the predictions of the prophets of God: even if we do no more. The fact of such a conference will set up a milestone in the history of the world. The possibility of attaining the end desired will be considered. It will not be an empty thing for the representatives of the great Christian nations to meet and to consider whether they can not unitedly help to hasten on the day when Milton's lines in the Hymn to the Nativity shall be fulfilled:

Is heard the earth around."

Too Many Bosses

THE trouble is that all classes of men have those among them who want to be bosses. The most of the capitalists do not think for themselves: the most of the laborers do not think for themselves. There are boss capitalists and boss laborers who want their way. Indeed, the human family is divided into two classes—those who boss, and those who get bossed. Capital will never help itself by fighting labor, and labor will never get any advantage from combating capital. They go up together, or they go down together. But there is no doubt that in all parts of the land capitalists are imposing upon labor. They own the legislatures with a few notable exceptions. We have over five thousand millionaires in this country. It is a bad sign of the times when one man dies worth forty millions, and another worth eighty millions, and our richest men are not dead yet. It wants no very great wisdom to see that there are people in this land who have more than their share. I do not wonder that sometimes men lose their equilibrium and strike, although it is unwise to strike, since a strike means less bread, less fuel, less good clothes. I suppose that many of our trade-unions are wielding a despotism, and that workmen are stopped, and driven, and imposed upon as much by people of their own craft as by the capitalists. If a man has a mind to stop work, let him stop: but he has no right to stop me. If a man prefer to go to the poor house, let him go: but he has no right to compel me to go along with him. I expect before labor gets its rights fully established in this county it will have to drive back the encroachments of capital on the one hand, and the outrageous despotism of "trades-unions" on the other.

The Morning Cometh

GOD'S capacity to bless this nation is not exhausted, and though there may be temporary depressions, I am confident that the next decade will eclipse all other decades of our American history. Greater harvests, larger storehouses, busier foundries, better schools and mightier churches are to characterize the future. It is not a time for Jeremiahs, with their book of lamentations, but a time for Isaiahs, who forecast millenniums with a child holding the halter of the lion, and the den of the serpent turned into an infantile play-house. Many good people that I see are all the time like nervous persons in a rail-train when the whistle blows for down brakes, because a cow has the track, and they hold their breath and shut their eyes, sure something will happen. As for myself I have taken a through ticket and have full confidence in the hand and eye that engineer this world, and I do not propose to put my head out of the window against the rocks, or frantically pull the rope to stop the train. It is God that lifteth up one, and pulleth down another, and we are on the way to the time when the round earth will bloom like Chatsworth Conservatory. I know it. I do not guess it. I know it. So when I find minister or layman who would shadow us with his lugubriosity, I say to him as Diogenes said to Alexander: "Stand out of my sunshine!" I can easily see how men of the world can become disheartened about the nation and about the world: but how a Christian can be disheartened, with the Bible crowded with the ecstasy of a rejuvenated and disenthralled world, is to me an amazement.

The Value of Farm Animals

THE statistician of the Department of Agriculture will shortly issue his annual report of the number and value of farm animals in the United States. With the use of bicycles, electric and other traction railroads, it is not strange that the number of horses has been reduced 295,604. It is remarkable, however, that this decrease in number has been attended by an increase in total value of $32,712,406: the average value of the animals advancing from $34.26 to $37.30 per head. There has also been a decrease of 1,269,972 meat animals, not including milch cows, but an increase of $25,634,501 in total value, or an increase of from $20.92 to $22.79 a head. The total value of farm animals is estimated at $1,997,010,407, it being an increase of $108,355,482, or 5.74 per cent.

The ministrations of these four-footed friends of man is often not noticed. Christianity makes better men and women. Better themselves, they treat God's creatures better. They recognize that they owe a debt to their Creator for that portion of his works that bears a part of their burdens, as they cultivate the earth and make glad the desert-places.

Baroness Hirsch's Charities

Her Princely Gifts to the Needy—Her Wealth a Sacred Trust—The Record of a Noble Life

IN the death of Baroness Clara de Hirsch, who passed away at her home in Paris recently, the world loses one who deserves to be ranked among the noblest women of the century. The greater part of her life, no less than that of her distinguished husband, who died three years ago, was devoted to works of the grandest and most disinterested philanthropy, and the vast fortunes they possessed were the means of ameliorating the condition of a great multitude of the poor and suffering, not of their own race alone, but of others, regardless of religious faith. Both were striking examples of the splendid generosity of the Hebrew character, which spares not its wealth to accomplish its purpose, when the end sought is a noble one, and which is ever ready to respond to the appeal of the lowly and the outcast. Their philanthropy was world-wide, and together they expended millions of dollars with a lavish freedom that has rarely been paralleled. Those princely benefactions were not confined to the Hebrews: though they were the recipients of the most munificent gifts; for, as Baron Hirsch once explained: "they had the least chance in the world, and were the most oppressed of all races." During his lifetime, it is estimated that not less than fifty millions of dollars were disbursed in worthy charitable and benevolent enterprises, and both he and his wife were constantly endeavoring to lighten the burdens and the miseries of the poor. The Baroness made personal tours of the slums and poorest quarters of every large city in Europe, and having a thorough knowledge of German, English, French, Russian, Spanish and Italian, was able to talk with the people, and map out and carry into operation the best and most practical remedial measures.

It was during the great Jewish exodus from Russia, that the attention of the Baron and Baroness was first directed toward the United States as the country that promised to afford the most available refuge for the exiles. He placed several million dollars in the hands of trustees here to be expended in the establishment of farming and industrial colonies in desirable sections of the country, and the result has been such as to amply justify his expenditures. Since her husband's death, Baroness Hirsch has carried forward all his benevolent enterprises with unabated energy. Colony after colony has been planted, and many have grown to thriving proportions. Trades schools, kindergartens, nurseries, and similar institutions have also been opened under her patronage, and supported by her wealth, and these have been the means of incalculable benefit to thousands of poor, ignorant Russian, Roumanian and Polish immigrants arriving on our shores.

Baroness Hirsch, before her marriage (which took place in her twenty-second year), was a Miss Bischoffscheim, a daughter of Senator Bischoffscheim, the celebrated banker of Brussels. She was a lady of remarkable business talents, and for several years was her father's secretary. She gave personal attention to the minutest details of the management of her own large fortune, as well as that of her husband's estate. In the highest sense, she was a faithful steward, and regarded her great riches as a sacred trust, to be used to the glory of God and for the benefit of humanity. In recent years, she gave large sums to the cause of charity in the United States: but these formed only a fraction of her whole work, much of which was done in secret and was unrevealed till after her death. It was learned, only after she had passed away, that she had made generous provision for establishing on a broader and more substantial basis, all the charities which she and her husband had founded here, and that a very large portion of her estate would be devoted to this specific purpose. Not long ago she gave a million dollars to the fund for aiding poor Hebrews; another gift was the purchase of a commodious building, costing $150,000, for the Charities School in New York founded by her late husband, and still another donation was $100,000 to pay the debt on the Hebrew Educational Alliance [illegible] to worthy charities, and invariably stipu- [illegible] was 1,000,000 francs to the Pasteur Institute in Paris; another, 1,000,000 to found an asylum for railroad employees in Turkey, and princely endowments were privately provided for hospitals in different European capitals.

One of her latest benefactions was the Clara de Hirsch Home for Working Girls, in New York City, the building for which is now in course of erection in East Sixty-third Street. This Home, while intended as a refuge and training-school for young Hebrew girls, will also open its doors to Christians, Protestants and Catholics alike. It has been regularly incorporated, and Mrs. Straus, the wife of our ex-Minister to Turkey, Hon. Oscar S. Straus, is its president. In the management are represented some of the leading Hebrew families in the city. The building will cost $200,000, and there will be an annual endowment of $12,000

On the first page of this issue is a strikingly life-like portrait of the Baroness de Hirsch, reproduced from the only photograph of that lady in this country, and which was loaned to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by its possessor as a very special favor indeed. Our other illustrations are from photographs taken expressly for this journal, of the Baron de Hirsch Agricultural and Industrial School at Woodbine, N. J. This school, founded in 1891, is the only one of its kind in existence in the United States. The faculty includes Prof. H. L. Sabsovich, M.A., Superintendent, and Messrs. Gravatt, Kotinsky, Pincus, Schmidt, Brailowsky and Jaffe. [illegible] generation of intelligent Jewish farmers. Tuition is free for all regular students. The schedule of studies covers three years, and embraces everything needful in the line of modern practical farm-work. The land is divided into eight small model farms, the greater part of them being now under cultivation. On the settlement grounds are excellent dwellings, schoolhouse, barns, poultry houses, greenhouses and workshops, and there is a substantially-built brick synagogue. Some of the products of the Woodbine colonists have already taken prizes at the New Jersey agricultural fairs.

The Czar's Peace Congress

OUR country will be well represented at the Czar's disarmament Congress, which will meet at the Hague on May 18. The President's selections of delegates have been received with approval by all parties. They comprise two diplomats: Mr. Andrew D. White, our ambassador to Germany, and Mr. Stanford Newel, our minister at the Hague; two experienced authorities on war: Capt. Crozier of the army and Capt. Mahan of the navy; and one private citizen of municipal distinction, Mr. Seth Low, President of Columbia University. To these must be added the name of Frederick W. Holls, a New York lawyer, who will accompany the delegation in the capacity of secretary. It is reported that the delegates have been instructed by the Government to refrain from pledging this country to any agreement to abide by the decisions of the Congress, as its comparative isolation places it in a situation very different from European nations. It is also stated that they have been advised to concentrate their efforts on getting some system of arbitration adopted, rather than on a scheme of disarmament. The discussions, which have taken place since the Czar's proposal of a Congress was issued, show that disarmament was not contemplated. The utmost that was hoped for, was an agreement among the powers to cease increasing their armaments and to pledge themselves not to adopt any new inventions designed to increase the destructive capacity of their arms. This programme, if it were adopted by the Congress, would give assurance to the world that for a definite term of years the maximum development of warlike preparations had been reached, and the ruinous competition of nation with nation in military and naval expenditure was suspended. It would be a comparatively small step in the direction of the ideal condition when men shall learn war no more, but even that is not likely to be achieved by the Congress. Several nations have already shown their reluctance to enter into such an agreement and it has been pointed out that it would operate to the advantage of Russia, as compared with the other powers. It would enable her to apply the money saved from specific armaments to the completion of her Asiatic railroad system which is really a strategic scheme intended for warlike purposes. If the other powers realize this fact, they will probably reject the proposal which is the very basis of all discussion. Our own project is much more practicable and feasible. If a court of arbitration could be organized which would command the confidence of the powers, they would naturally diminish their armaments, which would then become a useless burden. By no other way is it probable that peace could be secured, until that time comes predicted by the prophets when all nations shall voluntarily submit to the rule of the Prince of Peace:

He shall judge among many peoples and rebuke strong nations from afar off (Micah 4: 3).

The Nation's Dead

The scene witnessed in the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., on April 6th, will never be forgotten by any one who saw it. In that beautiful inclosure, where so many of the heroes of our civil war are interred, 336 coffins were placed, each containing the remains of an officer or private who fell in Cuba or Porto Rico. By a special order of the President, they had been brought from those islands that they might rest in American soil. National honors were paid without stint to the dead heroes. The President, the members of his Cabinet, representatives of both branches of Congress and of the Government departments attended the solemn ceremony. Besides these, were Gen. Miles and other army officers, the regiments now in Washington, and a great crowd of citizens, estimated at fully ten thousand. Chaplain Freeland conducted the Protestant service, and Father McGee the service over the remains of the Roman Catholics. They were characterized by military brevity, and at their conclusion three volleys were fired by the troops. The ceremony ended with "Taps," the military signal used in the field for retirement to rest. Over each casket were the folds of the American flag. Each grave will have a stone at the head, on which—in every case where it is known—the name of the soldier in the grave will be inscribed. It is all that the nation can do for those who have fallen, fighting in its cause. But they who serve the King of kings, will have a better reward which only the Giver of life has power to bestow:

Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life (Rev. 2: 10).

THE "HOUSE IN THE WOODS," MEETING PLACE OF THE CONGRESS

Two Fatal Fires

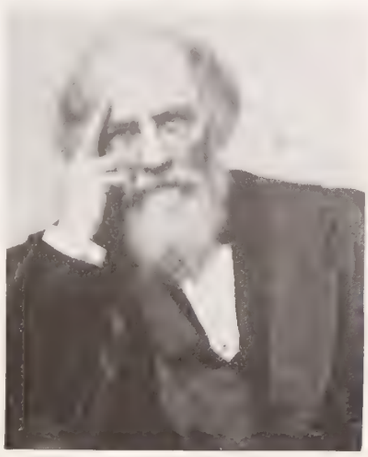
Still another holocaust occurred in New York last week, in which as in the Windsor Hotel horror, the victims belonged to the wealthy class. Two houses in an aristocratic quarter of the city and within three blocks of a station of the Fire Department, were burned in the night and thirteen of the occupants perished. One of the houses was occupied by Mr. Wallace C. Andrews, his wife, and his sister-in-law and her three children. All these died in the fire, and with them six domestic servants. At the second fire, which broke out only two blocks away, about half an hour after that in the Andrews' mansion, one woman was burned to death while arousing the other inmates. All the others escaped. One of them was rescued by the bravery of a policeman, who volunteered to swing himself from the ledge of a window in an adjoining house, while firemen prevented his falling by grasping his feet. While suspended in this dangerous position, he grasped the wrist of a girl at the window of the burning house and lifted her out of the flames. There is some suspicion that one or both fires were of incendiary origin, or were due to the carelessness of some employee; but the firemen think that the first fire was caused by defects in the flue from the kitchen chimney, and that the second fire was caused by sparks from the first. It is remarkable that these fires should have occurred in the homes of the rich, who were able to have their houses constructed in the safest way. If they had been frame houses owned and occupied by poor people, there would have been less cause for surprise. The lamentable fatality will probably stir others who can afford it, to take measures for protection against fire. It would be well, too, if these terribly sudden deaths caused people to seek that salvation which death cannot take away, and that, too, the rich need as well as the poor:

Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God (1 Tim. 6: 17).

A Great Jurist Dead

A distinguished and romantic career closed on April 9, when Stephen J. Field, formerly Justice of the United States Supreme Court, departed this life. Mr. Field had been in comparatively good health since his retirement from the bench in December, 1897, and seemed to have gained strength by his release from judicial duties; but he caught cold during the month of March, and a chronic ailment developed which has proved fatal. He was one of four brothers, of whom only one, Dr. Henry M. Field, formerly editor of the Evangelist in New York, now survives. Two other brothers who became famous were David Dudley Field and Cyrus W. Field, whose connection with the Atlantic Cable has immortalized his name. Stephen Field was trained for the legal profession in the office of his brother David, and entered into partnership with him. But when the excitement consequent on the discovery of gold in California thrilled the country in 1849, Stephen Field, then thirty-three years old and in vigorous health, decided to go out there. He was almost penniless when he landed at San Francisco, but he soon made friends, and in a short time was appointed Alcalde, or Mayor, of the mining district of Marysville, and subsequently was elected to the Legislature. In 1857 he was elected Judge of the Supreme Court of California. His decisions were notable for their courage and breadth of view. Although a Democrat, and one who never concealed his political faith, he had the support of Republicans as well as Democrats when President Lincoln nominated him for the Supreme Court in 1863. His resignation, after a distinguished service of thirty-four years, elicited eulogiums from men of all parties, who, even when they had differed with him, admired the integrity, sincerity and courage which characterized his whole career. He was the kind of judge who has been honored in every land and time; whose qualities were those required by the great Law-giver:

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment; thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honor the person of the mighty, but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbor (Levit. 19: 15).



THE LATE STEPHEN J. FIELD

A Lawyer's Devotion

A pathetic plea was made recently in the Court of Claims in Washington, D.C., by a lawyer who asked that a certain case in which he was to appear, might be taken out of its regular order and given precedence over other cases on file. His reason was that he was suffering from a deadly malady, and that the doctors had informed him that he could not live more than a month. He added that he had peculiar personal reasons for closing out the case, and that he was the only man living who could complete it. The court consented to hear the claim at once. Despite his weakened condition, the lawyer made an able argument in behalf of his client, but at its conclusion he left the courtroom in evident distress. The prediction of his physician in regard to the duration of his life was true, for he died before a decision was handed down, and did not have the gratification of knowing that he had won the case. He had, however, the consciousness of having done his duty, which to such a man would be very gratifying. Such self-forgetfulness shows true greatness; and its highest example we find as we do other noble traits of character in its highest development—in him who, in death, forgot his own suffering in his concern for his murderers.

Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do (Luke 23: 24).

Calling Down an Avalanche

A court officer relates in the Rocky Mountain News an extraordinary experience, showing the power of the human voice in those mountain solitudes. In the course of an excursion into the region above Georgetown, he says, he stayed for dinner at the cabin of a friend. The snow was very deep and there had been some dangerous slides. His host urged him to remain, but he was anxious to proceed and set out soon after the meal. After he crossed the canon he turned to look at the scene. Opposite to him, on the other side of the canon, he could see his host and his wife standing in the doorway of their cabin watching him. He waved his hand to them, and, without thinking of the possible results, he shouted "Good-by." Hardly had the echoes of his voice died away, before a muffled sound struck the ear—a noise like the boom of a cannon—and the whole side of the mountain seemed to be in motion. The snow, ice, trees and rocks started toward the bottom of the gulch, and within five seconds the cabin was buried under fifty feet of snow. He summoned assistance as quickly as it could be done, and they frantically dug out the two dead bodies. "I have never," he writes, "forgiven myself for the word which I shouted on that never-to-be-forgotten day." Few men have cause for self-reproach of that kind; but how many there are whose heedless words have caused spiritual ruin to some soul.

But I say unto you that every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof at the day of judgment (Matt. 12: 36).

. . . The Protector and Benefactor of Helpless Children . . .

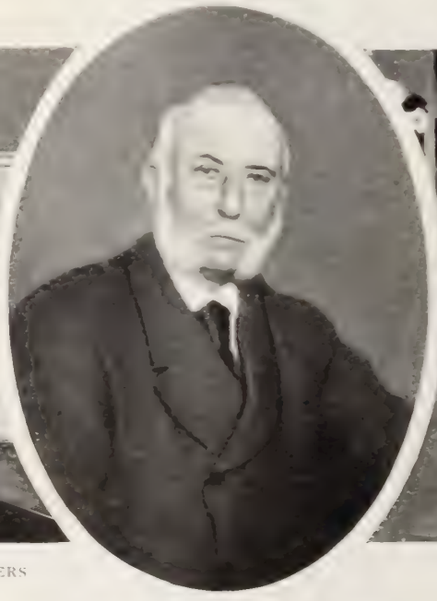
The Work of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Illustrated by Photographs, Taken Specially for "The Christian Herald" by Joseph H. Adams

NADDI AND DOMENICO, CHILD BEGGARS

AMONG the numerous philanthropic and benevolent institutions of the metropolis, there is none which appeals with greater force to human sympathy, or whose field of operations affords greater opportunity for work of a character to command public appreciation than the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. For a quarter of a century this beneficent organization has labored energetically in behalf of the moral and physical well-being of the children of the very poor, of the criminal and of the outcasts of society—those helpless little ones who, in the very nature of things, would naturally gravitate to idleness and vice, and if they lived to reach adult age, would in all human likelihood, go to swell the great army of the untrained, the pauper, the shiftless and the criminal. Such a task would indeed seem to be an appalling one, in view of the vast numbers involved; yet the records of our public courts of justice no less than the books of the Society itself, show how well the undertaking has been accomplished, in view of the Society's limited resources and the widely-extended territory in which it operates. Many thousands of such children, once hapless waifs, now grown to respectable and self-supporting manhood and womanhood, live to bless the agency which rescued them from lives that seemed to be predestined to misery and degradation.

It is not a Society for the dispensing of charity, nor for the feeding and sheltering of the hungry and the homeless. It is a branch of the law itself, and was created for the enforcement of the law, that unfortunate and ill-used children might be plucked from atmospheres of poverty and crime, and placed where they would not be at the mercy of cruel, depraving, and brutalizing influences. It is supported by the contributions of those who love its work, by fines imposed upon offenders, and by receipts [illegible] public money is applied to its work. In addition to this, it receives and takes to court any children coming into its custody, frequently to the number of 600 a month. Its own wagon takes and brings them back, when not discharged. [illegible] year it so cared for over 8,000 children. It maintains two officers in every police court, who, upon magisterial order, investigate and report on applications for the commitment of children. In twenty-four years it has investigated 121,6[illegible] complaints, involving 363,162 children; 47,798 cases have been [illegible] rescued and relieved. It prepares a brief for the District Attorney's office in every case where an indictment is found. These and many other interesting features of the Society's work are set forth in the latest annual report of its President, Mr. Elbridge T. Gerry.

THE DINNER HOUR AT THE SOCIETY'S HEADQUARTERS



PRESIDENT ELBRIDGE T. GERRY

THE S. P. C. C. OFFICES, NEW YORK

The Society has the power to compel a rigid enforcement of all the laws relating to children, and to bring the violators of those laws into court and ask that they be punished. Should the case demand such action, it has also the power to take children who have been victims of such violation of law from the control of the violators, and place them under proper protection. It receives on commitment, at its own expense, all children charged with the commission of crime, who otherwise would be sent to the city prison, and children who are the victims of physical violence or held as witnesses pending the prosecution of a criminal. Children brought to the Society, when victims of physical violence, often require medical attention.

Our photographic artist, during a visit to the Society's headquarters at No. 297 Fourth avenue, New York, has caught with his camera a number of illustrations which are eloquently descriptive of the character of the work. Among its little beneficiaries are wee tots who have been beaten to a condition of permanent deformity, who have been starved, who have been driven out to beg on the public streets, who have been compelled to do inhuman labor, to carry burdens fit for strong men, or who have been sent out in rags and tatters, to grow up in the gutter and pick their food out of the ash-heaps. Some of these cases are among the saddest imaginable. Little limbs turned and twisted; backs black and blue all over with hideous welts, the souvenirs of some drunken mother or brutal father; others with their bones sticking through the skin like moving skeletons, the result of dirt and malnutrition. Some have been trained to thievery, though little older than babies, and others to evoke sympathy and coin by a pitiful, lying tale, learned by rote from a stern taskmaster. A few are victims of the padrone system, that species of human slavery which is found in the Italian quarter. Many are orphans and totally destitute. Others are children who have been sold by some heartless mother or unscrupulous midwife. Still others are the child victims of lazy and worthless parents or other relatives who send them to work though under age, that they may profit by the labor of the little ones in close factories and pestiferious tenements. A few are young incorrigibles, whom the parents have given up in despair and who have already given evidence of vicious qualities, which, if allowed to mature, would make them dangerous enemies of society. Some are girls who have been initiated into a life of vice at a tender age by contact with the frequenters of low dives and dens with which certain sections of the city abound.

A few cases, taken from the records of the Society for the past year, illustrate the nature and infinite variety of the work.

Johnny S——, aged thirteen, was found intoxicated in the streets. Another little lad was beaten by his mother until he became a mass of blood and bruises.

Eddie B——, a lame boy, aged thirteen, was peddling illegal articles in saloons, being sent out by a drunken father. Willie F——, aged eight, the child of criminal parents, was sent to the Society by his father, while his mother lay dying, the victim of brutality. Ione, the little daughter of a professional gambler, appealed to the Society to save her from bad surroundings and an evil life. Tessie, James and Frank B——, were taken after their mother had been murdered by a fiendish father. Two children were taken, parents both drunken, the mother at the time lying with her eyes blackened, and her children hungry and unattended. Johnny D—— said: "Me fader and mudder is dead, an' I has to sleep in wagons," so the Society took the little seven-year-old under its protecting wing. Hannah S——, a girl, was frequently in vile Bowery dens and was ungovernable and wayward. She was taken just in time. Another little lad, aged three, was abandoned in Battery Park by a drunken mother. Joseph and Mary S——, aged nine and seven, were sent out by their drunken parents to beg. Mary J——, aged twelve, was a victim of a cruel stepmother. She was a mass of bruises. The stepmother was tried and convicted. One bright little three-year-old boy waif was found on Grand street, and his parents or guardians have never been heard from. A crippled Italian lad of ten, Antonio P——, was sent out by his parents to beg and pick up refuse. Blanche N——, a girl of nine, was taken off the stage of a low vaudeville resort where she was doing vulgar dances. These are only a few of many similar cases.

There are few more cheerful places than the home of the Society, where the children are temporarily kept, previous to being permanently located. It is a model institution and the system which prevails in all the departments is a perfect one. It is a pleasure to visit the playrooms, and the dormitories are sweet and inviting in their cream-white sheeting and general air of neatness and comfort. The reading-room, the drying-room and even the kitchen are exceedingly attractive. One of the unique features is the room in which are kept the trophies of cruelty seized by the officers of the Society at different times. These implements tell their own tale of human suffering and brutal wrongdoing.

Old-Fashioned Old Folks

The Old House and Garden — The Wayfaring Guest — The City's Usurpation

IN my memory my father and mother are always associated with thoughts of roses and lilacs. I grew up in a rambling country house, set in the midst of an old-fashioned garden.

Father and mother were fond of pottering about in it, setting out bulbs and sowing seeds; pulling up weeds and trimming rose-bushes, in sparing fashion, for they believed in letting rose-bushes grow after their own sweet will. There was a hedge of Cherokee roses; a honeysuckle clambered up by the dining-room window and thrust sweet blossoms into your face. There were apple and peach, cherry and pear trees in sight, and looking out from the windows in springtime the whole world seemed a glory of white and rose. And O, the lilac-bushes and sweet syringas that bordered the walk! If I close my eyes and think of those days, it seems a far-away dream of fragrance and beauty. There is much practical comfort and honest work about the dream, however, for father and mother were busy people and good housekeepers. They kept a bountiful board, and wayfaring strangers, as well as kinfolk had hearty welcome. I can hear father's cheery voice now, saying to the belated traveler who called to ask the way to the nearest house of entertainment. "Come in! Come right in and make yourself at home!"

Kindness to strangers was a part of their religion. There was a motto on the dining-room wall, "The stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you." I have wondered how much missionary work they did unconsciously, these two dear souls, with their kindly words and handshakes and simple wholesome ways of living. Morning and evening prayer was an unfailing custom. As a matter of course the stranger was present with the family. The servants came in; our old nurse was ever ready with a devout "Amen," when children or grand-children were sick, and father prayed for their recovery. The stranger was always prayed for. At a reasonable bed-time, after an hour or two of cheerful converse, and after the boys and girls had sung and played old and new fashioned tunes, a candle was brought for the guest and somebody conducted him to his room, with hospitable wishes for a good night's rest.

A city has grown up where the homestead stood. Smoky factories cover the garden-spot. Father and mother sleep in the cemetery on the hill. They spent their last days in the confines of a city home. But nothing ever changed their courteous kindly ways, and their simple, old-fashioned hospitality. They always missed their garden, and had a pathetic sort of feeling that the time and labor they had spent in planting fruit-trees and rose-bushes for future generations had been wasted; they had no heart for planting more. On birthdays, Christmas and Easter, we children had our little ones carry them offerings of flowers, as much like those that grow in the old garden as we could find them. These visits to grandpapa and grandmamma were always occasions of great importance and delight to the little grandsons and granddaughters.

That which made the old folks happiest was when we reminded them: "You have planted seeds of kindness which will forever [illegible] in human hearts and lives."

Among THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S readers there are doubtless many old-fashioned old folks who feel that they have planted and watered in vain. Let the young visit and honor them; and give them the comfortable assurance that their labor of love is blessed and fruitful, and that true young lives growing up about them testify to their usefulness and faithfulness. MARY JORDAN

A VISIT TO THE GRANDPARENTS

Naming the Baby

They have queer ways of performing this ceremony in different countries. Among Hindoos, if the mother prefers one name and the father another, a lamp is set over each name; and the name over which the lamp burns brighter is given the baby. Egyptians name three wax candles, and the candle which burns the longest determines baby's name. Mo[illegible] names on as many slips of paper, which are placed in the Koran. The name on the first slip drawn out is the one selected. Little Ainus get no fixed name until five years old. The Japanese are fond of changing the baby's name, and it is said every little Jap has an average of four. Chinese have a way of calling girl babies One, Two, Three, Four, according to precedence. At twenty a son receives a new name in addition to that first bestowed. In America we all know what an important and delightful matter it is to name the baby.

Children's Lies

A study, which may prove very helpful, of the above sad phenomena is going on in New York public schools. It is found that children lie: 1. To defend themselves from punishment. 2. To conceal something they are ashamed of. 3. To amaze or amuse others. 4. For pure love of the unreal. 5. To protect a friend, (very rare). It is plain that in order to cure the habit of prevarication in a child, he or she must be dealt with according to the motive. Thus, back of motive number one, we find fear; we must remove fear, and we must develop moral courage if we want to cure a child of lying from this motive, the most degrading in the category, since it often leads to bearing false witness and casting the blame of one's wrong-doing on another. Motive number two is practically the same as number one; we must develop character to cure it. Fanciful stories proceeding from motive three can hardly be classed as falsehood; a little romancer weaving narratives to amuse comrades must be guided in the use of the imaginative faculty, so that he will not abuse it, but consecrate it, as Louisa M. Alcott and great and good writers have done, to noble uses. Motive five is so noble that the only way to deal with it is to impress upon the child prayerfully and lovingly, that nothing can justify falsehood, and that no real good can come of it.

Chicago's Anti-Cruelty Society

It seems that horse-beating at bridges has been somewhat fashionable among drivers in Chicago, but the fashion is doubtless obsolete by now. If an ignorant driver is stimulating his team to pull too heavy a load of coal, he is apt to be interrupted by a policeman at the order of some lady, who shows as her warrant a little five-pointed star, bearing "Authorized Police Call" and "A. C. S." The Anti-Cruelty Society of Chicago, numbering 100 women, with Mrs. Theo. Thomas as President, held its first meeting April 11. The objects of the Society are stated to be: The protection and relief of children in whose home (mis-called) exist incurable elements of cruelty and neglect; protection and relief of overloaded and over-driven beasts; and, in the words of Mrs. Thomas, "getting the whole spirit of the community aroused on the subject of cruelty to children and animals." She adds: "It is our aim to cooperate with and supplement the work of the Illinois Humane Society."

Our "Vicerine"

Lady Curzon, who was, as we know, an American girl, is endearing herself to the women of India. India's women, even of high caste, have suffered for centuries for lack of proper medical attention, the pardah system, which demands their rigid seclusion, denying them benefits of male physicians. Her Excellency, like Lady Dufferin, who preceded her, is lending active influence to the establishment throughout India of hospitals for women, and to the education of native female physicians. One of her first acts on arrival at Calcutta was to make a round of the hospitals, visiting the various wards and interesting herself personally in the patients. She has announced her determination of doing all that in her lies for the elevation of womanhood in India. Our Vicerine is worthy of America, and we shall watch her with sympathetic interest and strong confidence.

The Shah and his Son

MELIK MEN, Prince of Persia, celebrated his eighteenth birthday on April 8th. When he was ten years old, he was called because of his personal qualities "Chao-el-Saltanet" (Sunbeam-of-the-World). His French tutor gives an interesting sketch of Melik Men at that age, describing him as a docile, intelligent and gifted pupil, a sincere, affectionate and faithful friend. He says:

[illegible] like other children of his age, he would sit for hours, perched like a bird, upon his cushion, looking far away, often with tears in his eyes; then, coming suddenly out of one of his dreams, he would run to meet me, and, hovering about, ask me a thousand questions upon philosophical subjects, reasoning like a man. He lived the usual life of a young Persian prince, under the vigilant eye of an aged and careful governor, who watched critically his every movement. Melik Men was habituated from infancy to the royal state of a sultan. He had a palace full of servants, valets, cooks and stand[illegible] regiments of soldiers, and to the du[illegible] vote the greater part of his life. But as soon as his hour of liberty sounded, he would speed away to the low, plain house, built like the nest of a bird upon the ground, and perching upon his cushion, his delicate chin resting upon his little fists, he would gaze off into the clouds.

His father, then heir-apparent, had four sons whom he loved with deep devotion, but, says the tutor, "it seemed to me that he loved Melik Men the most." Court etiquette and Persian customs forbade his living with his family, but he managed to keep the child with him constantly.

When he was with his army, the Shah housed Melik in a little hut close to his own, and when he went upon his tiger hunts, and when he pursued the arghali into the abrupt rocky heights, which look down on Hadj Tehai, and when he drove the bears up the tall summit of Sehend; whenever it was possible he carried with him the delicate child!

By the time Melik Men is Shah, we hope Christian influences will be so strongly felt at the Persian court, that Mohammedan traditions will not have power to so enslave a monarch that he cannot live under the same roof with his own children.

Fun at the Farm-House

Don't let the cities win away your young men and maidens, good farmer. You and your kind wife can evolve plans to keep many of them at home. Encourage the singing-school; interest yourself to get the benefits of the traveling library system for your neighborhood, form reading clubs. Rich people go out of town to their golf links. Have golf links on your ground, and invite your young folks and their friends to amuse themselves in this healthy exercise. Take an interest in the Sunday School, in the Sunday School picnics—in everything that will make the young folks happy. Try to open up fields of business usefulness and opportunity. Let your girls as well as your boys have a chance to help you with the farm, the garden, the dairy, the poultry-yard. Encourage them to make some individual income that is all their own. The cities attract by promise of independence as well as amusement. Help the children to find independence on the farm.

Sabbath- . . . Breaking in Porto Rico

GEN. EATON

.....Gen. Eaton Graphically Pictures the Widespread Desecration of the Lord's Day—Improvement Noted Under American Occupation.....

SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO.

THE Sabbath in San Juan, Porto Rico! What day in the seven appeals with more force to the different elements of man's nature than the Christian Sabbath? To the æsthetic, or love of the beautiful, the quiet and sacred joy that ushers in the day and the glow of holy thoughts as the hours pass and the evening shades appear and deepen the beautiful impressions of its closing hours! To the moral sentiments, quickening their discriminations and their application to observations and conduct, adding a needed force! A day of rest and worship, to which both mind and body in their entireness so gratefully respond!

To the religious, those deepest sentiments of the human soul, which no other day so brings into activity and fills with a foretaste of the Sabbath above! With all of this natural fitness of the Sabbath, to bless mankind, how strangely is it ineffective and misused in spite of its justification to reason! If the reader is resident in the States, let him test thus by reflecting upon the uses of the Sabbath which he has just passed as manifested in the community about him, or here, in San Juan, turn over the incidents of any Sabbath after it has closed. The din of a busy day rises with the sun. Business or pleasure occupy the people as they throng the streets. Clerks are busy, bankers and merchants counting their profits. Every form of industry, whether rude or skillful, makes no pause; machinery and the anvil fill the air with the noise of their activity. The lash and the strident voice urging the horse and ox to their tasks on the streets leave these beasts of burden no chance for the seventh day's release. Yet, Porto Rico was discovered under the influence of a Christian motive, and four hundred years of history have been wrought out under a Christian nation which has paid from its treasury a priesthood to repeat to the people the divine command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

THE MILITARY HOSPITAL, PONCE, PORTO RICO

A PORTO RICAN PEASANT FAMILY

The sad result tells the story of their unfaithfulness. Priests not selected for their piety, became worldly, not to say immoral. Religion was turned to the support of the purposes of the State. Days for the observance of the religious rites multiplied, but they were more devoted to pleasure than piety. The law of the Sabbath was little known and less observed, and the consequences of breaking it bound the people in customs destructive both of spirituality and morality.

There is necessarily a lack of moral discriminations and moral fibre in the make-up of life. Had the Bible been in the hands of the people, small as is the number who can read, more minds would have been enlightened upon the application of the law of rest and worship and its benefits to the individual and society. The example of corrupt priests would have been less followed: the few who declared the sacredness of the day would have had more influence, and there are those who have done this with great earnestness and fidelity.

Occasionally you will hear the arguments for the observance of the Sabbath strongly and clearly stated by the laity. Indeed, in spite of the general disregard of the day, looking more closely into details, it will be found that its periodical influence has a degree of effect. Washing and change of garments answers to a day in seven. You see more people in better clothes on Sabbath morning than on any other in the week. A few more go to the churches. The most marked observation of the day, since American occupation, is seen in the suspension of business by the officials of the general government. Unfortunately, all Americans here do not represent either the spirit or the customs of the true American Sabbath.

One cannot help feeling that the American army is too careless of the day; that its ends, in the preservation of discipline and health, would be better subserved by greater care for its sacred hours. Nor, can one avoid feeling, when he sees Americans rushing to a Sabbath cock-fight, that the influence of the preacher and parent, the church and home, are coming short in enforcing upon the people in the States, the arguments in favor of the observance of one day in seven as a day of rest and worship. Evidently while the considerations of its spiritual benefits should always be urged, those most likely to take effect here in the present state of public thought, are those which point to material benefit. Man's physical nature, indeed, even his domestic animals require this suspension of labor. The drovers, who before the time of railroads drove stock on the hoof from Ohio and Illinois to New York, would bring their cattle into market not only in less time but in better condition, when they drove six days and rested one in seven, than when they drove seven days in seven.

Friends of the Sabbath have every reason to be on the alert. All the arguments should be marshalled in support of our Lord's interpretation of this sacred day. It should be remembered that churches may exist and the forms of worship be observed, and the true Sabbath disappear. There are here churches—San Sebastian, St. Joseph, St. Anne—with numerous images and the multiplication of pictures of our Saviour and his mother and the saints. Some of these churches, gray with years, recall history of the deepest interest; but their worshipers are limited in number—few men, mostly women. The great throng of people go on their way, unheeding the truths out of which these sacred edifices sprang. Their architecture, either external or internal, has nothing special to attract. Already the coming of Americans is marked by religious services. Post Chaplain Brown preaches two or three times each Sabbath to the soldiers; Mr. Smith, representing the Christian associations, holds service in the morning in the theatre. These services are under the auspices of a colonial association of Americans. Mr. Swenson, a student from Carthagenia, Ill., holds morning service and conducts an afternoon Sabbath School. Rev. Mr. Pratt, of the Episcopal Church, preaches in the morning in the hall of the Atheneum—belonging to a literary society of prominence here. All of these efforts have encouraging results. Rev. Mr. McCormick, a Baptist, has his headquarters in this city, but devotes himself to suburban towns. Rev. Mr. Erwin and his wife, of the Christian Church, have come to inaugurate a work for that denomination.

Thus, the new-found liberty represented by the American flag, is beginning to be improved and enjoyed. Rev. Mr. McKim represents the Bible Society, and reports the sale of over 1,200 copies of the Scriptures. He is superintendent of the Sabbath School in the theatre, which precedes the services by Mr. Smith.

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

CHAPTER XXVIII.

LIKE a prisoner chained and bound, the Judge sat paralyzed in his library and no one knew that he was there.

The hours passed and he sat helpless, bound in that awful chain of frozen horror. In vain he struggled in a wild rage for freedom. No muscle stirred. Where was his boasted will power now? Hand and foot, faithful, uncomplaining slaves for so many years, had rebelled at last!

His brain seemed on fire and the flashing thoughts blinded him with their glare. His brother's letters seemed to be glaring at him from their sepulchre and clothed in the majesty of a dead man's faith, looked at him with an awful reproach, until his very soul bowed in the dust with shame. His will still lay upon the desk, open at the paragraph "to my dear niece Evadne," and the words "In trust," like red-hot irons, branded him a felon in sight of God and men!

The other members of the family returned from the festival, and Louis passed the door whistling. He had had a rare evening of pleasure at the festival, with Evadne at his side. Towards its close, under cover of the rolling harmonies, he had leaned over and whispered: "I love you, dear!" and Evadne had held out her hand to him with the low, pleading cry, "Oh, Louis, if you really do, then set me free!" But he had only smiled and taken the hand, on which his ring was gleaming, into his, and settled his arm more securely upon the back of her chair; and John Randolph, sitting opposite with Dick and Miss Diana, had watched the little scene and drawn his own conclusion with a sigh.

The night drew on. No one came to the library, and Judge Hildreth could make no sound nor movement. The electric lights, which it was his fancy to have ablaze in every room downstairs until the central current was shut off, still gleamed steadily upon the rigid figure before the desk, with the white, drawn face and the awful look of horror in its staring eyes. Again and again he tried to call, but no sound escaped the lips, set in a sphinx-like silence.

He must shake off this strange lethargy. It was not possible for him to die—he had not time. To-morrow was the meeting of the Panhattan directors; they were relying upon him to work through the second call on stock, and two of his notes fell due; if he did not retire them his credit would be lost at the bank—and there was the banquet to the English capitalists, with whom he was negotiating a mining deal, and he must arrange with his broker to float some more shares of the "Silverwing," and manipulate, manipulate, manipulate! An agonized, voiceless cry went up to heaven: "O God, let me have to-morrow!"

But it was not to be. His prayer was unanswered. In the morning they found him dead and cold. It was a shock to all, but the hard, matter-of-fact duties must be done, and so important a man as Judge Hildreth must have a funeral worthy of his reputation in the State.

In a few days the stately obsequies were ended. The paid quartette had sung their sweetest, while Dr. Jerome, standing beside the frozen face in the massive coffin, had delivered an elegant eulogium, and Mrs. Hildreth, clad in her costly robes of mourning, had been led to her carriage by her son. Everything had been conducted in a manner befitting the Hildreth honor.

But the Hildreth honor suffered an eclipse when Louis examining his dead father's private papers found that Evadne's fortune had been used and lost.

"Evadne!" Louis turned a white, scared face towards his cousin, who stood beside him as he sat at his father's desk. Upstairs Mrs. Hildreth and Isabelle were in solemn consultation with a dressmaker. In the drawing-room Marion was being consoled by Simpson Kennard.

"Well, Louis!" She laid her hand on his shoulder gently. She was very sorry for him.

"There is some awful mistake. Poor father seems to have counted on funds which we can find no trace of. The estate is not worth an eighth of what he valued it at. There is barely enough to keep you—mother and Isabelle, alive!" He laid his head down on the desk while great tears fell through his fingers. The shameful mystery of it was intolerable.

But, Louis, have you looked everywhere? There must be some explanation."

Louis shook his head.

"I've looked, but in this drawer, I opened it, but there is nothing but old musty letters. I haven't time to go into them now. Oh, little Coz, I don't dare to look you in the face. The thirty thousand dollars left you by your father is gone!"

"Don't tell Aunt Kate and the girls, Louis. There is no need that they should ever know. I have my profession and I am strong. Uncle Lawrence never meant to do anything except what was just right, I know."

Louis looked up at her, and there was a strange reverence in his cynical face. He was in the presence of a Christliness which he never dreamed of.

"I am not worthy to touch the hem of your garment," he said humbly. But he did not offer to release her from her promise. He had not learned to be generous—yet.

Evadne suffered more than she allowed her cousin to know. Her dream was ended and rude was the awaking. The idea of helping her fellows had grown to be a passion with her, and very fair had been the castle in the air of which she was the princess. A home, not rich or stately, but full of a delightful homeliness which should soothe and cheer those who, walking through the world amid a storm of tears, call earth a wilderness, while their desolate hearts echo the mournful question: "Is there any sorrow like unto my sorrow?" She too had been lonely, she could understand, and by the sweet influence of human love and sympathy lift their thought above the earthly shadows up to the love of God.

She had not dreamed of doing things on a grand scale. Evadne Hildreth was wise enough to know that comfort cannot be dealt out in wholesale packages—she never forgot that Jesus of Nazareth helped the people one by one.

She had never questioned the terms of her father's will—if there was a will. She had supposed when she became of age there would be some change, but her uncle had made no reference to the subject, and she had not liked to ask. He was always kind—he would do what was best. Some day she would be free to carry out this beautiful dream of hers. She could afford to wait. Now there was nothing to wait for any more!

How strange it seemed, when the need was so great and she longed to help so much! Well, she was only a little child—she could trust her Father. God understood.

That was what Dr. Randolph had said, this strong, true friend of hers, that night when he asked the question which he had never asked again. How gentle he was; but it was the gentleness of strength, and how every one depended on him! She herself had learned to expect the helpful words which he always gave her when they met. Friendship was a beautiful thing!

He came up behind her as she was dressing the burns of a little lad who had been severely injured at a fire. She did not hear his step. She was telling a bright story to the little sufferer, to make him forget his pain, and the boy was laughing merrily. John's face was very grave, but his eyes lightened as they always did when they rested upon her face.

"Mrs. Reginald Hawthorne is very ill. Can you, will you come?"

And Evadne answered with a simple

SKILLFUL COOKS' DUTY

Should Make Food Taste and Look Well

The true science of cookery is to select proper and nourishing ingredients and then prepare them in such a manner as will please the taste, and incidentally the eye.

The most valuable food will not long agree with a person if its taste is disagreeable. This does not argue that all nice tasting articles are nutritious and nourishing. However, it is the duty of all food experts to produce delicious food and from the best possible ingredients, and to have a comprehensive knowledge of the laws of digestion and assimilation.

Grape-Nuts, the new food, made by Postum Cereal Co., Lim., Battle Creek, and now on sale at grocers, is thought to be the highest type of scientifically made food thus far produced.

It possesses the delicate sweet of grape-sugar, with a new and peculiar flavor of a most winning character, while the processes of manufacture have brought the food to such a condition that it is absorbed by the system in a most natural and healthful manner.

A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY

"yes." They needed so few words—those two.

It had been a strange meeting between John and his old friend Rege. Many years had passed since Mr. Hawthorne expelled John Randolph from Hollywood and Rege had said that sad good-bye. But one day John, hurrying to the home of a patient met Rege on the street, and they recognized one another instantly.

"John Randolph!"

"Rege!"

The two men stood facing each other with hands held in a vice-like grasp, all unconscious of what was going on around them in the street.

"Where did you come from?"

"Where have you been?"

"In and around Marlborough all the time," John answered, "except when I went to New York for my degree."

"And never let us hear a word from you all these years?"

"You forget, Rege, your father forbade me to hold any communication with Hollywood."

Reginald's face grew grave. "Poor Father! Well, he's done with it all now."

"You don't mean that he is dead, Rege?"

"Yes—and little Nan."

"Oh!" The exclamation was sharp with pain.

"I think she fretted for you, John. She just seemed to pine away. Every day we missed her about the same time and they always found her in the same place, down by the green road. Then scarlet fever came. She never spoke of getting well—didn't seem to want to. The night she died she put her arms 'round mother's neck and whispered: 'Tell Don I'll be waitin' at the gate.' That was all."

John wrung Reginald's hand and turned away. Reginald looked at him with misty eyes, "I used to tell mother it would break his heart. I never saw anyone so wrapped up in a child."

"And your father, Rege?" John was calm again.

"Had a fit of apoplexy soon after. I think Nan was the only thing in the world he cared for. It had never struck him that she could die. We sold Hollywood and went abroad. Mother's health broke up—she was never very strong you know. We spent one year in Italy and one in France, but the shock had been too great. She lies in a lovely spot beside the sea."

"Not your mother, Rege, too!"

Reginald's voice broke. "Yes, they are all gone. It was a great deal to happen in a few years. I am a wealthy man, John; but I am all alone in the world, except for Elsie. Well," he added more lightly, "I have learned not to rebel against the inevitable. It is only what we have to expect."

"Elsie?" echoed John wonderingly.

"My wife," said Reginald proudly. "You must come home at once and let me show you the sweetest woman in the world."

"Not just yet, Rege. I must pay a visit to Mrs O'Flannigan, then there is the Hospital and the Dispensary and I promised to concoct a bed for a poor fellow in the last stages of heart trouble. But I will come to-night."

"Always helping somewhere, John. What a grand fellow you are!"

"We are in the world to help the world, else what were the use of living?"

"I can't do anything," said Reginald sadly, "with this clog." He looked contemptuously at his ebony crutch, as he spoke.

John laid his hand upon his arm.

"Rege," he said in his old tender way, "I think this very 'clog' as you call it, is a preparation to help those who are passing through the baptism of pain."

Mrs Reginald Hawthorne welcomed her husband's friend with a winning charm. She was very pretty, very graceful, and very young. Reginald idolized her. John saw that, as he looked around the sumptuous home, whose every fitting was a tribute to her taste. They had just finished unpacking the things they had brought from Europe. "Strangely enough," said Reginald with a laugh, "I told Elsie this morning that now I was going to start out in search of you!" He had developed wonderfully. John saw that travel and trial had brought out the good that was in him, but not the best.

The evening passed pleasantly. Mrs. Hawthorne played beautifully, and Reginald had kept eyes and ears open and talked well.

"How about the other life, Rege?" asked John, when they had a few moments alone. "This one seems very fair."

"All a humbug, John. You Christians are chasing a will o' the wisp—a jack o' lantern. You remember my fad for mathematics? I have followed it up, and I find your theory a reductio ad absurdum I must have everything demonstrable and clear. This is neither."

"Yet it was a great mathematician who said: 'Omit eternity in your estimate of area and your solution is wrong.'"

Reginald shook his head. "I have nothing to do with this faith business. I go as far as I see, no further."

"God calls our wisdom foolishness, Rege. Jesus Christ put a tremendous premium upon the faith of a little child."

Things must be tangible for me to believe in them; reason is king with me."

"Without faith in your fellowmen, and your wife, you would have a poor time of it, Rege. Why should you refuse to have faith in your God? Is your will tangible, and can you demonstrate the mysterious forces of nature? You know you can't, Rege, you have to take them on trust, and if you had seen what I have, you would know that poor human reason is a pitiful thing! But I won't argue with you; some day you will understand."

Reginald Hawthorne went back into the room where his wife was sitting. "Elsie darling, you have seen one of the grandest men in the world to-night. The only trouble is that on the one subject of religion he is a crank."

He had probably often spoken to his wife so contemptuously of religion, for when, in compliance with Dr. Randolph's request, Evadne went to nurse her, she found the patient in a distressing condition of mind.

"I tell you I will not die!" The piercing cry rang through the handsome room and fell like molten lead upon the heart of the man who, with strained, haggard face, was sitting by the bedside. "You have not told me the truth, Reginald! There is a God. I feel it! You have always laughed and called me young and foolish, but I know better than you do now. You said if our lives were governed by reason, we would meet death like philosophers, and I do not know how to die! You used to laugh, and say the whole thing was child's play and there was nothing to fear—and I believed you. But it was easy to believe you then, with your arms folded close about me and the sunlight streaming through the windows, and the merry shouts of the children outside—but now you cannot go with me, and I am afraid to go alone!" The eyes, wild and despairing, burned fiercely in the pallid cheeks. "Do you hear, Reginald? I am afraid, I tell you—horribly afraid! You used to say you would lay down your life to save me—why do you not help me now?

"What makes you look so strangely, if it is all nonsense, Reginald? Why do you shut out the sunshine and why is the house so dreadfully gloomy and still? You told me once you were going to die with a laugh on your lips. I am dying, Reginald, why don't you help your wife to die as you mean to do? A—h!"

Her voice died away in a low wail of terror, and the delicate blue veins in her temples throbbed with feverish excitement. Reginald Hawthorne had crouched down in his chair and buried his face in his hands.

"I suppose you will give me a splendid funeral—you are so generous, you know—but I will not care whether the prison is pine or mahogony, if I am to be shut up in it all alone! And you will have a long procession, with plumes and flowers and show, but you will leave me in the dreary graveyard and you will come back to our home, where we have been so happy together—so happy, just you and I.

"And some day you will forget me—men do such things they say—and another woman will be your wife and I will be all alone!"

"Sister!" The abject man in the chair held out his hands in an agony of entreaty—"Come here and help us—if you can!" and Evadne came swiftly into the room, and, sitting down on the bed, gathered the pitiful little figure to her heart.

Is Street Car Courtesy Declining?—Breaking a Bad Habit—The Nurse's Bill, etc.

A CORRESPONDENT (Jean D.) deplores a lack of gallantry among the men of the period, and states that she seldom, in these days, sees a man rise to yield a seat to a woman in a public conveyance. Really, Jean, there is no obligation on a tired man, who has paid his fare, to resign his place to a stranger of the other sex, unless she is old, or infirm, or burdened with a child. On our long suburban routes, a man may have to ride miles to reach his home or his business. Should he offer a woman his seat, she may leave the car in a few minutes, but he does not regain his place, which is pounced upon at once by somebody else. There are two sides to this, as to most questions. In days when women work side by side with men and compete with them in wage-earning, all the latter have a right to ask, is a fair field and no favor. Women should treat men with courtesy, just as men should treat women with politeness. But when I see, as I daily see, men at a crowded terminus of a trolley line, push and shove and fight and crush women and children in their effort to get seats first, I shake my head. I am puzzled and discouraged.

EMILY C. tells me that she cannot break herself of saying, "Dont you know?" and "See?" at the end of her sentences; and that when she is embarrassed, she says "Ah!" at the end of her words, and hesitates and flounders about in the middle of her sentences. My dear, you must break yourself of these little things, which are simply tricks of manner; you can do it if you will think before you speak, and nobody can really help you except yourself. The well-bred young woman avoids slang expressions of all kinds.

THERE WAS a bill before Congress recently which unfortunately was defeated, one wonders why, since its reason for being was in evident necessity, and its provisions, most of them, were in accord with common sense and dictated by human sentiment. Perhaps in some modified form it may be presented again at a future day, for, if we are going to have larger armies than formerly, and foreign wars are to be on our hands, the mothers of the nation will desire that there shall be a corps of properly qualified women nurses to take care of the men who are wounded, and of the sick in hospitals. I do not underate the skill and tenderness of men as nurses, but when our boys are homesick, and fever-racked, and far from home and friends, a gentle woman's hand to turn a pillow and give a remedy, a woman's face to remind of home and mother, will do more for the soldier than any man can do. Many of the leading women of the nation were deeply anxious that the Nurses' Bill should pass, and they are correspondingly disappointed at its defeat. In talking with a woman who saw a great deal of our men in hospitals last summer, both at Montauk and at Chattanooga, she told me that it was simply wonderful to see how the poor fellows, too ill to lift a hand, would brighten up and improve under the nursing of women, which somehow brought with it a spiritual and moral uplift as well as the physical relief.

IT happened to me, not long ago, to hear a story of discouragement on the part of a husband whose home was on the east side in a great American city. He was a cobbler earning his livelihood for a large family by the repairing of shoes, but do what he would he could never earn enough to keep the little ones in even partial comfort, and at last when illness overtook him he made no effort to get well. "What's the use," he said, "we shall never get ahead," and died, the doctor declared, not so much of disease as of pure discouragement. After all, our brothers and husbands are only mortal, and require toning up as much as women.

I feel deeply with you the hardships involved in many persons, but am not sure that there is any way of relief.

T. C. Pray over the matter. If it is really the best thing for you, God will open the way in his own time. But I advise waiting for the present.

M. E. L. I should leave all the past and all that concerns your dear one with God, who loves us all far more than we love him. I thank you for your kind words to me.

Babylon's Hanging Gardens

M Bruno Meissner, a distinguished French savant, tells of the discovery of a representation of Babylon's hanging gardens, engraved upon an Assyrian tablet. The tablet (says the Literary Digest) is now preserved in the British Museum. It is a part of a block of alabaster taken from the ruins of the palace of King Assur-banipal. It shows a temple upon a hill with numerous lofty columns. To the left of the temple is an idol. The right side of the view is occupied by the hanging gardens. The trees in them seem to be poplar or cypress, and there are also vines. The gardens, triangular in form, rest on pillars made of huge blocks of stone. Access is by means of a path cut in the hill. It has been believed hitherto that the inventor of the hanging gardens was Nebuchadnezzar, who ordered them built to please his wife. M. Meissner thinks Nebuchadnezzar only restored the gardens after the destruction of Babylon in 648 B. C.

New Ideas in Christian Work

An Open Forum for Practical Suggestions, to Which All Interested Readers are Invited to Contribute

Inter-Denominational Evangelistic Work

IN the twenty-six years of my service as an evangelist I have discovered, I think, some weak points which may be remedied and make the work more effectual. My object in writing this letter is to set forth these weak points, and suggest what seems to me a remedy:

1. There is always a great difficulty in securing united effort. Denominationalism is very marked among the churches, and as a matter of course every one looks out for its own. It is exceedingly difficult to secure a union of all the churches in any evangelistic movement.

2. In the active work of evangelization, another great difficulty is to find trained and experienced Christians who are willing to do personal work. There is a strange backwardness; I may say, a lack of zeal among our very best Christian people. What is most needed is that kind of individual effort which characterized the Christians of the earliest days.

3. When the meetings are over, as a rule many of those who have made profession of faith are lost sight of. In some of the churches, diligent pastors, by the help of a few members, may secure larger numbers than others; but as a rule the great majority disappear, and the churches stand looking into each other's faces, after the evangelist is gone, and wondering where are the converts. The usual evangelistic effort is like sheet lightning—lighting up all around for a short while and leaving all in darkness again when the work is done.

4. Another difficulty in the way of successful evangelistic work is the expense of the work. The churches always want to know what it will cost, and there is great difficulty in raising the amount.

Now as to the remedy: Years ago I organized the National Evangelization Society, and for some time had many preachers and singers at work as evangelists all through the land. But the same difficulties applied to their work as to mine. The plan I now have to propose is for inter-denominational effort, and to be brought about in the following way:

First: I have secured already a most excellent Y. M. C. A. secretary to visit cities or towns where meetings are to be held, and through the Young Men's Christian Association, and by personal visitation to the pastors and churches, to secure united effort.

Second: I have also secured the services of another excellent Christian man to take charge of the workers, selecting from the churches, under the advice of the different pastors, such men and women as will make first-class workers, and who are willing to do that kind of work. Thus, without any announcement from the pulpit or any ostentation whatever, the organized forces will do their quiet work.

Third: I have yet to engage another, who will remain after the evangelist has gone, to form the converts of the different churches into associations, and by the help of the Christian workers from each particular church, assist in getting these converts into the churches and setting them out along some lines of work.

Fourth: I propose to secure by contribution sufficient funds to pay the expenses of this work, only calling upon the churches to arrange the place for the meeting and give the daily contribution to some benevolent work.

If THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which is the Christian inter-denominational paper of this country, will set this plan before the people, I believe it will be adopted by evangelists everywhere. Those who work in single churches will find this plan a most excellent one, and it may be operated by the help of the pastor alone. Those who are working in Union meetings for all denominations, will, I am sure, find it to their advantage to put this plan into operation. H. M. WHARTON.

[The plan suggested by Rev. Mr. Wharton is one which, from his wide evangelistic experience, deserves serious consideration. We would be pleased to hear from other pastors and evangelists on the subject.]

An Evangelists' Convention Suggested

Editor "Christian Herald": It is apparent to all of us who are engaged in the blessed work of soul-saving that the present methods of evangelism must be changed, if we are to expect the best results. Many parts of our land greatly needing the labors of the consecrated evangelist are seldom reached; the churches that agree upon the fundamental doctrines of salvation are not united as they should be in practical work for reaching the masses of the non church-goers; in opening and prosecuting special evangelistic work in a community, the evangelist is limited in his influence and oftentimes greatly hampered alike by a lack of co-operation on the part of evangelical denominations and a lack of organized effort on the part of Christian workers; and frequently when the evangelist takes his departure (after a spasmodic collection is taken, which leaves a bad taste in the mouths of many and hastens a reaction—alas!) no systematic effort is made to look after the new converts, to instruct them in the Christian life and to bring them under some pastoral care. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would do a good service by encouraging the call of a convention of pastors and evangelists, where these vital questions which bear upon this important subject can be fully discussed.

Montclair, N. J. H. ALLEN TUPPER, JR.

How a Stagnant Church Was Helped

To the Editor: For the benefit of others similarly situated, I write to give our experience in one little country church. We had a pastor for a dozen years or so—a good man, but slow and indisposed to give any attention to progressive ideas. Under his ministry we seemed to make little progress, although we all liked him. Attendance at services dwindled, and the Sunday School became literally "a matter of form"—certainly it was not one of pupils. To crown our troubles, the church gradually dropped behind in finances. I need say no more.

Two years ago our present pastor came—an earnest, energetic man, with experience in other fields. At his coming the church seemed to spring into new life. It was not his eloquence, for he made no special pretence to pulpit ability; but it was his spiritual energy that vitalized us. His motto was, "All must work for the kingdom." He organized the young and old among us on a working basis, entered into the life of the congregation, and became their personal leader in all good deeds. He believes in showing the way. It is a favorite saying of his that spiritual work must precede spiritual refreshment, and that whoso does not work for the cause of Christ week days, need not expect to derive the highest benefit from church privileges on Sunday. We now find the love of all forms of Christian activity so growing among our people that it astonishes us. We have our own missionaries, who write us from afar; our own orphan wards and our own local benevolences, besides the regular demands of our denomination, all of which are regularly and cheerfully met. Work, work, work, is the talisman that has wrought the change.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y. J. M.

[This letter, from a regular reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, may furnish a helpful suggestion to some church which is threatened with spiritual stagnation. We wish the writer had been even more explicit.]

A Casket for Buddha's Tooth

Ceylon was recently the scene of a series of remarkable ceremonies, the occasion being the placing of the famous Buddhist relic, "Buddha's tooth," in a golden casket, which had been presented by the Burmese followers of the prophet to the faithful in Ceylon. The resting-place of the relic—to which the most miraculous powers are ascribed—is the great Mohigawa temple at Kandy, where it can now be seen in its new casket, the latter being a piece of the most exquisite oriental workmanship, valued at $50,000. It is in the shape of a dagoba, the body being of massive gold, garlanded with strings of jewels and surmounted by a splendid ruby. It is covered by a silver canopy inlaid with precious stones, and the whole stands about six feet high. With it came from Rangoon thirteen hundred Burmese, 370 of them priests.

AN OLD HERO'S STORY*

Tropical Fevers

WITH regard to the yellow fever, there has been a large consultation among Cuban professional physicians. They bring out several facts concerning Spanish soldiers, from whom fever statistics have been derived. The Spanish soldier, coming from Spain, at first, is unacclimated; everything touching hygiene, like diet and bathing, is uniformly neglected. He is a prime subject for the fever, so that the percentage of fever in a new Spanish army entering Cuba would be double that of our army.

Again, there is a type of malarial disease which passes for yellow fever, but is not in reality that disease. These things being so, these physicians consider that there is far less danger of the fevers, and less indeed of their proving fatal, than most people suppose. They show very many parts of Cuba where fever does not exist at all, especially where the land is high and rolling and the air and water are uniformly good. Our own hygienic regulations are superb. The difficulty is to live up to them.

The fever, for the most part, in the vicinity of Santiago, is of a mild type, and when taken soon enough is easily controlled. As I am informed thus far of all cases, citizens and soldiers, but twenty-five proved fatal.

General Wood, commanding the city, is working gradually to root out the evil from Santiago altogether. He cleans the city, introduces a system of drainage, and handsomely relieves impoverishment by employing able-bodied Cubans.

Corcoran's Trust

As I went on deck and came into the social hall, I found Mrs. Bull, our woman nurse, doing what she could for the comfort of the sick who were lying upon the seats and in the staterooms. Looking across the way, an army surgeon was observing a very sick soldier. Mrs. Bull thought he was dying. He was deadly pale and scarcely breathed. But when I spoke to him gently, and touched his forehead, he opened his eyes and told me that his name was Corcoran, and that he belonged to the Third United States Infantry. For fear that I might do him harm in his weakness, I turned away to others. Before leaving the hall I again looked toward Corcoran. He opened his eyes and gazed eagerly toward me, and then said, with a clear voice:

"Aren't you General Howard?" I said "Yes."

He answered: "I thought so. You spoke to us when we were encamped at Mobile. You told us of the soldier McDonald, who had died for you."

I remembered the occasion: my subject that evening at the regular camp was: "He died for me." I used this as an exhibition of our Saviour's love and sacrifice, and illustrated it with several army incidents, where it seemed to me that the officers and soldiers connected with me had laid down their lives that I might live. McDonald's was a case in point.

I whispered to Corcoran, and said: "Are you trusting in McDonald's Saviour?" He said emphatically:

"Yes, I am."

Corcoran was soon moved to another part of the ship. He had a strong constitution, had, indeed, been an athlete among his comrades. Every time I saw him after that interview he appeared to be better. The doctor said I had done him more good than medicine by coming to see him. He grew better under the faithful care and attention of members of his regiment, who were ill themselves, though not so weak. He would say to me every time I came: "General, I am praying all the time." He was an only son—his father and mother living in Baltimore. I hope to hear that he has been restored to health and to his parents.

Gen. Shafter's Story of Battle

Shafter showed me about where they stood—he and his officers—when they took their first look at Santiago: then explained how the approach was made and the plan of battle. How General Duffield, with his regiments, had made a demonstration against Aguadores, while the main army was approaching along a higher road farther north; how El Poso had been taken possession of and Grimes' battery located. There was the movement then from El Poso very much like the opening of a fan with the handle near Grimes' Hill. Shafter did not like to leave El Caney, occupied by Spaniards—a strong place and well fortified—while he advanced from El Poso toward the city. General Lawton's division was sent, and though it took longer than was anticipated, on the first of July disposed of El Caney. Meanwhile Kent's and Wheeler's divisions (Sumner commanding the latter, till Wheeler, leaving a sick bed, hurried to participate), moved forward substantially abreast through a jungle-cut road and deployed right and left in front of what had been called the works of San Juan. Shafter entered into no detail. The men, as we know, encountered a dreadful fire of Spanish artillery and Mauser rifles. The enemy was well fortified: he had a line very considerably expanded, dotted with blockhouses, crowning knolls and heights, and fortifications well constructed. The wire-fence arrangement, with barbed wires wrapped around posts in squares or pentagons, having here and there horizontal criss-crossing, was worse as it stood than our old-fashioned abatis: only with proper instruments, which our troops do not seem to have had, could such a fence be cut down by skirmishers and rushers with very little delay.

This line of the San Juan, between that stream and the city was bravely captured, though with heavy loss. The line was evidently weak, till the forces came back from El Caney—Lawton to push off and secure the right with the Cubans beyond him, toward the Condado Height, and General Bates to march hastily after the affair at El Caney to the extreme left, and thus secure it, so that the Spaniards' attempt of recovering their lost ground was met and hindered

General Shafter ran over the right, the centre, the front, with his arm raised, pointing out the varied positions of his troops and of the Spaniards who opposed him till he came to the left of the line. He then said that the Cubans did not fight well over there. They did not succeed in keeping back Toral's reinforcement, "so that I was obliged to have Lawton send Ludlow's brigade down there by the water—not, of course, to keep out reinforcements, for they had already come, but to cut off the only chance the garrison had to get away." Garcia's men became a second line, though Garcia met Shafter in the beginning and cooperated with the navy and army, probably as well as anybody could reasonably have expected, yet the Cuban method of fighting would never do for us. Even when Gomez was in command on the battlefield, his object was to draw out against himself a Spanish force as large as he could attract, and as far away from the Spaniard's base as possible, and then attack front and flank and to retire quickly rather than suffer heavy loss. His methods were intended to harrass, rather than beat his foe. Except in rare instances, he could not expect anything like a decisive victory. With the bravest Cubans, that method of fighting became too much of a habit to make a Cuban force reliable in a defensive defile, or to hold against heavy odds an open roadway.

Dividing Our Time

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for April 30. Eccles 3: 1-15

THE older generation may remember an illustration used by a good friend of young people, to show the advantage of method. He describes a man who had undertaken to clear a large area of snow. At first he worked irregularly, shovelling the snow at one corner and extending work in various directions. But after some time, he looked over the ground and apparently lost heart at the quantity still remaining to be cleared. Then he took his shovel and with the edge drew lines across the area. Working between these lines he made better progress, and looked over the ground at the end of each furrow with satisfaction. The moral drawn from the story was that a clear and definite plan helped in the accomplishment of work. There is always a possibility of time being frittered away, whether there is much or little to do. If the worker is a busy man with several things waiting to be done, he is liable to take up one and after awhile lay it aside to take up another, which seems to be more urgent, or to sit looking at his tasks hopelessly with the vague feeling that there is more than he can perform. One of the most successful workers we have ever known, a man who got through a great deal of work every day, attributed his power of work to a habit he had of entering every day on a card each task that he had to pertorm. His first act before going to his office was to examine this card and choose the tasks that he would do that day, and enter them on another card in the order in which he would take them up. Every one of his clerks was familiar with his "Now, what's the next thing?" as he referred to his card, and one duty followed on the heels of another, with no intervals of indecision and no waste of time in desultory occupation. A man who works so methodically, does not, at night, have to look back, as so many do, over a day in which he has been busy all the time and yet has no finished task to his credit.

A method which helps in business will help also in religious duty. The man who always intends to prepare his Sunday School lesson early in the week, or to visit some poor family, or to spend an hour with some sick Christian, and does not put his intention into execution, fails in his duty and is dissatisfied with himself. Yet he is very liable to fail if he has no methodical system of dividing his time. It slips away so easily and there is so little of it that the closest economy is necessary. It needs to be treasured and apportioned with the clear idea that unless it is definitely applied it will be lost without result. Among all the things which the Preacher mentions, there are some that will inevitably assert their claims, and it often happens that in the absence of care and plan, they will claim more time than legitimately belongs to them. It is true, as he says, that there is a recurrence of these things. That which was in the past has to be done again today, and what we do to-day may have to be done again in the future, but there are opportunities of service which come but once, and if we do not use them, they are lost and we shall have to answer with shame when "God requireth that which is past."

With many of us the time that we can give absolutely to God's service is extremely small. The earning of a livelihood so that we may live honestly, involves labor which occupies a large part of the twenty-four hours, and this is a duty to God as much as direct service in his cause. Diligence in business is a duty enjoined by the highest authority, and it ought never to be said of any Christian that he neglects it. And in our business there are opportunities of serving God which should not escape. The chance comes of saying an encouraging word to some troubled soul, or of uttering a tactful warning to some one in danger of falling. Things of this kind may be done by the most diligent business man, and they frequently have more effect when spoken at the right moment than the best pulpit effort. But these are, by the way, the little things that may be done as we pass. The question we have to consider is the remainder of the time. The Sundays and the evenings which are at our disposal. It is these which we have to divide so that the claims of home and family shall not be neglected, and yet something shall be used directly in the Master's service. We cannot afford to spend our time so that none shall be consecrated to him. The sacred hour of morning and evening devotion no Christian will allow to be encroached upon who has a true conception of its value; but beyond this, there should be some period which we regard as the Master's time, which should be given to his service. This every one has to settle for himself, but unless it is divided off and set apart it is not likely to be rightly used.

Jane Hope Passes Away

A Noble, Generous-Hearted Christian Woman, Who Delighted in Good Deeds

IN the New York papers of Saturday, April 8, appeared this simple notice:

Died, Friday, April 7, 1899, at her residence, Miss Jane Hope. Notice of funeral hereafter.

The name is familiar to many of our readers. Those who have scanned our column of "Good Causes Helped," have seen it repeated, year after year, as the giver of generous donations. Her first contribution came several years ago with the simple name appended and no explanation. From that time, until the present, hardly any cause enlisting sympathy, or any good work needing help has been presented in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to which Miss Hope did not come forward as one of the first and most generous of givers. She gave to the India Famine Fund which aided thousands of stricken natives, the Russian Fund, the Armenian Fund, our Fresh-Air Work, the Bowery Mission, the Bethesda Home, the fund for the Western Flood Sufferers, and a number of other enterprises of benevolence, philanthropy and evangelism. Her letters have been as modest as her generosity has been large. On the 22d of March, the proprietor of this journal wrote a letter acknowledging her latest gift of $100 to be divided among ten good causes; and closed with the words: "May the blessing of God rest upon the giver, the gift, and those who shall share in it."

Miss Jane Hope was over eighty at the time of her death, and had been in feeble health for several years. She was Scotch by birth, came to this country with her parents and brothers when a child, and lived in New York ever since. She had four brothers, all of whom are dead. The Hope brothers are well remembered by old New Yorkers as prominent, honorable business men, founders of a successful mercantile house, which is still in existence, though now under a different name. Miss Hope's relations with her brother John were peculiarly beautiful. The two were almost inseparable companions, and used to attend together the old Scotch Presbyterian Church (now in Central Park West) when it was on Grand Street. Her brother Thomas left a half million dollars to build and endow a hospital in his native town of Langholm, Scotland. Only one of the brothers, Anthony, married; he left three children, and the youngest, Belle, has been to Miss Hope as an adopted daughter. In late years this young lady has been eyes, ears, hands and feet to her venerable aunt. She regularly read to her. "Among the papers she loved best to hear was THE CHRISTIAN HERALD," said Mrs. Blume, a friend of the family, to the writer.

Miss Hope inherited a comfortable income, and took great delight in relieving the suffering and needy. In addition to her other charities, she gave generously to the Presbyterian Hospital, the Eye and Ear Infirmary, Home for Incurables, and Skin and Cancer Hospital, all in New York City. Her name will be cherished by many who have been helped by her noble generosity, and by none more cordially than those poor and needy ones who, through the medium of this journal, were brought into contact with this great-hearted woman, whose wealth was used as a sacred trust for the glory of God and the benefit of her fellow-beings.

A Sympathetic Princess

Princess Victoria, a daughter of the Prince of Wales, is greatly devoted to charitable work among the London poor.

Lately, in the course of one of her visits, the Princess found in a wretched lodging in Seven Dials, a family almost starved to death. Their faces were drawn with famine, the bodies scarcely able to stand. After she had given them some food she had them photographed, and then presented herself to her royal father with this telling testimony. She said to him: "We are responsible for this suffering. We are the ones who ought to cure the evil. There is something bad in your realm." The reply of the Prince has not been reported.

WEAK-LUNGED PEOPLE

wear away their lives by not building up a part of their body that drags them back when they want to go forward.

The hand of disease on your lungs will soon extend its grasp and, perhaps, squeeze out your very existence.

Chronic cough, or any other lung sickness, easily caught, and hard to cure, is a proof of lung weakness.

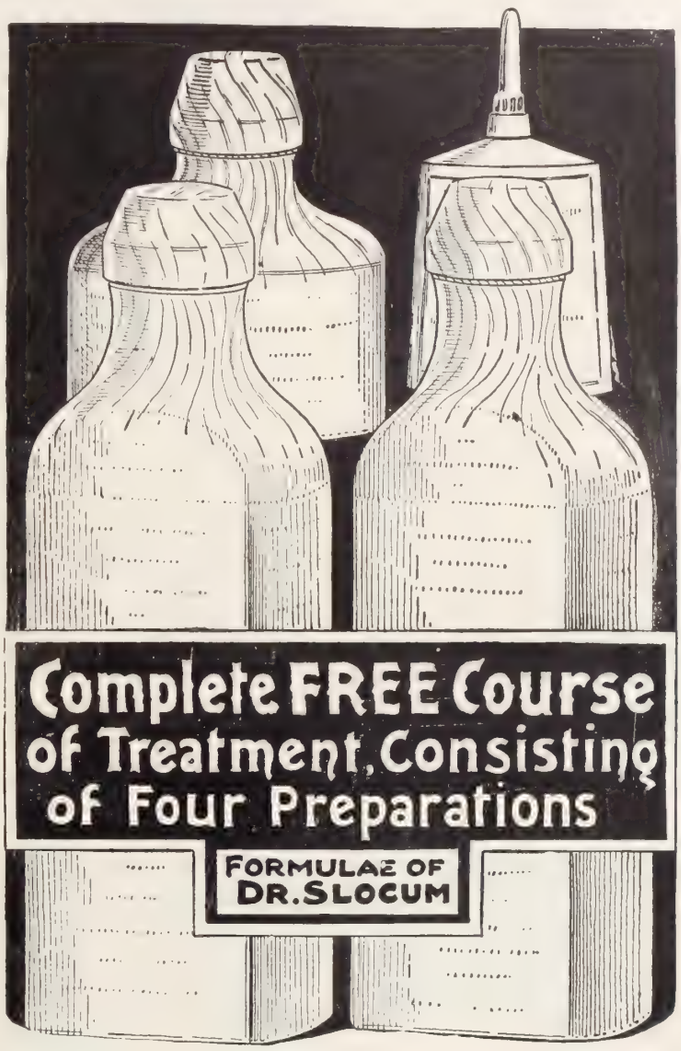
Loss of flesh, caused by blood that needs oxygen, is another.

Cold extremities and general sensitiveness to cold is another.

The system has cured thousands of help less invalids, whose cases had been given up as hopeless, because of its greater grasp upon scientific truths than any methods heretofore used in modern therapeutics. Their letters to-day on Dr. Slocum's files prove conclusively the efficacy of the treatment.

FREE TREATMENT TO ALL

As proof of the wonderful power of the system over all diseases due to lung weakness, the Doctor fraternally and liberally



These signs point to weakness, which is a great source of danger.

Weak lungs and weak system need building up, and the only scientific and certain way to do it is by the Slocum Treatment.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Veteran, Chelsea, Vt. Does not Mr. Roberts fairly represent the people of Utah? If so why is there any movement to prevent his taking his seat?

He does not fairly represent the people of Utah, because that State as a whole, and the Mormons as a body, have abjured and disavowed polygamy in accepting the conditions imposed by the Edmunds' Act. He represents the illegal element, who still hold fast to polygamy in defiance of law. Utah was admitted to statehood on the distinct understanding that polygamy was then and forever abjured. It would be a sad thing if the people of Utah, or a majority of them, like Mr. Roberts, disregarded that solemn covenant.

Anxious Inquirer, Ailsa Craig, Ont. When were the three temples built?

The first by Solomon about a thousand years before Christ. The second in the time of Ezra, in 536 B. C. The Jews claimed that there never was a third temple. The fact was that parts of the old temple were taken down and rebuilt before the other parts, so that during the rebuilding they were never without a temple, but during the process one part was new and another old. This was [illegible] completed about eighteen years before Christ.

Willa T., Chicago, Ill. I have been asked whether a thing is right when we believe it is right and I am in doubt. It seems to be a question whether conscience is an absolute safe guide.

It is possible for a person to believe a wrong thing is right. A case in point is that of the Apostle Paul who said that when he was persecuting Christians he honestly believed he was doing God service. The conscience needs to be enlightened. It is often possible to show a person that a certain course of conduct is wrong, even after he has come to a conclusion that it is right. The conscience is sometimes blinded by sophistry or by a strong desire for some coveted pleasure or gain. Or it may have been affected by education or environment. We are bound to follow its dictates and do what we believe to be right, but we have to be careful to get all the light we can to aid it in coming to a right decision.

We are in receipt of this letter from Manila, which will be read with pleasure by many of our friends who have been interested in the work to which it refers:

PINEDAR, P. I., Feb. 1899.

Editor "Christian Herald":

Will you, through the medium of THE MAIL BAG, thank your army of readers for their good work done to the boys in the Philippines in sending literature in response to my appeal printed several months ago? The papers do incalculable good, and I would like to write a personal letter to each person who responded. A salary of $15.60 a [illegible] will give this general "Thank You" letter.

The Yankee Xmas Club of Philadelphia (a sunshine distributing society) has responded nobly.

Thanks to you all, kind friends.

HOMER M. MESSENGER.

T. N. B., Scottsdale, Pa. There are some people who contend that it is impossible for a Christian to fall away, and that if a man does fall away, it is a proof that he was never really saved. Is that so?

We do not believe it. Unhappily, there are too many instances of good men falling into grievous sin for us to entertain the belief. Even in Bible times there are the cases of David who committed murder and adultery, and Peter who denied his Lord, and the man mentioned by Paul, II. Cor. 2: 6-8, who was evidently a backslider. The tone of the many promises to repenting backsliders in the Bible such as Deut. 4: 29; Isa. 57: 18; Jer. 4: 1; Hos 14: 4; Zach. 10: 6; Mal. 3: 7; I. John 2: 1, show that it is possible for good men to fall away and be forgiven. The Parable of the Prodigal Son (Luke 15: 12-24), shows that the son steeped in sin and in a far country, is a son still, though an erring one, and is recognized as such when he returns.

W. S. F., Del Rey, Calif. Is there any rational way of understanding the Trinity so as to explain it to a young person? Why, if Christ was one with the Father, as we are taught, did

It is not possible to attain a clear conception of the Trinity. The fact, as we believe, is positively revealed in the Bible, and we accept it as a mystery beyond our comprehension. We need not hesitate to do so, as we believe many things we do not understand. We do not know even how our own being is constituted, nor how the mind operates on the body. Christ was a revelation of the Father. The Father was in him, but in his humiliation in taking the form of man, he became subservient and naturally prayed to the Father, who is invisible. So much we may learn from the Bible, but no one can fully fathom the mystery.

L. P. W., West Liberty, Ill. Did Pastor Spurgeon practise close communion in his church? At what age was he ordained?

No one could become a member of his church unless he had been baptized by immersion; but he welcomed persons who had not been so baptized to the communion as visitors and brethren in Christ. He was never ordained.

S. S. B., Waterbury, Conn. Upon what principle was the recent shelling of defenceless Samoan villages by the warships of two civilized nations justifiable? Are we to be so blinded by the warlike spirit of vengeance as to forget justice? Will not God require at our hands the lives of those Samoan non-combatants who fall by our guns? As I understand the situation these people seem to have been driven to extremity by the interference of the foreign powers. Can you throw some light on the question at issue?

The Samoan trouble is certainly a strange muddle, but it may be more satisfactorily explained than our correspondent anticipates. It is a dispute dating back eleven years, to the time when Great Britain, Germany and the United States entered into a mutual agreement to establish a triple protectorate over Samoa. The real trouble began with the thwarting of Mataafa's claims to the throne, and the crowning of Malietoa. Now that the latter is dead, Germany has withdrawn her objection to Mataafa, but the other two powers adhere to the original agreement to exclude him from the throne. It is probable that a majority of the Samoans regard him as their lawful king, and it may yet be so decided by the highest authorities. Meanwhile, it is well to suspend judgment on events in Samoa until all the facts are received.

J. J. C., Rosner, Mich. Why is it that although ministers regularly read I. Cor. 15 at funerals,

Are you sure that it is [illegible] whole chapter, especially the [illegible] from the thirty-fifth verse, appears to us to teach that God will give a new body rather than that the old one shall be re-animated. Perhaps the uncertainty on this question may account for the omission you speak of.

Matilda D., Reading Pa. Is there any foundation for the claim put forward by the Catholic Church, that part of the real crown of thorns worn by the Saviour at the crucifixion, is still [illegible]

None whatever. The claim is of a character similar to that made several years ago concerning the "Holy Shirt," possession of which was claimed by two rival French cities, each exhibiting a garment which they declared to be the original one. Even more absurd claims have been made concerning the crown of thorns. Early in the present century, the Church of Rome claimed that twenty-seven of the original thorns were still in existence. Now, a leading churchman is credited with the declaration that there are 560 of the genuine thorns in existence and distributed in Paris, Jerusalem and Constantinople. There are many other statements equally apocryphal, and numerous treatises have been written by scholars to prove that it was still in existence, but all are discredited. Perhaps the most ancient of these legends is that which describes the discovery of the original crown of thorns by the Empress Helena. Gibbon, the historian, relates its subsequent fate.

Miller C., Rahway, N. J. What is the literal meaning of the word "Satan?"

It is from an identical Hebrew word, meaning to lie in wait, to oppose, to be an adversary. The term is, in the original, used in this sense in I. Kings 11: 14; same chapter, 23d verse; I. Sam. 29: 4; Numbers 22: 22; Zech. 3: 1, 2; Job, 1st and 2d chapters, and many other passages.

J. R. S., Tampa, Fla. Are we to conclude from Christ's statement to Nicodemus (John 3: 13) that no one, not even Elijah, had gone to

No; if you will read the preceding verses you will see that he meant no living person had been to heaven. Christ was complaining that people would not believe him when he told them about heaven, and yet they had no other [illegible] and returned to tell what he had seen.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE CITY OF LIVINGSTON, MONTANA

This is one of the "Wonder Cities" of the young West. Livingston is the product of that phenomenal prosperity which has been the means of founding many settlements that are now thriving and progressive centres of business and population. It is the Capital of Park County, Montana, situated at a junction on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and on the Yellowstone River, 100 miles distant from Helena. It has extensive carshops and is surrounded by a stock-raising, agricultural and coal and gold-mining district. Its population last census was 2,850, but is now very much larger, if not double that number.

OUR FAMINE . . . ORPHANS IN INDIA

How the Children Supported by "The Christian Herald" Fund Are Prospering Under the Care of the Faithful American Missionaries

WITH thoughtful kindness, Dr. D. Downie, the well-known Baptist missionary of Nellore, India, sends us portraits of twelve children who were rescued during the famine and are now under his care. A quarterly remittance from the funds contributed by readers of this journal goes to Dr. Downie toward the cost of supporting and educating them. He thought that the people to whose generosity these children owe their escape from death by famine, and whose kindness still aids in their support, would like to see pictures of the children's bright, intelligent faces. Ten of the twelve have lost both parents; the other two had mothers still living when they were received, but as nothing has been heard of them for a year, it is feared that they are dead. The names of the orphans have a strange sound in American ears. The front row, beginning on the right, bear the following names: Gundum, Vencatama, Miriam, Raji, Nowmani, Baba and Luke. The names of those in the rear are: Thatpudi, Nagirla, Santosham, Pedda and Chinna. In a sense these are the adopted children of the readers of this journal, as Dr. Downie was encouraged to undertake their charge by the promise of aid from the fund they contributed.

How well and wisely they are being trained may be inferred from the report of a visitor who a short time ago visited the institution in which they are sheltered. He writes: "Dr. Downie is manifestly an excellent missionary administrator in his Baptist diocese. Here there is a fine compound, with excellent buildings for mission purposes. Come with me over to Mrs. Downie's busy department, where her girls and women are taught all kinds of work that female fingers are wont to do. It seemed as if the girls were taught to do everything they are at all likely to be called on to do in their future homes. They learn to mend as well as to make. There is a class always at work under Mrs. Downie's eye. The boys' school is ably carried on. Then, Dr. Downie has a number of Bible women, whose home is here. On Friday evening we went to the weekly prayer-meeting in the church. It was mainly composed of the boys and girls of the school. We were gratified when the time came to throw the meeting 'open' for anyone to pray. Immediately a boy rose and prayed in Telugu. Then after him, without a second's delay, another boy led in prayer. The girls, too, prayed freely as their time came on." When we remember that these boys and girls will be able in a few years to go into the homes of their fellow-countrymen and speak to them in their own language of the religion of Christ, we can see how hopeful is the prospect that this work presents.

Another orphanage which is being assisted from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund, through Miss Edith H. May of the Women's Union Missionary Society, is under the charge of a Christian native lady, Miss Chuckerbatty. She writes us that "there are fifty-one children in the home, all of them famine orphans. One of them named Duklahia was found by a man during the famine sitting on the road beside her dying brother and chewing grass. He had asked her where her parents were, and her answer had been that they lay dead a few steps off that place. He went further down a bend of the road and came upon the emaciated body of a woman who must have died a few hours before; and a few steps more brought him before the dead body of a man, and dogs were devouring it. My friend brought the child home and kept her till he was able to bring her to me.

"Dharam Das, our eldest boy (just seven years old), was found by one of our servants under a bridge at Allahabad, one night in December, 1896. On my asking him if he had any friends, he answered they were all dead of starvation. Then I asked him again how he had lived, and where he had lived. He said he begged the whole day and at night slept under a bridge. He was the son of a farmer. I cannot describe the condition in which he had come, and it would be a very painful account indeed. Now our Dharam Das is the chubbiest little boy we have, and very intelligent.

"Each girl has a painful story of her own, and to relate them would be to bring back to memory the old time of dreadful suffering. But the Lord be praised that those days of misery are now over, and out of them have sprung up schools and institutions unto his glory and the lasting good of man. Every endeavor was made to nurse these wee bits of humanity that came to us with Christian lovingkindness. They came bloodless, mere skin and bones, full of sores, and suffering from various diseases consequent on starvation; but careful nursing and feeding brought them round.

"We have no funds, but we wait on the Lord for the money. Our girls are now learning to read and write Hindi. We are trying to get ours into the level of a primary school. The girls cook, grind, clean the house and sew. They are learning to wait at table and work in the garden. They are learning to sing and go through calisthenic exercises. Of course, they do all their work very imperfectly, but with God's blessing we hope to see them grow up to be good and noble women after a few more years of training. For, above all, our dear children, while taking pains to study their daily secular lessons, are also learning to love their Saviour. It more than repays one for any amount of trouble that might have been taken for them, to hear their sweet childish voices pray aloud at the prayer meetings we have. God doth yet perfect 'praise out of the mouths of babes and sucklings.'"

Shopping for the Poor

A Novel, Philanthropic Experiment Established by Calvary P. E. Church, New York

THE New York dailies have been giving much attention lately to a "new departure" in some methods of church work, being prosecuted by Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church. It is hardly a new departure, strictly speaking, but a new application of a principle upon which Calvary and several other churches have been operating for a long time. Our readers will probably recall the description given in these columns some years ago, of the opening of the Olive Tree Inn and the Tea Divan, when Rev. Mr. Satterlee, now Bishop, was pastor. The extension of Calvary's work along similar lines has been ably and faithfully prosecuted by Rev. J. Lewis Parks, the present Rector and his assistants, one of the most effective of whom is his wife, a truly earnest and consecrated worker.

The principle referred to above is very tersely expressed by Mrs. Parks in the words: "We never give something for nothing. We furnish employment to a number of women who come to the chapel, 220 E. 23rd St., twice a week, and receive material which they make up into various garments. A good deal of work is secured for them from hospitals and people of the parish. Sheets and towels are hemmed, and aprons made. For all work done, the women are paid just prices. Those who do not know how to sew will be instructed. At Calvary House, our Social Settlement, there are various industrial classes. Our experience in East Side work led to a recent determination to make arrangements for selling the poor what ever they need at fair prices on the instalment plan. As matters exist, the instalment plan of purchase is often used by unscrupulous dealers to make the poor pay many times the value of an article, and if each payment is not made on time, the article is forfeited. We will not undersell any reputable store, and we charge the moderate rate of interest such a store would charge on time purchases. By getting work for the women, we help them to meet their obligations. It amounts simply to this: that we shop for our poor, giving them the benefit of our superior knowledge, experience and credit."

Miss Cushing and Miss Anthony, resident workers of Calvary House, are in charge of this branch of humane activity. Two forenoons in every week, women may be seen passing in and out of the chapel carrying finished and unfinished work and parcels of various kinds. Groceries, as well as clothing are sold. These are always of the best and purest quality, and small quantities may be had at the same rate that the same things would cost in bulk. By this method, purchase of little delicacies for the sick is rendered possible. The whole plan may be summed up thus: In many cases things which used to be given are sold, and purchasers enabled to make payment by provision of fair work at fair rates; in other cases, the poor are relieved from paying extortionate rates for instalment plan purchases from unscrupulous traders. Shopping for the poor is often a way of rendering help which seems to benefit everybody concerned, as the following extracts from Miss Cushing's record of similar experiences illustrates: A mother wanted a cloak for her baby, but had not money to pay for it. Before she could save enough out of her earnings hot weather would come, and the child possibly die in the meanwhile. The ladies bought it for her, and she pays them in such instalments as are possible. The baby has a coat and the store makes a sale which it would not have made otherwise. The case of one beneficiary alone demonstrates the usefulness of the parish employment agency: A woman whose husband is dying of cancer can not go out to work without leaving him to the care of strangers. The ladies supply her with work that she can do at home while nursing him.

During the winter, coal by the bushel has been sold, a just weight at just price, on the instalment plan when necessary. Calvary's wood-yard experiment has proved very successful. This is in connection with the Galilee Mission. When men ask for temporal help, it is understood that it must be paid for by labor in the woodyard unless the applicant is physically unable to work. The opportunity to earn a night's meal or a lodging saves a man's self-respect and enables those in charge to discriminate between men needing work and the professional beggar. During the past year, 1,616 men found employment there. The establishment of a social settlement at Calvary House is also a recent enlargement of work, and promises very happy results. Tuesday evenings the boys of the neighborhood come in to spend an hour with the ladies; clean hands and good behavior being the only credentials required of any caller. There is a reading-room, industrial and recreation classes and clubs for both sexes and all ages.

In our illustration, the lady at the round table is engaged in receiving payments and charging up accounts. On benches, out of range of the camera, women wait for work, cloth and groceries. A number of sewing-women are gathered about the long table. They come and go all the morning. They are for the most part of the respectable poor, who are deserving in every way of assistance. The mothers' meetings of Calvary Chapel are doing good work. "The Cradle," opened a year ago in connection with the chapel is a very interesting feature. A small room is used as a nursery, and careful and competent women are in charge each Sunday to look after babies while mothers attend service.

The Late Justice Stephen J. Field

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, II. Samuel 3 : 38, . .

Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?

HERE is a plumed catafalque, followed by King David and a funeral oration which he delivers at the tomb. Concerning Abner, the great, David weeps out the text. More appropriately than when originally uttered we may now utter this resounding lamentation: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"

It was thirty minutes after six, the exact hour of sunset of the Sabbath day, and while the evening lights were being kindled, that the soul of Stephen J. Field, the lawyer, the judge, the patriot, the statesman, the Christian, ascended. It was sundown in the home on yonder Capitol Hill, as it was sundown on all the surrounding hills, but in both cases the sunset to be followed by a glorious sunrise. Hear the Easter anthems still lingering in the air: "The trumpet shall sound and the dead shall rise."

Our departed friend came forth a boy from a minister's home in New England. He knelt with father and mother at morning and evening prayer, learned from maternal lips lessons of piety which lasted him and controlled him amid all the varied and exciting scenes of a lifetime, and helped him to die in peace an octogenarian. Blot out from American history the names of those ministers' sons who have done honor to judicial bench and commercial circle and national legislature and presidential chair, and you would obliterate many of the grandest chapters of that history. It is no small advantage to have started from a home where God is honored and the subject of a world's emancipation from sin and sorrow is under constant discussion. The Ten Commandments, which are the foundation of all good law—Roman law, German law, English law, American law—are the best foundation upon which to build character, and those which the boy, Stephen J. Field, so often heard in the parsonage at Stockbridge were his guidance when a half century after, as a gowned justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, he unrolled his opinions. Bibles, hymn-books, catechisms, family prayers, atmosphere sanctified, are good surroundings for boys and girls to start from, and if our laxer ideas of religion and Sabbath days and home-training produce as splendid men and women as the much derided Puritanic Sabbath and Puritanic teachings have produced, it will be a matter of congratulation and thanksgiving.

Do not pass by the fact that I have not yet seen emphasized that Stephen J. Field was a minister's son. Notwithstanding that there are conspicuous exceptions to the rule—and the exceptions have built up a stereotyped defamation on the subject—statistics plain and undeniable prove that a larger proportion of ministers' sons turn out well than are to be found in any other genealogical table. Let all the parsonages of all denominations of Christians where children are growing up take the consolation. See the star of hope pointing down to that manger!

Notice also that our departed friend was a member of a royal family. There were no crowns or sceptres or thrones in that ancestral line, but the family of the Fields, like the family of the New York Primes, like the family of the Princeton Alexanders, like a score of families that I might mention, if it were best to mention them, were "the children of the King," and had put on them honors brighter than crowns and wielded influence longer and wider than sceptres. That family of Fields traces an honorable lineage back eight hundred years to Hubertus de la Feld, coadjutor of William the Conqueror. Let us thank God for such families, generation after generation on the side of that which is right and good. Four sons of that country minister, known the world over for extraordinary usefulness in their spheres, legal, commercial, literary and theological; and a daughter, the mother of one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court. Such families counterbalance for good those families all wrong from generation to generation—families that stand for wealth, unrighteously gotten and stingily kept or wickedly squandered; families that stand for fraud or impurity or malevolence; family names that immediately come to every mind, though through sense of propriety they do not come to the lip. The name of Field will survive centuries and be a synonym for religion, for great jurisprudence, for able Christian journalism, as the names of the Pharaohs and the Cæsars stand for cruelty and oppression and vice.

While parents cannot aspire to have such conspicuous households as the one the name of whose son we now celebrate, all parents may by fidelity in prayer and holy example, have their sons and daughters become kings and queens unto God, to reign forever and ever. But the work has already been done, and I could go through this country and find a thousand households which have by the grace of God and blessing upon paternal and maternal excellence become the Royal Families of America.

Let young men beware, lest they by their behavior blot such family records with some misdeed. We can all think of households, the names of which meant everything honorable and consecrated for a long while, but by the deed of one son sacrificed, disgraced and blasted. Look out how you rob your consecrated ancestry of the name they handed to you unsullied! Better as trustee to that name add something worthy. Do something to honor the old homestead, whether a mountain cabin or a city mansion or a country parsonage! Rev. David Dudley Field, though thirty-two years passed upward, is honored to-day by the Christian life, the service, the death of his son Stephen.

Among the most absorbing books of the Bible is the Book of Kings, which again and again illustrates that though piety is not hereditary, the style of parentage has much to do with the style of descendant. It declares of King Abijam, "He walked in all the sins of his father which he had done before him," and of King Azariah, "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his father Amaziah had done." We owe a debt to those who have gone before in our line as certainly as we have obligations to those who subsequently appear in the household. Not so sacred is your old father's walking-staff, which you keep in his memory, or the eye-glasses through which your mother studied the Bible in her old age as the name they bore, the name which you inherited. Keep it bright, I charge you. Keep it suggestive of something elevated in character. Trample not under foot that which to your father and mother was dearer than life itself. Defend their graves as they defended your cradle. Family coat-of-arms, escutcheons, ensigns armorial, lion couchant, or lion dormant, or lion rampant, or lion combatant, may attract attention, but better than all heraldic inscription is a family name which means from generation to generation, faith in God, self-sacrifice, duty performed, a life well lived and a death happily died, and a heaven gloriously won! That was the kind of name that Justice Field augmented and adorned and perpetuated—a name honorable at the close of the eighteenth century, more honored now at the close of the nineteenth.

Notice also that our illustrious friend was great in reasonable and genial dissent. Of the one thousand and forty-two opinions he rendered, none were more potent or memorable than those rendered while he was in small minority, and sometimes in a minority of one. A learned and distinguished lawyer of this country said he would rather be the author of Judge Field's dissenting opinions than to be the author of the Constitution of the United States. The tendency is to go with the multitude, to think what others think, to say and do what others do. Sometimes the majority are wrong, and it requires heroics to take the negative, but to do that logically and in good humor requires some elements of make-up not often found in judicial dissenters or, indeed, in any class of men. There are so many people in the world opposed to everything and who display their opposition in rancorous and obnoxious ways that a Judge Field was needed to make the negative respected, and genial, and right. Minorities under God save the world and save the church. An unthinking and precipitate "yes" may be stopped by a righteous and heroic "no." The majorities are not always right. The old Gospel hymn declares it:

> Numbers are no mark that men will right be found;
> A few were saved in Noah's ark to many millions [illegible]

The Declaration of American Independence was a dissenting opinion. The Free Church of Scotland, under Chalmers and his compeers, was a dissenting movement. The Bible itself, Old Testament and New Testament, is a protest against the theories that would have destroyed the world, and is a dissenting as well as a divinely-inspired book. The Decalogue on Sinai repeated ten times "Thou shalt not." For ages to come will be quoted from law books in court rooms Justice Field's magnificent dissenting opinions.

Notice that our ascended friend had such a character as assault and peril alone can develop. He had not come to the soft cushions of the Supreme Court Bench stepping on cloth of gold and saluted all along the line by hand-clapping of applause. Country parsonages do not rock their babes in satin-lined cradle, or afterward send them out into the world with enough in their hand to purchase place and power. Pastors' salaries in the early part of this century hardly ever reached seven hundred dollars a year. Economies that sometimes cut into the bone characterized many of the homes of the New England clergymen. The young lawyer of whom we speak to-day arrived in San Francisco in 1849 with only ten dollars in his pocket. Williamstown College was only introductory to a post-graduate course which our illustrious friend took while administering justice and halting ruffianism amid the mining-camps of California. Oh, those "forty-niners," as they were called, through what privations, through what narrow escapes, amid what exposures they moved! Administering and executing law among outlaws never has been an easy undertaking. Among mountaineers, many of whom had no regard for human life, and where the snap of pistol and bang of gun were not unusual responses, required courage of the highest metal.

Behind a dry-goods box, surmounted by tallow candles, Judge Field began his judicial career. What exciting scenes he passed through! An infernal machine was handed to him, and inside the lid of the box was pasted his decision in the Pueblo case, the decision that had baulked unprincipled speculators. Ten years ago his life would have passed out had not an officer of the law shot down his assailant. It took a long training of hardship, and abuse, and misinterpretation, and threat of violence, and flash of assassin's knife, to fit him for the high place where he could defy legislatures, and congresses, and presidents, and the world, when he knew he was right. Hardship is the grindstone that sharpens intellectual faculties, and the swords with which to strike effectively for God and one's country.

The reason that life to so many is a failure is because they do not have oppo- [illegible] run over by them instead of using them [illegible] mount. Those "born with a gold spoon in their mouths" are apt to take their last [illegible] brave heart in all departments, ye men of many obstacles! There is no brawn or character without them. The roughs glaring and growling around about the shed of a court room in Marysville, California, had as much to do with Judge Field's development as Mark Hopkins, the great Williamstown College president. Opposition develops courage. I like the ring of Martin Luther's defiance, when he said to the Duke of Saxony: "Things are otherwise ordered in heaven than they are at Augsburg."

Notice also how much our friend did for the honor of the judiciary. What momentous scenes have been witnessed in our United States Supreme Court, on the bench and before the bench, whether far back it held its sessions in the upper room of the Exchange at New York, or afterward for ten years in the City Hall at Philadelphia, or later in the cellar of yonder Capitol, the place where for many years the Congressional Library was kept, a sepulchre where books were buried alive, the hole called by John Randolph "The Cave of Trophonius!" What mighty men stood before that bar pleading in immortal eloquence on questions of national import! Edmund Randolph, and Alexander Hamilton, and Pinkney, and Jeremiah Mason, and Caleb Cushing, and the weird and irresistible Rufus Choate, and George Wood, and Charles O'Connor, and James T. Brady, and Francis B. Cutting, and men now living just as powerful.

How suggestive the invitation which William Wirt, the great Virginian, wrote his friend inviting him to yonder Supreme Court room: "To-morrow a week will come on the great steamboat question from New York. Emmett and Oakley on one side, Webster and myself on the other. Come down and hear it. Emmett's whole soul is in the case, and he will stretch all his powers. Oakley is said to be one of the finest logicians of the age, as much a Phocion as Emmett is a Themistocles, and Webster is as ambitious as Cæsar: he will not be outdone by any man if it is within the compass of his power to avoid it. Come to Washington. It will be a combat worth witnessing." The Supreme Court has stood so high in England and the United States that the vices of a few who have occupied that important place have not been able to disgrace it, neither the corruption of Francis Bacon, nor the cruelty of Sir George Mackenzie, nor the Sabbath desecration of Lord Castlereagh.

To that highest of all tribunals Abraham Lincoln called our friend, but he lived long enough to honor the Supreme Court more than it had ever honored him. For more than thirty-four years he sat in the presence of this nation and of all nations, a model judge. Fearlessness, integrity, devotion to principle, characterized him. No bribe ever touched his hand. No profane word ever scalded his tongue. No blemish of wrong ever marred his character. Fully qualified was he to have his name associated in the history of this country with the greatest of the judiciary.

As at twelve o'clock day by day on yonder hill the gavel falls in the Supreme Court room, and it is announced that the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices are about to enter, and all counsellors at the bar and all spectators rise to greet them, and the officer with the words, "O yez! O yez! O yez!" announces that all is now ready for a hearing, and exclaims, "God, save the United States of America," so I wish we could in imagination gather together those who have occupied that high judicial place in this and other lands, and they might enter, and after the falling of some mighty gavel had demanded attention, we could look upon them—Marshall, the giant of American jurisprudence; and John Jay, of whom Daniel Webster said in commemoration, "When the spotless ermine of the judicial robe fell on John Jay it touched nothing less spotless than itself;" and Rutledge; and Cushing; and Ellsworth; and Joseph Storey, called the Walter Scott of common law; and Sir Matthew Hale; and

Lord Eldon; and Lord Tenterden; and Sir James McIntosh; and Mansfield, and the long line of Lord Chancellors and the great judges from both sides the sea—and after they had taken their places in our quickened imagination the distinguished cases of centuries which they decided might again be called on, after the assembled nations had ejaculated, "God save the United States of America," "God save Great Britain," "God save the nations."

Ah! how the law honors and sanctifies everything it touches. Natural law. Civil law. Social law. Commercial law. Common law. Moral law. Ecclesiastical law. International law. Oh, the dignity, the impressiveness, the power of law! It is the only thing before which Jehovah bows, but he bows before that, although the law is of his own making. The law! By it worlds swing. By it the fate of centuries is decided. By it all the affairs of time and all the cycles of eternity will be governed. We cannot soar so high, or sink so deep, or reach out so far, or live so long as to escape it. It is the throne on which the Almighty sits. To interpret law, what a profession! What a responsibility! What an execration when the judge be a Lord Jeffreys! What a benediction if he be a Chancellor Kent!

In passing, let me say that for this chief tribunal of our country, Congress should soon provide a better place. Let some of the moneys voted for the improvement of rivers which are nothing but dry creeks, and for harbors which will never have any shipping, and for monuments to some people—whom it is not at all important for us to remember—be voted for the erection of a building worthy of our United States Supreme Court. John Ruskin, in Stones of Venice, calls attention to the pleasing fact that in the year 813 the Doge of Venice devoted himself to putting up two great buildings—St. Marks, for the worship of God, and a palace for the administration of justice to man. In its appreciation of what is best let not 1899 be behind 813. With such granite in our quarries, and such architects capable of drafting sublime structure, and such magnificent sites on which to build, let not another year pass before we hear the trowel ring on the corner-stone of a temple to be occupied by the highest court of the land.

Have you ever realized how much God has honored law in the fact that all up and down the Bible he makes the judge a type of himself, and employs the scene of a court room to set forth the grandeurs of the great judgment day? Book of Genesis: "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" Book of Deuteronomy: "The Lord shall judge his people." Book of Psalms: "God is Judge himself." Book of the Acts: "Judge of quick and dead." Book of Timothy: "The Lord the righteous Judge." Never will it be understood how God honors judges and court rooms until the thunderbolt of the last day shall pound the opening of the great assize—the day of trial, the day of clearance, the day of doom, the day of judgment. The law of the case on that occasion will be read, and the indictment of ten counts, which are the Ten Commandments. Justice will plead the case against us, but our glorious Advocate will plead in our behalf, for "we have an Advocate with the Father—Jesus Christ, the righteous." Then the case will be decided in our clearance, as the Judge announces "There is now, therefore, no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." Under the crowded galleries of cloud on that last day, and under the swaying upholstery of a burning heavens, and while the Alps, and Himalayas, and Mount Washington are falling flat on their faces, we will be able to understand the significance of those Scripture passages which speak of God as Judge and employ the court room of earth as typical of the scene when all nations shall be brought into Tribunal.

To have done well, all that such a profession could ask of him, and to have made that profession still more honorable by his brilliant and sublime life, is enough for national and international, terrestrial and celestial congratulation. And then to expire beautifully, while the prayers of his church were being offered at his bedside, the door of heaven opening for his entrance as the door of earth opened for his departure, the sob of the earthly farewell caught up into raptures that never die.

Yes, he lived and died in the faith of the old-fashioned Christian religion.

Young man, I want to tell you that Justice Field believed in the Bible from lid to lid, a book all true either as doctrine or history, much of it the history of events that neither God nor man approves. Our friend drank the wine of the Holy Sacrament, and ate the bread of which "if a man eat he shall never hunger." He was the up and down, out and out friend of the church of Christ. If there had been anything illogical in our religion he would have scouted it, for he was a logician. If there had been in it anything unreasonable he would have rejected it, because he was a great reasoner. If there had been in it anything that would not stand research, he would have exploded the fallacy, for his life was a life of research. Young men of Washington! young men of America! young men of the round world! a religion that would stand the test of Justice Field's penetrating and all-ransacking intellect must have in it something worthy of your confidence. I tell you now that Christianity has not only the heart of the world on its side, but the brain of the world also. Ye who have tried to represent the religion of the Bible as something pusillanimous, how do you account for the Christian faith of Stephen J. Field, whole shelves of the law library occupied with his magnificent decisions?

And now may the God of all comfort speak to the bereft: especially to her who was the queen of his life, from the day when as a stranger he was shown to her pew in the Episcopal church, to this time of the broken heart. He changed churches but did not change religions, for the church in which he was born, and the church in which he died, alike believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son, and in the communion of saints, and in the life everlasting. Amen.

The body of our friend sleeps in temporary resting-place. Hearts overwhelmed with grief cannot just now decide where that sacred and silent form shall hear the trumpet that wakes the dead. Three places are proposed, and all appropriate. Some say let it be in some God's acre near this Capital, where the pillows of dust are already embroidered with spring flowers. How appropriate some cemetery near this city, which was so long his residence, and so near the place where he sat in judgment, holding evenly the balances that God put in his hand! It would be well for us sometimes to go out and read his epitaph and recall his virtues. Some say let him rest on the Pacific slope, where he achieved so much for the new State and fitted himself for so great eminence; and it would be beautiful to let the whole nation bow at his passing catafalque, a funeral reaching from ocean to ocean and three thousand miles long, the Alleghenies and the Rockies and the Sierra Nevadas echoing the thunders of the rail train taking him to his last earthly home.

But equally as appropriate is another proposal that he be put to rest amid the graves of father and mother and renowned brothers and the New England friends of the family in the cemetery at Stockbridge, Massachusetts. After a life of toil and struggle he needs some quiet place. Old men who were his school-fellows would lean heavily upon the staff and watch as he was brought through the gates of the place in which they also will soon lie down to rest. Far away from the jostle and contention and rush and activities of the great cities he would sleep the calm sleep of the just. The hyacinths and calla lilies of the spring planted there would typify the resurrection, and the snows of winter banked there would suggest the robes made white in the blood of the Lamb.

Good-by, my dear old friend of more than thirty years. Your words of personal encouragement and good cheer give me the right to offer words of commemoration. But I must leave to others his place of burial. This city might choose Rock Creek and Oak Hill, and San Francisco might choose Lone Mountain; yet if I had my choice I would say let it be the cemetery at Stockbridge. He would be at home there, and it would be a family reunited; but whatever be the place, let me sprinkle over the newly-made grave this handful of heather from the Scotch highlands, in the hymn which the people of that land of Andrew Melville and John Knox are apt to sing on their way to the grave of some one greatly beloved:

Neighbor, accept our parting song,
The road is short, the rest is long;
The Lord brought here, the Lord takes hence,
This is no house of permanence.

On bread of mirth and bread of tears
The pilgrim fed these checkered years;
Now landlord world, shut to the door,
Thy guest is gone forever more.

Gone to the land of sweet repose,
His comrades bless him as he goes;
Of toil and moil the day was full,
A good sleep now, the night is cool.

Yea, village bells, ring softly, ring,
And in the blessed Sabbath bring;
Which from this weary work-day tryst
Awaits God's folk through Jesus Christ.

Women's Work at Northfield

The Ninth Year of the Moody Training School Concluded—Many Instructive Addresses

NINE years have elapsed since the Training School for Young Women was opened at East Northfield, Mass., by Mr. D. L. Moody, the well-known evangelist. During that time, it has sent out to the world an army of trained Christian women, the majority of whom are now doing excellent service in many different stations in life. The ninth year's work of the Training School has just ended. At the closing meeting, Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., of Boston, addressed the school, and many friends gathered for the occasion, on the theme, "Divine Guidance from the Human Standpoint." The year's work was represented by papers read by the students, describing the different classes in the Bible course, which is the fundamental work of the school; and also by an exhibit of the cooking class work, dressmaking and drawing.

Though itself the centre of such far-reaching influence through its schools and the well-known summer conferences, Northfield is situated in the midst of like conditions to those which prevail in so arge a proportion of the country—where far distances and comparatively few people make the support of church life and privileges exceedingly difficult. The results consequent upon this isolation are becoming more and more pronounced. President William Dewitt Hyde, comparing the city with its constant increase of country population, to an inland lake fed by many streams, yet having no outlet, says: "As is the fountain, as are the streams, so shall be the lake. The problem of rural Christianity is but the problem of national Christianity stated a few generations in advance." A solution of this problem is being worked out in Northfield, as students from the Training School go, week by week, into the surrounding districts for Sunday School work with the little ones; Bible classes for older people, and converting the schoolhouses into halls for Gospel meetings and church services. Perhaps the visits made are the most important part of the work.

"I cannot tell how much this has meant to me," said a girl, who having been confined to her bed for two years, unable even to use her eyes to read, appreciated the presence and the bright and comforting words of the visiting student.

Besides the actual results accomplished, an experience is being gained by the students, the value of which is testified to by those who have gone out to find all their training called into constant use.

The Moody School will reopen in October with extended Bible course, and in each department offering a thorough equipment for practical Christian service.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Vine and the Branches

S. S. Lesson for May 7. John 15: 1-11
Golden Text, John 15: 5

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

THE only use of the vine is to bring forth fruit, and it is in relation to fruit-bearing that our Lord says of himself, "I am the true Vine": "Ye are the branches.' The wood of a vine is useless except for fuel. "Shall wood be taken thereof to make any work? Or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon? Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel" (Ezek. 15: 3, 4). It is only as the wood and the foliage are cut away, that the sap is concentrated in the fruit, and thus it serves its purpose. What a picture of human nature; useless, undependable, unprofitable; fit only to be burned, except as the life of God comes in, and brings forth fruit in a life which, without him, "can do nothing," and is fit only to be burned!

In Psalm 80, there is a prophecy of him who is the true Vine. How shall God visit this vine, the stock which his right hand hath planted, and the branch or son [Heb.] which he made strong for himself, and which is burned with fire? "Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the Son of man whom thou madest strong for thyself. So shall we not go back from thee." (Ps. 80: 14–18). Only the incoming life of "the true Vine" can replace the life of the degenerate vine. "I am the true Vine," but then, "My Father is the Husbandman"; and there can be no branch in me which will not submit to his cultivation. Absolute submission to, and absolute confidence in our Heavenly Father is needed, that we may really "bring forth fruit unto God."

The great Husbandman cannot be mistaken; he knows the wild sour grape, and he knows the "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance" (Gal. 5: 22, R. V.), "the fruit of the Spirit," which he is seeking. And wherever such fruit is not to be found on a branch, "He taketh it away." Have we not seen, again and again, an apparent conversion, and yet bearing fruit which was far from divine: strife, envying, self-exaltation, jealousy, self-indulgence? The product of the flesh is there; the branch has brought forth fruit unto itself. Little by little, such so-called conversions wither away. They do not love their Saviour enough to keep his commandments; they do not trust their Heavenly Father sufficiently to accept his pruning. When a favorite plan is upset, when work which they have wanted to do is put into other hands, when some beloved companion is removed, utterly regardless of the purpose of the great Husbandman, to obtain more fruit, they pity themselves, seek for consolation in the world, backslide, and God takes them away; they are cut off. The connection with the Vine was not vital, they were never really made partakers of the divine nature: their human intellect had grasped, their human emotions had been stirred for a time by divine things, but the citadel of the being, the will, had not been taken, captured by God to serve him. Every branch that beareth fruit, he cleanseth it or pruneth it that it may bear more fruit.

There is one indispensable necessity for fruit-bearing—"Abide in me and I in you." The branch cannot bear fruit of itself. Only its constant connection with the vine makes fruit-bearing possible. Some great blessing which we may have experienced yesterday cannot enable us to bear fruit to-day: it is as this day, this hour, we are abiding in him, in what he is, not in what we are, that we can bring forth fruit; and we can only abide in him as he abides in us. This takes our eye off ourselves, and that morbid watching our own experience which is a hindrance to so many. We cannot make ourselves fruitful, but all the real contact and habitual dependence and obedience which we exercise towards our beloved Lord makes us fruitful, whether we are conscious of it or not. It is very noticeable that the fruit is not spoken of as consisting in what we do: the number of souls saved, the amount of money we give, and how far we deny ourselves, etc., etc., it is what we are, the principles from which these things sprung. The love which cannot but win souls, and testify of Christ, and the joy, peace, long-suffering, etc., which are reflected from him in whose presence we live, and from whose life ours proceeds—these are the fruit of the Spirit. Thus we see that the spirit in which we do a thing is more important than the thing itself. Works may be done for vain glory, from the love of being prominent and important, but love "seeketh not her own is not puffed up." And without him who is love, we cannot bring forth love.

A VINE ON THE ROOF OF THE PORTICO OF AN ORIENTAL HOME

"If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered, and they gather them and cast them into the fire and they are burned." As in Ezekiel 15, the branch, the wood of the vine, is useless in itself except for the fire. How then can we keep up the connection with the true Vine? "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Access to the throne of grace is ever open, and there is no other way of abiding than in the dependence of continual prayer and faith. As our Lord's interests become always more really our measure as we abide in him, so we are continually more conscious that our interests are his as he dwells in our hearts by faith (Eph. 3: 17).

"My Father worketh hitherto and I work" (John 5: 17). We are his workmanship (Eph. 2: 10), but we are also the workmanship of the Father, and our Lord rejoices to say, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples." Oh, the intense satisfaction of the Father to see in his own Son on earth, living as the Son of man, in complete dependence upon him, the very fruit which he sought in vain on the old vine of Israel, which brought forth fruit unto itself. How the Father's heart must have been glad that the accomplishment of his great purposes for man, which had been postponed for a time through the fall, and the temporary triumph of Satan, should at last be carried out, seeing that his own Son had become the Way of obedience, on which every man who willed might walk, and had made it possible that a seed should serve him (Ps. 22: 30).

Lesson Points

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

STRANGE indeed and very significant were these parting words of our Lord. Knowing that within a few hours he would be betrayed, arrested and put to death, he uses the brief period remaining to him to tell his disciples how they might have joy—his joy. These men, from whom he was so soon to be separated, were to carry on his work and preach him to the world: but he does not give them any instructions about the kind of church they were to establish. He uses the time in telling them how they might have life. They could not understand his promise to be with them, when he was removed from them. So, according to his habit, from which they had already learned so much, he gives them one more allegory, or parable. They were familiar with the vine, which was extensively cultivated in Palestine: they were familiar, too, with the Old Testament image of Israel as a vine which God had planted, and which disappointed him by bearing wild grapes: now they learned that Christ was the true vine, and they were the branches. He could not bear fruit, any more than the vine could bear grapes: it was they, the branches, that would bear fruit, as in the natural vine. He could no longer teach and minister to the sick and the poor: they must do that. But they could do it only as they derived power from him, just as the branches of the vine could bear fruit only as they were in the vine. As the sap, the life of the vine, passed into the branches, so his spirit would enter into them and make them fruitful. This was the abiding that they could not understand. Nature showed them that such close connection was possible. It was one and the same life, passing from him to them, and it would be a source of fruit and joy. The same means of cementing this life-giving union that he had indicated before, he again presents to them—love and obedience. Through them they draw ever closer. Then, proceeding with the allegory, he shows them how they would suffer for a purpose. The long, trailing, graceful branches, covered with beautiful leaves, are cut so that the life may go to fruit, not to wood and leaves. Mere eloquence and grace would be pruned in order that the man might fulfill his true function of bearing fruit, which was the very purpose of his union with Christ. They were already clean; they were purified from past sins—now they must go on to show more abundantly the fruits of the Spirit that was in them, and winning souls for Christ. The form of the church to be established was not so essential a matter as that they should be united to Christ and his life should be in them.

He purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit. God sometimes brings his servants into affliction and retirement that other people may be helped by them. Luther was so busy a man that the university would have monopolized him. But he was shut up in the Wartburg with nothing to do, and then he had leisure to translate the Bible into his mother tongue. Bunyan was a successful preacher and he missed no opportunity of speaking for Christ; but, if all had gone well with him, his own generation would alone have profited by his genius and his labors. He was imprisoned in Bedford jail and it seemed as if his usefulness was at an end, but there he wrote the Pilgrim's Progress, which has been a blessing to subsequent generations, and to hundreds of times as many people as he could have addressed if he had been at liberty. If he had not been imprisoned, we should have had no such work from him. Richard Baxter said: "While I was in health, I had not the least thought of writing a book; but when I was weakened by great sickness and left solitary in my chamber and was sentenced to death by my physicians, I began to meditate on the rest which remains for the people of God. Thinking that if I recovered, I would preach on that subject, I wrote down my thoughts, intending the quantity of a sermon or two, but my weakness continuing, I wrote on until it attained the bulk in which it is published." That is the way the church obtained the book called The Saints' Everlasting Rest.

Except ye abide in me. It would be no use to tie the branch to the vine. It must grow out of it. The life of the vine must run into the branches, otherwise, as Christ said, they can bear no fruit. There is a story told of a young man who went to Smyrna, to engage in the fruit trade. He bore the name of a well-known Hamburg merchant, and it was soon known that he was the merchant's son. The young man had very little money, but he found that the banks and the merchants were all willing and eager to do business with him, for he had letters from his father which showed that the father had full confidence in him and was backing his enterprise. After two years, however, there came a change. The young man offended his father by his inattention to business and his dissipation. A Smyrna merchant who visited Hamburg brought back word that the father had broken entirely with his son. The news caused a complete reversal in the son's standing in Smyrna. He could get no credit from the merchants, and no accommodation at the banks. The Christian has no power but that which he derives from Christ, who said, "Without me ye can do nothing."

Ye shall ask what ye will. That must be a very high attainment when a Christian can be so trusted. A man must have great confidence in his son before he would say to him, "Whatever you ask, I will give you." The son might ask something that it was not in the father's power to grant; or he might ask something that would do him an injury if he had it; or something that it would be unjust to others for him to have. Before making so large a promise, the father must know his son's discretion, and the son must have shown the deepest respect for his father, and be so close to his heart that he has not a thought or a desire that is not in accord with his father's principles. When such a father has such a son, and, not till then, is it safe to promise to give him anything that he may ask for.

Two Consecrated Bowery Mission Converts now Pastors on Nebraska Plains

—The Cowboy Preacher's Plea for a Prairie Church

DURING the twenty years of its existence, the Bowery Mission has been the scene of a multitude of conversions. Of the numbers who have there experienced the new birth, and awakened to the possibilities and opportunities of a consecrated, spiritual life, many have gone out to different parts of the world as workers for Christ. To-day, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relates, briefly, the story of two of these converts in their new field. Both are earnestly laboring in the Gospel ministry, and have already been instrumental in leading souls to the light.

REV. JOSEPH L. PAYNTER

REV. F. J. BAYLIS, COWBOY PREACHER

Over a year ago, a band of these converts left the Mission for the far West, feeling led to devote themselves to missionary work. Among the number were Joseph L. Paynter and Frederic J. Baylis, who spent the summer months of 1898 in the mining camps and towns of the Rocky mountains after they had journeyed across Nebraska, where they held services in the leading churches: at Columbus, Grand Island, Hastings, Minden, Holdrege, and McCook. At Denver they spent several weeks holding church services, besides meetings for men under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Their addresses upon the work of the Bowery Mission always excited the most intense interest. They were kindly received by Rev. Dr. Rankin of the Central Presbyterian, Dr. Phifer of the Asbury M. E., Dr. Pettibone of the Boulevard Congregational, Rev. Jesse Gravett of the Galilee Baptist, and Rev. H. E. Warner of the Christ M. E. churches.

Their simple, earnest eloquence won all hearts. Open-air meetings were held nightly near the Denver Central Postoffice by the Haymarket Mission Workers, the services being conducted by the two strangers, and some of the scenes that took place have not yet been forgotten by the good people of that city. These gatherings resulted in a number of sound conversions among the workingmen.

After a time, Mr. Baylis associated himself with the American Sunday School Union as a field worker, and shortly afterward took spiritual charge of the M. E. Church at Imperial, Neb. Mr. Paynter, after conducting a series of Gospel meetings in East Nebraska—at Grand Island, Ashland and Lincoln—engaged in pioneer missionary work in that State. Concerning his work, he says:

My field is one of "magnificent distances," covering nearly all of one county and part of another. To keep the appointments it is necessary for me to travel sixty-seven miles one Sunday, and on the following Sunday thirty-seven miles. Dr. W. F. Weikal, President of the Sunday School Association of Southwest Nebraska, kindly supplied me with a team. This part of Nebraska suffered severely during the great drought several years ago, and many people left the country. The people there have never forgotten the generosity of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in raising a fund for the relief of the suffering farmers in that trying time. The past year was a prosperous one.

Our church is a substantial frame building built on the prairie. The nearest house is half a mile east. People come from a distance of many miles to worship. It is known as the Mt. Zion Church.

The devotion of the few church members to the work of the Master is commendable. At one of the prairie churches, thirty miles from the railroad, there are four families with eleven children who have held Sunday School every Sunday during the past winter. At Pink Prairie every family in the colony attends Sunday School, crowding the little 12x19 1-2 building in which they meet. This is said to be the smallest church in the United States.

I am grateful for the efficiency as a worker which my experience in the Bowery Mission has given me. From the day when first I was attracted to the Mission I have never ceased to be grateful for that old Gospel lighthouse. I became addicted to the use of morphine while I was principal of the public schools of a town in Eastern Pennsylvania. As a result I lost my hold on my profession, was estranged from loved ones, and became a wanderer upon the face of the earth. I drifted to New York where I lived under an assumed name. In October, 1896, one day while I was walking down the Bowery, I saw the notice of the mid-day prayer-meeting of the Bowery Mission. I was tired and entered to rest. During the service the Spirit led the organist to begin playing and singing an old favorite hymn of my mother's. It awakened the memory of happier days and broke my heart all to pieces. I determined to surrender and consecrate my life to Christ. From that moment till now, it has been my privilege to testify to both the saving and the keeping power of the love of God.

MOUNT ZION CHURCH

Mr. Baylis is an Englishman by birth, a native of Stratford-on-Avon, the home of Shakespeare. He was a soldier in the British Army in Zulu-land under General Wolseley. He is forty-one years of age and is known in Nebraska as "the cowboy preacher." He is a regularly ordained pastor of the M. E. Church, with his pastoral charge in Chase County, Neb. At the present time he is in New York, where he is making an effort to interest the friends of our Western pioneer churches with the view of raising money for a suitable church building. Mr. Baylis, speaking of his work, says:

Chase County, until the Fall of 1885 and Spring of 1886, was inhabited only by cattlemen. Its broad prairies, covered with a rich growth of grass and with deep, clean streams, furnished one of the most magnificent cattle ranges found anywhere in the West, and the cattlemen clung to the land with a tenacity that only the government authorities could break loose. The rich soil did not know the plowshare until 1886; then immigration set in, and to-day Chase County is well populated with a fine, intelligent type of people. Imperial, the county-seat, is a town of 400 inhabitants, situated upon one of the finest tracts of prairie in the State. In this prairie town I am pastor, preaching in the Court House, a frame structure. We realize that a church building is sorely needed. We have determined to make an effort to erect one, which will cost $1,500. Our own people have subscribed nearly $600. I have come to New York to try to interest Eastern people in our work.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes into many homes in Nebraska. The farmers remember it with gratitude, and now they hope it may help them once again in this effort to further God's kingdom.

A deep spiritual interest is manifesting itself among the non-church-going people of Chase County. One of our leading merchants, an unbeliever heretofore, now has awakened to the fact that the Gospel is, after all, beneficial to the community, and has given $25 toward our church, besides land to build upon. We have had a number of genuine conversions during our services in the Court House.

I continually rejoice in the work that is going on in the Bowery Mission, where many diamonds "in the rough" are found and polished to shine for the glory of God and the up-building of his kingdom. There is where I first saw the folly of longer striving against God, and gave up trying to accomplish anything in my own strength, and trusted in Jesus. He has never left me nor forsaken me since that day.

A SOD HOUSE ON THE NEBRASKA PLAINS

Calling a Spade a Spade.

A lady once said to Evangelist Moody: "I have got so in the habit of exaggerating that my friends accuse me of exaggerating so that they don't understand me."

She said: "Can you help me? What can I do to overcome it?"

"Well," I said, "the next time you catch yourself lying, go right to that party and say you have lied, and tell him you are sorry. Say it is a lie; stamp it out, root and branch; that is what you want to do."

"Oh," she said, "I wouldn't like to call it lying."

But that is what it was. Christianity isn't worth a snap of your finger if it does not completely straighten out your character.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS . . . IN CONFERENCE

The Ninth International Sunday School Convention Now in Session at Atlanta, Ga.

AMONG the great conventions of the year, few can claim so widespread an interest as the International Sunday School Convention which meets this week at Atlanta, Ga. It is expected that fully a thousand Sunday School workers, representing all States of the Union, the provinces of Canada, and the schools of Mexico, will be assembled to discuss methods and plans of work and the general interests of Sunday Schools. This is the ninth of these great conventions, which are now held every third year. It is twenty-one years since Atlanta welcomed the delegates, an interval in which there has been wonderful progress both in numbers and in methods. It is believed that when the final statistics are made up, the numbers of teachers and pupils will be found to have increased by more than eighty per cent. during that time. When it is remembered that the Sunday School teachers of the United States, Canada and Mexico constitute a great army of a million and a half workers, who have charge of registered pupils to the number of over twelve millions, it will be readily seen how important a gathering this must be. Reports will be presented from the sections represented. The Convention will be in session four days, beginning April 26, and three meetings will be held each day. On the first page are portraits of five of the officers and a picture of the Grand Opera House in which the meetings will be held.

W. S. WITHAM,
Chairman Finance Com.

From Mr. M. D. Byers, the indefatigable Secretary of the Convention, we learn that the business will be grouped under the following seven heads: First—The work as at present conducted, and to make such changes and improvements as are necessary. Second—How to reach and help the most needy parts of our field in the United States and Canada. Third—To consider the work among the colored people in the South; how it can be improved and extended. Fourth—How to aid the workers in Mexico and Cuba, which are now a part of the International field. Fifth—To inquire what can be done for the newly acquired possessions of the United States. Sixth—Our relations to Sunday School workers throughout the United States and the whole world; how we may co-operate with them to improve and extend the work. Seventh—To determine the time and place of the Tenth International Convention and the World's Fourth Sunday School Convention. No part of this extensive programme will be of greater interest than the momentous question of the new territories of Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

The organization which manages these conventions, is, as previously stated in this journal, composed of two committees. One of these is the Executive Committee consisting of sixty members, one from each of the States, Territories and Provinces who are recommended by the State Sunday School Associations and serve for a term of three years. Its functions are to arrange the Triennial Convention and to direct the missionary work in the interval and to render aid to such districts as need it. The other committee is the International Lesson Committee consisting of fifteen members representing the chief denominations, who serve for six years and are elected by the Convention. This committee meets annually to select the lessons for the year. Its members serve without compensation. Probably no greater service has ever been rendered to Sunday School work than that of this committee, which has furnished the schools with a systematic method of studying the Bible.

The White Man's Exposure to Deadly Climate

IF the white man has great burdens and responsibilities, is it impossible for him to meet them? He only knows what is true civilization. He only knows how to educate semi-barbarous nations for citizenship. Does he have enough scientific knowledge, and will he exercise sufficient guardianship over himself to make it possible to go into regions unwholesome, and do the work ordained for him to do? The American soldier goes to Cuba and the Philippines, and successfully defies unsanitary conditions, partly because of the rules of discipline in the army. Is it possible for the trader, the merchant, the mechanic, the agriculturist to accept new sanitary conditions, to submit to new hygienic laws, to acclimate themselves to these new territories, and thus help solve the problems which are before us?

Great Britain has an empire in the East Indies. She has not acquired it and kept it without sending distinguished Englishmen there. It is an ambition of young men to find a place in India, to acquire reputation, to do noble deeds. Is there to be something corresponding to this, with reference to the new territories, temporarily under the guardianship of the United States? If so, will our young men not only gird themselves for the work, but also guard themselves against the exposures incident to it? Other foes have to be met than those armed with the rifle.

Our New National Domain

THE influence of eminent domain on the progress of the United States is very apparent. The great Northwest, with its prairies and lakes, was the conservative force that kept the original thirteen States from drifting apart. Says Mr. Webster of the ordinance of 1787: "I doubt whether one single law of any law-giver, ancient or modern, has produced effects of more distinct, marked and lasting character." This ordinance threw open a vast territory to new settlers, and invited emigration from all the world. The same influence in kind, though not in degree, resulted from our new possessions in California. They gave us a chance to locate American civilization on the Pacific coast: to take as our own new bays and gulfs and harbors, new territories for fruit culture. Later comes Alaska, and finally Cuba and the Philippines.

First, American civilization swept over the Mississippi valley, then swept down the Mississippi river, then swept through the Golden Gate, then swept to the gold regions of Alaska. And now it is destined under the influence of territorial possessions not yet occupied to the well-being of humanity to go to our new domain acquired from the Hispano-American war. It is the Eldorado cry of humanity for new opportunities. It is the cry of the new settler—Westward Ho! There are those that hold back and are afraid. There are men whose function seems to be to hold fast what we have. This insures our greater safety. Multitudes did not want the war with Mexico: but it brought us California. The same class of thinkers did not want the war with Spain; have been afraid to lay hold of our opportunities since the war is over. But the influence of larger eminent domain can not be avoided or escaped. The larger we grow, the more emigration and enterprise are attracted to us. We began with our three millions under Washington—with our thirteen original States; now we number our seventy millions, with the quicksilver of population still on the upward ascent, doubtless soon to reach a hundred millions. We govern a nation as large as ours even more easily than it was governed under the administration of Washington. While our certain destiny bids fair to make us a friendly rival with the few great nations of the earth, God guide the United States of America; be with the children as he has been with the fathers.

American Adaptability

PROBABLY Lincoln never dreamed in boyhood, nor indeed in early manhood, of such a career as God opened before him. He simply took the next step, did the next thing, achieved the next triumph. Though Lincoln's early life was barren of triumphs, he kept on trying, until the day came when the American people wanted him as President and the Lord wanted him as the great Liberator. He lost the contest for the Senatorship, but that loss prepared the way for his success as President. He was warned that if he put certain views into his speeches, he would lose the contest with Senator Douglass. It was a correct prophecy. But he lost the lesser, only the win the greater.

And now this strange, sensitive, wonderful man is called to assume the greatest responsibility since that of Washington. His growth filling out the needed proportions, is just as certain as the passing of the years. And when he dies there is no greater ruler on the earth. He has proved it by the deeds which he has performed. Connect this fact, with the remark he once made, that during the Civil War, every loyal regiment had suitable material to make the Cabinet of the President. He knew the American people. He knew their power of adaptation. It is an American gift. An American observes everything, studies everything, fits himself in imagination for everything. He critizes the conduct of great affairs. There was not a mistake made by a great military commander during the fearful struggle, when Mr. Lincoln was at the head of our affairs, but the people saw it. The people had rejected some of our generals, almost before Mr. Lincoln himself. And so of the Hispano-American war. Who would have predicted we had in our navy the kind of men who have achieved such victories? Dewey seems to be just as capable in civil as in naval affairs. It was only the other day that a London newspaper said the Americans did not appreciate their own capacity for the administration of public affairs. It is true. And we believe that the management of our temporary military governors will show this. Cuba and Porto Rico and the Philippines will illustrate this American adaptability. We are all self-rulers, and the man who can rule himself is fit to rule other men.

Revengeful Deeds

THE newspapers report so many cases of malevolence and desperation that some conclude that this is a century of crime above other centuries. No. As long ago as you and I can remember infernal machines were not unusual arrivals at the doors of distinguished residences. The devil of destruction is a very old devil, and he is to be seen at every great fire where there is anything to steal, and at every shipwreck where there is anything valuable floating ashore, and at every railroad accident where there are overcoats and watches to be purloined. On a small scale I saw it in my college days when in our literary society of New York University, we had an exquisite and costly bust of Shakespeare, and one morning we found a hole bored into the lips of marble and a cigar inserted. There has not for the last century been a fine picture in your art galleries, or a graceful statue in your parks, or a fine fresco on your wall, or a richly bound volume in your library, but would have been despoiled if the hand of ruffianism could have got at it without peril of incarceration. Call it what you will, communism, or socialism, or devilism, it has been abroad for ages. Sometimes it shows itself by throwing vitriol into a beautiful face, sometimes by wilfully scaring a horse with a bicycle, sometimes by crashing its cart against a fine carriage, sometimes by shooting down a president, sometimes by loosening the railroad track near a bridge over a deep chasm, sometimes by attempting to blow up a Parliament house. The philosophy of the whole business is that there is a large number of people who either through their laziness or their crime own nothing, and are mad at those who through industry and wit of their own, or of their ancestors, are in possession of large resources. The honest laboring classes never have had anything to do with such murderous enterprise. There has never been one instance where an honest, industrious man had any engagement in such villainous schemes. It is the villainous classes who would not work, if they had plenty of work offered them at large wages.

Lord Kitchener and El Mahdi's Bones

WHAT the royalists did under Charles II.—dig up the bones of Oliver Cromwell and hang them in irons—Lord Kitchener has done, in equivalent, to the bones of the murderer of that unique hero, General Gordon. If in revenge, it is barbarous. If we should speak no evil of the dead, because they cannot answer, because they have gone up to the judgment of the Great Day, their bones should be allowed to rest in peace.

But, Lord Kitchener's friends claim that the digging up of El Mahdi's bones was not an act of vengeance, but one of political policy. As far back as the time of Moses, it is recorded that no man knew the place of his burial. The great law-giver was buried without human hands, so that there could be no witnesses. Was it, lest the people he had led so long and so triumphantly should make his sepulchre a shrine? At any rate, this is the plea for Lord Kitchener. The Orientals are capable of doing this. And Lord Kitchener has prevented it. With the ashes of the Moslem pretender in the Nile, with his tomb at Omdurman razed to the ground, he at least can have no opportunity of inspiring the superstitious worship of an Inhabitant [illegible] natical people. Whether the act was [illegible] a question for English judgment to determine. Members of Parliament are discussing it. Are the bones of the dead to be safe from the hands of a conquering foe? Shall political policy pursue a dead hero across the threshold of the tomb?

BRIEF NOTES

In reply to numerous inquiries, we beg to state that the broken sets of Souvenir War Spoons, advertised in our columns, some time ago, have all been disposed of. Our friends will oblige us by not sending in any further orders to this office for War Souvenir Spoons.

Rev. Geo. C. Needham has been [illegible] ing [illegible] evangelistic services at Dallas, Tex. Three meetings were held daily. He is now conducting services in St. Louis, Mo.

According to the figures of the United States Bureau of Statistics, the consumption of intoxicants in this country for the year 1898 was 1,271,371,205 gallons, which is 17.02 gallons per capita.

The next series of International Sunday School lessons will be eighteen months devoted to the life of Christ in a series of chronological lessons taken from all four evangelists. They will begin in January, 1900.

Mr. William Phillips Hall, sometimes incorrectly described as the Millionaire Evangelist, has been holding successful services in Calvary Baptist Church, New York, of which Dr. Maclaur is pastor.

The Jewish Colonial Trust which has in charge the scheme for the repatriation of Jews in Palestine, which is known as Zionism, has completed its capitalization. It has ten million dollars in five dollar shares.

In London there are 1,750,000 people who do not attend a place of worship. Sixty-three years ago, when the London City Mission commenced its work, London contained 1,500,000 souls; the number has now increased to 6,000,000.

The [illegible] missionary are indicated in a recent work by Miss Lucy Guinness, in which she says that in the city of Bombay, India, no less than one hundred languages are spoken by its heterogeneous population.

Hundreds of the best artisans of Finland already have left their fatherland for Sweden and Norway, and hundreds more will set sail for Canada and the United States ere the summer is over. Their object is to avoid serving as conscripts in the Russian army.

An effort to prevent duplication of missionary effort in Porto Rico is being made by the Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists. The secretaries of the three societies have arranged to meet at stated intervals to keep each other advised on any new advances in contemplation.

Ex-United States Senator Henry W. Blair's famous pamphlet on "The Future of Temperance Reform" will be forwarded to any address by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at five cents per copy. It is a masterly and comprehensive presentation of the entire question and should be in the hands of every friend of temperance.

Dr. Wilbur Crafts suggests that churches and societies would do well to pass a resolution authorizing their pastor or leader to appeal to President McKinley begging him to carry into full force and effect the anti-canteen law, by issuing an order as Commander-in-Chief of the army suppressing all army saloons.

The Florence Mission, in Bleecker street, New York, celebrated its sixteenth anniversary on April 17. This mission has done a wonderful work among fallen women during the sixteen years of its existence, and its founder, Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, has spared neither money nor effort in extending its operations. It has been the mother of many similar missions in various sections of the country.

The secret as to the crime charged against Dreyfus, which has been so long kept from the courts and the public, is now declared to be that the Russian ambassador informed the French government that Dreyfus was disclosing military secrets to Germany. The care with which this fact has been hidden was due to fear of offending Russia. The belief that he is innocent is now becoming general throughout France.

An excellent little work, succinctly presenting Scripture facts about The Lord's Coming, has been prepared by Mrs. M. Baxter, whose articles on the Sunday School Lessons appear every week in this journal. It comprises fifteen chapters, dealing with "The Bride:" "The Great Anti-Christ:" "The Times of the Gentiles:" "The Millennium," etc., etc., 104 pages. May be had, price fifteen cents, from this office, 92 Bible House, New York.

A bill to incorporate the Salvation Army has been introduced in the New York Legislature. It grants to the corporated body the right to establish homes, hospitals, shelters, farm colonies, etc. The bill also exempts all the property now held or to be acquired by the Army from taxation. It provides that the governors of the incorporated body shall be a board of trustees, comprising the commander, the chief secretary and the treasurer of the Salvation Army of the United States and two officers of the Army or two laymen selected by the three first-mentioned officers or a majority of them.

We offer to any of our readers, who may desire to possess beautiful souvenirs of Palestine, a section of Olive Wood from the Mount of Olives, cut and polished in Bethlehem by native craftsmen with such rare skill that the deep, red veinings of the heart of the olive are brought to the surface, and all the delicate traceries and markings rendered transparent. These sections of Olive Wood were shipped direct from the Holy Land. They are especially adapted for use as paper weights or mantel ornaments, and are inscribed in lasting characters with the word "Jerusalem," and the corresponding name in Hebrew characters. These souvenirs will be sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of 25 cents each.

An International Barter

PUBLIC interest has been aroused by a suggestion that the United States and Great Britain should make an exchange of territory. It is believed in some influential quarters, that it would be a mutual advantage for England to cede to the United States the Island of Jamaica and the other islands it holds in the West Indies, and accept the Philippines in exchange. It is urged that now that we have gained possession of Cuba and Porto Rico, the acquisition of the British West Indian Islands would be a logical and natural result. They would be within easy reach, and would gain by being under the same government as their neighbors. The Philippines on the other hand, would be to us a troublesome possession, while England would be at home in the management of the islands, having by long experience acquired skill in the government of alien and heterogeneous peoples. The islands would also be especially valuable to England as a base of operations in her struggle for power and trade in the far East. The anti-expansionists among our own people would have less objection to our acquiring territory in this hemisphere and would feel relieved by being rid of a possession so far away from our own shores as the Philippines, which it will be difficult to govern and possibly difficult to defend, among the complications of European powers. It is significant that at this juncture when the exchange is mooted, there should be discontent in the British West Indian possessions, and indications that there is friction between the people there and the home government. Some American merchants who have recently returned from Jamaica and St. Kitts, say that the more influential people in these islands would welcome annexation by the United States and that the Danish West Indies have the same desire. On the surface, the proposed exchange appears mutually advantageous, both on geographical and political grounds; but further discussion may show it to be impracticable. It is not yet absolutely clear that the people of the islands desire annexation to the United States, and still less is it certain whether England would consent to give them up if they do, nor whether the United States would be willing to receive them. It is not in international affairs as it is in the affairs of the Kingdom of God. Happily in the latter there is no doubt. All who desire to enter and will accept the conditions are welcome.

Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out (John 6:37).

Benefactors Stoned

A remarkable religious ferment has developed in the Russian province of Kazan, where there is a population of nearly two million persons, a large proportion of whom are Mohammedans. A journalist in St. Petersburg reports that the distress from famine and typhus have worked such havoc in that province that the government determined to send aid, food and sanitary agents. Unfortunately, rumors were circulated, with the assistance of fanatical priests, that the representatives of the government really wanted to convert the Mohammedans. A genuine religious panic ensued, and the government agents everywhere met with a hostile reception, being stoned and otherwise maltreated, so that it became impossible to distribute the aid sent. The most positive assurances were given that the agents had no other object than that of relieving the misery of the people, but the peasants would not believe them. They drove the agents out of their villages, and when the inhabitants of a village heard that a relief expedition was approaching, they would muster outside the village and prevent its entering. The government is trying to reassure the misguided Tartars, but at present without success. One cannot but pity the poor creatures who thus stand in the way of their own interests, and it would not be surprising if the Russians were to leave them to their fate. Happily, the benefactors appear to have some of the magnanimity to which the world owes its opportunity of salvation:

Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do (Luke 23:24).

Animals and Illusions

In an article on the illusions which at expositions are sometimes used to bewilder visitors the writer calls attention to a singular fact which has been observed by the professors. It is that however successful the illusions are in deceiving people, they do not deceive animals. As an instance, he says: "A few years ago I had what is known as the 'Mystic Maze' at the Nashville Exposition. It was simply a small room filled with mirrors, so arranged that you seemed to be in a narrow corridor, full of turns. It was very puzzling, and I used to get lost in the place myself, but it never bothered my dog a moment. He would run through it from end to end at full speed and never bump against a mirror. I saw something on the same line in San Francisco not long ago. A friend of mine had an illusion called 'The Haunted Swing.' You get in what seems to be an ordinary swing, hung in the centre of a good-sized room, and the thing begins to move. It goes back and forth and finally clear over the top—that is to say, it seems to. What really turns round is the room itself—the swing stands perfectly still. It is a good illusion, and when the room is revolved rapidly there never was a man who could keep his head in the swing. It seems as if he must certainly pitch out, and if the motion is kept up he gets deathly sick. But a pet cat belonging to my friend used to lie on the edge of the seat and never turn a hair, no matter how fast the thing was worked. The elder Herrmann told me that animals were never deceived by false table legs, built up with looking glasses, and used in stage tricks. They always passed around on the other side. I guess they must see better, somehow, than men." The ancient prophet had a like opinion of their moral qualities.

The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know; my people doth not consider (Isa. 1:3).

Pet Animals Causing Disease

A medical journal calls attention to some important facts which were recently laid before the French Congress on tuberculosis. An eminent French physician pointed out that "A certain proportion of parrots are known to die of tuberculosis. Cats are known to sometimes have tuberculosis, and that they have in many cases been carriers of diphtheria and other ordinary infections directly and indirectly is more than suspected. These would seem to be the facts in the matter. They are, perhaps not enough to justify a crusade, on sanitary grounds, against the keeping of pet animals. It does not seem unreasonable however, that we should demand of their owners great care in the matter of detecting the first signs of disease in them, and then so guarding them as to prevent their being a source of contagion to the human being. Especially does this warning seem necessary with regard to children." It would be well, too, if parents would be more on their guard against moral infection. The number of instances in which children have caught tuberculosis from an animal must be infinitesmal in comparison with those who have been ruined body and soul by evil associates. Parents have continual need to inculcate the wise king's advice.

My son if sinners entice thee consent thou not (Prov. 1:10).

A TYPICAL SCENE IN KINGSTON, JAMAICA

A Hero of Manila

A deed of heroism is reported from the Philippines which deserves special recognition from the government. It was witnessed by an Englishman who was present at the battle, and was described by him in a letter to the China Mail of Hong Kong. He writes: "A troop of cavalry under command of Lieutenant Boyd was sent out to locate the enemy. The party had pushed a long way forward without trouble, and were on the point of returning, when the Filipinos appeared from the brush on one side and fired into them. One of the ponies was killed, dismounting Private Davicki and wounding Private Wintler. All hurried to shelter, some 500 yards away, across a deep stream, and it was not until the party had reached it that it was discovered that Private Davicki had been left behind. Without a moment's hesitation Corporal Reno dashed after him, dismounted, placed Davicki in the saddle, and brought him in safety to his companions. Reno ran alongside of the pony, his hand on the stirrup. The Filipinos maintained a heavy fire, but the two crossed the stream and rejoined their party without injury. Such a deed of daring wins the admiration of everyone who hears of it. Yet men often listen unmoved to the story of Him who actually died to save them from a doom worse than death.

That through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, and deliver them who through fear of death were subject to bondage (Heb. 2:14).

The Children's Quest

Two boys, the younger of them not more than ten years old, who were sheltered in a New York police station one night last week, told a pathetic story. They had been found in Stanton street, where they said they were looking for their mamma. They could not find her, and admitted that they were lost, but were eager to resume the search in the morning. Their explanation of their quest was that eight months ago their papa and mamma, who lived in Boston, Mass., had a quarrel, and their mamma went away. "Since then," said one of the boys, "we have been awful lonesome." Their father had fretted, and at last fell ill. Fearing that he might die, he told the boys that he had learned that their mother was living in New York, and gave them her street address. They consulted together and came to the conclusion that if they could see their mother they could persuade her to return and help them to take care of their sick father. By sacrificing their little hoards of savings, they were able to buy tickets for New York. They were unable to find their mother at the address given, but were making inquiries in the neighborhood when a policeman found them and for their own protection took them to the station. They were content to stay on the assurance of the police that they would help them in the morning to find their mother. The children were confident that nothing more was necessary than to see her. They were sure that her own love would do the rest. If those who are seeking their Heavenly Father had the same confidence it would be well; but in their case the conditions are reversed. It is not he who has left them, but they who have wandered away from him.

Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from my ordinances. Return unto me and I will return unto you saith the Lord (Mal. 3:7).

A Strange Building Combination

A scientific journal calls attention to the success which has attended the experiments of combining metal with concrete in building materials; and to the advantages so secured. It says: "Such construction depends for its success on the adhesion of the concrete and metal and on perfect action as a unit, their rate of expansion and contraction being uniform. The metal is used in forms varying all the way from wire cloth, or expanded metal now so popular in this country as metal lathing, to the massive beams or built up lattice-girders for the largest spans. Metal work in bridges, roofs and similar structures requires, when exposed, constant inspection to insure its maintenance in an efficient condition, also a periodical coating of paint or other preservative adapted to the particular exposure involved and the service intended. Concrete, on the other hand, is recognized as an excellent conservator of iron and steel. It is stated by M. Emperger, a well-known Austrian engineer, that he has found iron rods quite free from rust after remaining some forty years imbedded in concrete below water level, and an instance is on record of an iron wrench, left buried in concrete for twenty-two years, which on being broken out, still showed its black metallic surface." Doubtless builders, realizing the advantages of this combination, will use it more frequently than ever. It is much to be wished that in spiritual matters, where there is even greater danger from rust and decay, the protection which Christ offers, which is an absolute preservative, was more earnestly sought.

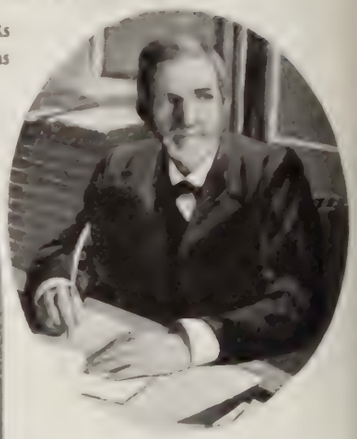
The peace of God, which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus (Philippians 4:7).

. . . The New York Assay Office and its Golden Stores . . .

A Tour Amid Great Piles of the Precious Metals—Testing Gold and Silver—Baking Gold Bricks and Cakes—Illustrated by Photographs Taken for "The Christian Herald" by Joseph Adams

DR. HERBERT G. TORREY, ASSAYER

THE ASSAY OFFICE, WALL STREET, NEW YORK



MR. ANDREW MASON, SUP'T

THE United States, next to Africa, is the greatest gold-producing country in the world. The world's output for 1897 was $237,504,800; of this the United States produced $57,363,000—about one-fourth of the whole. Our output of silver was $69,637,200. In this, but one country—Mexico—approaches us. "The gold and the silver is mine, saith the Lord of Hosts." The Giver of all good has been bountiful to our young republic, and with great riches imposes great responsibilities. The handling of gold, from the time it is taken from the heart of the mine until it is put into circulation as coin, is most interesting and instructive. "The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold; but the Lord trieth the hearts," is the inspired comparison.

The United States has twelve mints and assay offices under charge of the Bureau of the Mint at Washington. Second to none of these institutions in dignity and importance is the Assay Office next door to the Sub-Treasury in New York, America's financial centre. The building occupied is the oldest in Wall Street. The Superintendent came from the mother institution in Philadelphia to this branch when it was established in 1853; Dr. Torrey, Assayer for thirty years, succeeded his father; the Chief Refiner has held long tenure of office, which shows that wise Uncle Sam is not always influenced by political changes.

Nearly twice as much bullion is assayed here as in any other office. Average yearly value of deposits is at rough estimate about $50,000,000. For 1868 the value was $81,425,425.19. The material brought in consists of gold and silver bars, uncurrent and mutilated coins, foreign and domestic, and other ware and jewelry, the last a many-item, but comparatively small percentage of value—between two and three millions yearly. Less value than $100 is not accepted; assay charge on this is about $1.25. While the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, through courtesy of officials, stood in the receiving room, a man came to the window with a lot of old Spanish coins. They were weighed in his presence on the scales at the window; he was given a numbered receipt, and a card bearing a corresponding number was dropped with his coins into a small tin box. This identification number accompanies the deposit through all its processes. "Can you not buy rare old coins you may find in these deposits for yourselves?" the writer asked. "The policy of the government forbids," was the answer. "Besides, few coins of antiquarian or historic value come to us." The appearance of gold as to weight is deceptive. When the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was invited to lift a bar of gold (about the size of a loaf of bread), it was found quite impossible.

From the receiving room deposits are carried into a melting room and each melted to itself, poured into a mould and stamped with its number. Two chips from each are delivered to the assayer, and a portion of each chip weighed upon scales so accurate that the millionth of an ounce (an eyebrow is considerably heavier) can be weighed upon them. The assay, as the weighed sample is termed, is wrapped in a tiny cornucopia of sheet lead, carried to a small furnace containing a red-hot oven and placed in a little cup of bone-ash. The air, passing into the oven and over the melted assay, unites with the lead and the base metals contained in sample and forms an oxide which the cupel absorbes, so that in a few minutes nothing but gold and silver remains—the tiniest of buttons in the hollow of the tiny cup. This button's weight, subtracted from the weight of the original assay, necessarily gives weight of base metals in sample. The silver and gold button must now be separated into silver and gold, by nitric acid, which dissolves the silver from the gold. The gold, insoluble to common acids, remains behind a powdery dust; its weight determines the gold fineness of sample. Weight of gold and base metals subtracted from weight of original assay, show the weight of silver. The assay of the sample has now given accurate basis for determining value of the deposit, and this value, minus the small charge for assaying, is paid in bars or cash to the depositor. The operation of assaying can be performed in less than an hour. Of course, a number of assays are made at the same time, many chips in cupels keeping company with the one we have followed. A depositor can get the value of his deposit in two days.

The deposit, now Government property, is turned over with others to the refining department, where all are melted together, in certain proportions of gold, silver and base metal, in large crucibles, which will hold about 300 pounds each. The molten mass is cast into a series of large, flat moulds, resembling immense waffle-irons. This gives a thin, flat cake full of holes—the extraordinarily rich waffles of Uncle Sam's cook-shop—and is made in this form in order that sulphuric acid, in which it is to be boiled, may more readily dissolve the silver and baser metals, leaving the gold, like the pure character, lovelier for trial. The boiling is done in huge cast-iron kettles, holding perhaps 1,000 pounds of sulphuric acid. As in the assaying, all metals except the gold are dissolved, forming sulphates, and the solutions are siphoned off into large lead-lined tanks around the sides and on the bottom of which are placed slabs of copper, which sulphur prefers to silver. As soon as the hot solution touches the copper, the sulphur deserts the silver and unites with the copper, forming sulphate of copper, or bluestone. Barrels of these beautiful blue crystals lie about ready for wholesale buyers. The silver, as it is left by the sulphuric acid, is in the form of a white sand, which is washed with hot water, and taken to the powerful hydraulic press of many tons pressure, where it is pressed into hard, round cakes—the rich cheeses of Uncle Sam's making — of about 1,000 ozs. ($600) each; and is then dried in ovens. This silver, now nearly pure, is melted in large crucibles, where it is further refined and then cast into moulds. Samples are taken, and if by assay they prove to be 999 parts out of 1,000 silver, the bars are turned over to the cashier, who pays them out as demands occur.

WEIGHING $100,000 IN GOLD INGOTS ON THE GREAT SCALES

The gold in the cast-iron dissolving kettles, where the silver left it, looks simply a mass of soft, reddish mud. It is thoroughly washed with hot water, pressed, dried, melted the same as the silver, and cast into bars of about $400, $5,000 or $8,000, and turned over to the cashier to be paid out as called for, or sent to the Philadelphia mint for coinage. These operations entail a large amount of floor sweepings; of ashes containing shots of bullion, and of old clothes of workmen (no man carries his working garments out of the office); these are burned, ground into powder, sampled, assayed, and sold to outside smelters—so careful a housekeeper is our Uncle Sam. Sweepings average about ten cents a pound; their total annual average of value is about $30,000.

At present, you can look through the grating of the vault and see $75,000,000 in yellow bars, stored away like nice gold loaves on the shelves of Uncle Sam's cupboard. Employees get so used to seeing precious metal lying around in bulk, to handling it as truck loads of sand and mud, dishing it up with shovels, boiling and baking it and ladling it out, that it ceases to represent financial value to them. The only place which they connect mentally with money is the cashier's desk, where they are paid their salaries.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

The Story of a Mortgage

Putting the Home in Peril—A Debtor, a Creditor, "Bairnies" and a Dream

IT must be sad to sign the dear old farm away; sad to know that one's own hand invests another—perhaps a hard and unjust steward of worldly goods—with power to turn one and one's loved ones out of the home made sacred by long associations. Doubly hard must it be if the signer feels that this bitter trial is the result of his own sin or folly—of intemperance, thriftlessness, rash speculation. If it has not, and if evil times have come uninvited upon the servant of the Lord, then the cloud has a silver lining—the sunshine of that faith which assures the honest and industrious toiler that God is on his side, and that he will not be forsaken. Also, he has hope of that home which none can take from him in our Father's house where the many mansions are.

The giving and taking of mortgages is, however, not always due by any means to grasping avarice on one side, or thriftlessness on the other. It is simply a device of commerce which operates most unhappily in many cases. Few people have any idea of the vast number of mortgages that are held by landlords on the homes of our industrious sons of toil, North, South, East and West. Our last census report showed nearly five million mortgages in force at a valuation of nearly seven billion dollars.

There was a rich, hard man, so a story goes, who took a mortgage on the home of the friends of his youth. The wife, coming with her husband, pleaded against it, promising by all humble economies and faithful industries to help in payment of the debt. Her husband sought to dissuade her from coming, but she insisted, and he, broken spirited by misfortune, and feeling that it was in a sense her right, gave way. He was sorry that he had done so when he heard the cool and measured tones in which she was told that, while it would be very pleasant to grant her request, such an appeal was very unbusiness like, and could not on that account be considered. "Ah!" said she tremblingly, "your little lass and mine are in heaven together. Suppose the dear Lord should make the bairnies feel that their place didna belong to them, and that they might hae to be turned out some time."

That night the rich man dreamed a dream. He saw a wall of jasper in which was a great gate like a single pearl: a shining one kept the gate. Presently it opened; the sound of harpers harping on their harps reached him, and many voices sounded like a murmurous tide of joy. "What a happy home!" he said, "my little Mary must have here!" And even as he spoke an angel that he knew to be his child came without the gate and set her harp down, weeping, and told the keeper she could bide inside no more; other angels came and tried to draw her back. "Nay," she said; "my Lord within hath remembered a debt against me—a sin that I committed on earth—and my home here is not my own any more." The rich man awoke, and he was glad that his child's debts had all been paid by our great Elder Brother, and that her claim to her home could have no doubt. He put the mortgage in a letter and sent it to his old friend, and wrote: "You are an honest man and will pay as you can, I know. I do not need this security. Give it to your wife in the name of the Lord, from my little daughter, Mary."

SIGNING THE MORTGAGE ON THE OLD FARM

Double Eagles to Servants

The German Housewives' Society, of New York City, has just made awards of seven twenty-dollar gold pieces to as many faithful servant girls. Uninterrupted service in the same family for two years and three months entitles a servant to this distinction. The presentation took place at the society headquarters, 121 East Fifty-ninth Street, without formal speech-making. M. S. Sander, the secretary, called the girls to his desk and handed them the double eagles, which they received with smiles and graceful courtesies. Last year the German Empress, as was told in this paper, bestowed decorations in the form of medals of merit on servants who had remained in the same family for twenty years. In London, Princess Christian, President of the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants, presented certificates of merit to servant girls who, entering a place when under twenty, had kept it for three years.

A Long Island Home

Our readers in various sections who are interested in the pictures and stories given in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from time to time, of every-day life, East, West, North and South, will take pleasure in reading the following extract from a letter dated April 13, from one of our subscribers, a prominent kindergartner, who is on a visit to her daughter's home on Long Island, close to where children have a nice time in summer, playing in seashore sand, and bathing in the surf. Her son-in-law is a business man, with an office in the city. She says:

The grass is getting green, and the birds are busy nest-building (which is bird-fashion for house-keeping). This is a very old-fashioned place with a barn and orchard back of us, and some cows, sheep, chicks and chickens belonging to our neighbors, and we take pleasure in watching their innocent play. My son-in-law delights in his garden. He is planting peas to-night, and wants to put in corn, beans, squash, lettuce, onions, turnips and potatoes soon. We enjoy the fresh vegetables immensely, and working in the garden is a relief from the confinement of his office, and makes him happy and strong. I enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD so much, it tells about so many good works for children, and is helping to show people what kindergartens and mothers' clubs are doing. My little grand-daughter loves to look at the pictures and tries to interest our very new baby in them. Baby prefers his fists.

Spring Festival Among French Peasantry

In some French provinces, the people celebrate the coming of Spring with festivals in which processions descriptive of peasant life and labor are interesting features. Real shepherds and shepherdesses march along with bleating sheep and frisky white lambs, which stop now and then to gaze with wonder at the unusual scene and to cut queer, playful capers; while the faithful sheep-dog overlooks with benevolent indulgence little breaches of order and discipline, which on ordinary occasions would have provoked a warning bark. Then come gardeners waving garlands and carrying watering pots and other appropriate implements; and haymakers, with rakes and scythes. Suddenly, the Alp-horn sounds. Cows and little calves advance slowly, encouraged by the familiar voices of the herdsmen. The head dairyman, his rosy-cheeked daughter at his side, leads his cart containing churn, milking-stool and various implements for making cheese and butter. Presently, the cart stops; the girl takes the stool, advances to the gentlest of the herd and draws a bowl of frothy, creamy milk, which her father, with much pomp and ceremony, presents to the great man of the town or estate who makes a speech in return.

Pussy Willow

Oh, thou lovely Pussy Willow!
Come to smooth my tired pillow,
With thy soft, soft paws.

Of the spring thou art a token,
That the winter's reign is broken,
Cheerer of the heart!

In thy train we soon shall see
Violet and anemone,
Dainty little things!

Even now the blue bird's note,
High above, around, remote,
All the air is filling.

Thou art welcome to my heart,
Of my childhood days a part,
In memory ever sweet.

We'll All Be Together Again

WHEN dear ones have left us to journey afar
O'er mountain or prairie or sea,
Our thoughts travel oft where the loving ones are,
And lonely we often must be.
But sweet is the thought of the home-coming time
To women and children and men;
It rings, like the bells, with a musical chime:
"We'll all be together again."

When sickness and trouble break into our lives,
When cares throng in manifold ways,
When many a wearisome burden contrives
To mar the sweet peace of our days,
'Tis blessed to hope there'll be happiness yet;
That shining will follow the rain;
That those who now hate will forgive and forget,
And will all be together again.

When lives have been sundered by death's cruel hand,
When dear ones no more have our care—
All happy and safe in the beautiful land;
So safe they no more need our prayer—
Oh, blessed the thought of the meeting once more
Beyond all the sorrow and pain,
Where nothing is wrong on the heavenly shore
And we'll all be together again!

Vineland, N. J. MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

Our Teachers

IN one sense of the word, our public and Sunday School teachers and our missionary and social settlement workers are the fathers and mothers of Young America. In city slums, schools and mission halls are often the only bright spots in the life of the children. Little waifs who have no home worthy of the name, and whose lives outside of the schoolroom know no elevating influence, find strong attractions in the school and mission-rooms, gay with potted plants and flowers, and bright with patriotic decorations and pious mottos, and the handiwork of scholars. The loving sympathy of teachers brings out what is best in them, and the little responsive creatures give back love for love, appreciation for appreciation, and try to deserve the generous but well-chosen praise given by wise instructors. The quiet, unobtrusive work done by hundreds of faithful teachers is going to bear precious fruit. When summer comes and the schools close, and this beneficent oversight is withdrawn, fresh-air workers take up the burden and blessed labor for children goes on in another form. In waifs coming under their care, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S workers recognize by unmistakable signs those who have felt the public school, Sunday School, social settlement, and missionary workers' guidance. A gracious thing it is that God opens the way to keep the good seed sown in winter from being choked to death with the tares of uninterrupted life on saloon-lined streets in summer.

Children and Fire Drills

A movement is on foot in New York City to make fire drills compulsory in all public schools, which will probably crystalize into action at the next meeting of the Board of Education. This is due to the excitement of public sentiment following the Windsor Hotel and later fires: it is also referable to two incidents related in this paper. One was that a class of children in the Windsor at the time of the fire, fell into line and marched out safely and in good order; and to a similar occurrence in a Brooklyn school, where fire drill had been practised. This movement could be properly instituted in other places—in fact, even in country schools, it would be a valuable precaution and a preparation which might sometimes be effectual in saving life. The truth is grown folks should study fire drill a little.

THE GOSPEL IN OUR NEW COLONIES

Notes of Spiritual Progress from Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines—Our Spanish-American Testament Welcomed

WHEN THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, last summer in the name of its readers, and with their hearty co-operation, distributed great quantities of War Testaments not only in our domestic military camps, but to our troops abroad, as well, the gift was one which was invariably received with manifestations of the deepest satisfaction. Thousands of those little pocket Testaments were carried by our soldiers to the trenches and the battlefields. They kept the precious volumes close to their hearts while they slept, and often by the light of the camp-fire they read them with comfort and solace during nights of anxiety. Some carried their little Testaments with them to the grave.

With the return of peace to Cuba and Porto Rico, and at the first beginnings of religious work by our own people on these islands, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD received many invitations to co-operate with the various efforts then begun for the the spiritual betterment of the island population. After due consideration, it was decided that the most practical service would be rendered by giving to the people of the islands the Gospel of Jesus Christ in their own language—a privilege which, under the rule of Catholic Spain, they had never enjoyed. Accordingly, we had printed and bound a large edition of the Gospel of St. John, in parallel pages of English and Spanish, thus presenting the most graphic of all the Gospel narratives of Christ's earthly life and ministry in a form calculated to appeal even to the humblest native, capable of understanding the Spanish tongue. As there is a universal desire on the part of these people to acquire our language also, it was rightly judged that the English version will be acceptable. Such has proved to be the case, for the demand for these little volumes of Scripture, from the time of their issue till now, has been steadily increasing. In addition to the Gospel story as related by "the disciple whom Jesus loved," the book contains a number of specially selected evangelical hymns, also on parallel pages in English and Spanish, and these are now sung in Gospel meetings in both Cuba and Porto Rico. The volume consist of 220 pages, and is printed in a clean, bold type, and bound in limp cloth covers—just a convenient size for the pocket. On the outer cover in gilt letters is the title:

"GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN With Hymns." "EVANGELIO SAN JUAN Con Himnos."

We give below two parallel pages from the book itself, showing the exact size of page and type. We also give the familiar hymn, "Rock of Ages," in the Spanish language, side by side with our own tongue.

Although thousands of these little Gospels have been forwarded to Porto Rico and Cuba, we learn that the demand is such that a very large edition could be used to the greatest advantage by our missionaries and Christian workers now in the field. Those of our readers who have an interest in placing the Gospel in the hands of the people of the new colonies have an opportunity to do so by contributing to this work. All sums intended to aid in circulating the Spanish-English Gospel will be duly acknowledged in these columns. The following have been received:

Christian Work in Cuba

From a leading Y. M. C. A. writer, stationed in Havana, comes this letter, giving news of most encouraging spiritual progress in the military camps:

CAMP COLUMBIA, HAVANA, CUBA.

"The Y. M. C. A. among the Seventh Army Corps in Cuba, has done a work whose value can hardly be over-estimated.

"We have made the tents as attractive as possible, with long rows of writing tables, games and good reading matter, while we have given out more writing material than ever before. Nearly every Saturday evening we arrange for an entertainment, which keeps the men from places of sin. But the religious work is by far the most important. Nearly every regiment has had a series of meetings, held by the chaplains and secretaries. Great interest has been shown and many have been saved from sin. In one of the services conducted by a chaplain, after an earnest plea, he gave an invitation for all who wished prayers to rise, and about 150 stood up. Then, he asked all who were willing to give their hearts to God to sign cards which I had. During the three meetings over fifty signed. We wrote a personal letter to each man, giving what help we could. Some have fallen back; but we are doing all in our power to strengthen them.

"One young man came to me after a meeting, and said, 'I signed a card the other night, and received a letter from you which did me much good.'

"After a quiet talk, we knelt in prayer. When we stood up, he said, 'I have something I want to ask you about.' A short time before, he had sold some government property, and had been arrested and tried by court-martial. He thought he ought to see the officer in charge, and this was troubling him. I advised him as best I could. I saw him afterwards, and he told me it was settled, and he was happy in the new life.

Cuban Orphans Well Cared For

Gen. Lee, under date of April 12, writes us from Havana as follows:

The lady at the head of this institution (the Lee Orphanage), Miss Amada Miranda, has an excellent character and fine executive talent. The children are all growing fat. They not only have such purchased food as they can eat, but a Cuban club in Havana sends them, once or twice a week, quantities of fresh vegetables and other articles of food to which they have been accustomed. I have just purchased for them a lot of new shoes, and am arranging now to get them some clothing. There are fifty-one orphans in the asylum.

ST. JOHN, 3.	SAN JUAN, 3.
15 That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.	15 Para que todo aquel que en él creyere, no se pierda, mas tenga vida eterna.
16 For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.	16 Porque de tal manera amó Dios al mundo, que haya dado á su Hijo unigénito: para que todo aquel que en él creyere, no se pierda, mas tenga vida eterna.
17 For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.	17 Porque no envió Dios á su Hijo al mundo, para que condene al mundo; sino para que el mundo sea salvo por él.
18 He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.	18 El que en él cree, no es condenado; mas el que no cree, ya es condenado; porque no creyó en el nombre del unigénito Hijo de Dios.
19 And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.	19 Y esta es la condenacion, que la luz vino al mundo, y los hombres amaron más las tinieblas que la luz; porque sus obras eran malas.
20 For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.	20 Porque todo aquel que hace lo malo, aborrece la luz, y no viene á la luz, porque sus obras no sean redarguidas.
21 But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.	21 Mas el que obra verdad, viene á la luz, para que sus obras sean hechas manifiestas, porque son hechas en Dios.
22 ¶After these things came Jē'sus and his disciples into the land of Jū-dæ'ā; and there he tarried with them, and baptized.	22 ¶Pasado esto, vino Jesus y sus discípulos á una tierra de Judea; y estaba allí con ellos, y bautizaba.

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

CHAPTER XXIX.

"He said 'Peace, be still.'"

SAD and distressing as was the scene in that handsomely furnished room in which the abject terror of the soul was in such painful contrast with the comfort provided for the body, it was a scene full of hope for one who bears the life-giving message of the Gospel. Evadne had seen many death-beds in the course of her experience as a nurse and she had learned how powerful was the Gospel to calm the most despairing soul. With an unspoken prayer to Him, who has promised that in the hour of need it shall be given you what you shall say—for the right word in this crisis, she said gently: "Why do you fear? It is not you who will go to the grave. Your body may have to lie there, but you yourself will have left it before then. It is not death that touches you when the body dies, but only a new life."

"I do not understand," said the poor sufferer. "Must I not leave my husband and my home and all I love? How can that be life? Oh, nurse, you seem calm and strong; tell me how to die."

"I will tell you how to live, my dear lady," said Evadne. "Don't you know that Christ promised eternal life to all who would take it at his hands—a life that goes on beyond the death of the body and comes to fuller and better life? When you have that life you need not fear the death of the body, which only sets you free to rise to better things."

"Yes, I have heard ministers preach about that, but I did not understand. I did not try to. I always thought there would be time enough, and since I have been married, Rege—my husband—told me I need not try, it was superstition, but now it seems the most important thing in the world—the only thing."

"It is not too late," said Evadne, "and it is so simple that you can easily understand it."

"Oh, tell me, then. I will try to do anything you say."

"It is simply trust—what the ministers call faith. Christ promises you eternal life if you trust to him, and he makes no other condition than that you believe he is able to give it you and that he will keep his promise. It is just as if a doctor assured you that he could and would cure you if you would follow his directions."

"Is that all? I thought I must repent and change my habits, and live a different life, and I have no time now."

"All that will come. The first and the essential thing is to put all your trust in Christ, to take him as your Saviour and he will make you fit for him."

Elise Hawthorne laid her head upon Evadne's shoulder like a tired child. "But I am afraid," she whispered.

"Your Father loves you, dear, for he sent his Son to die. The thief on the cross was a sinner, yet Christ took him to Paradise. The fitness must come from Jesus—his blood washes whiter than snow."

"But I have done nothing to earn it. I have lived for myself alone."

"We never can earn a gift, dear. God gives in a royal way. He says to you only believe, I have given you life through my Son." Evadne had taken the tiny Bible, which she always carried, from her pocket, and was turning its pages rapidly. "Here it is—Mr. Hawthorne, will you raise the shade that your wife may see for herself? 'God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish'—You see, there is no death for those who trust in him. And then, 'he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.' It does not mean that we may have it after years of toil."

"That is very good," said Mrs. Hawthorne, "but are you sure? It seems too simple to be true. But it goes to my heart as if it were true."

"Admit it and cherish it," said Evadne. "It will give you life."

"I will try," she murmured. "It has given me peace already."

"What charm have you wrought," asked John Randolph in a whisper, as they stood together that evening beside a quiet sleeper. "This is the first natural sleep she has had. I believe it will prove her recovery."

Evadne looked up at him, and over her face a light was breaking, "I have led her to Jesus, the mighty to save."

The next day the patient was decidedly better and the improvement so begun continued. Dr. Randolph insisted that he was not entitled to any of the credit. It was all due, he said, to the peace that had come in the crisis from Miss Hildreth's words.

When convalescence had fully set in he advised an ocean voyage, and Rege decided to take his wife to Europe.

It was a very frail little figure which clung to Evadne the evening before they sailed. They had pleaded with her to go with them. "Give up this toilsome work which is overtaxing your strength," Reginald had said as they sat together one evening in the twilight, "and make your home with us. You have grown to be our sister in the truest sense of the word, and we have learned to lean upon you, Elise and I. We can never hope to repay you," he continued huskily, "but it would be such a pleasure to have you with us for good."

Evadne looked at the pleading eyes with which Elise Hawthorne seconded her husband's wish, and her lips trembled. "How rich God is making me in friends," she said, "I shall never forget that this thing has been in your hearts, but I must be about my Father's business."

And then John Randolph had come to make one of his pleasant informal visits and they had sat together in a beautiful fellowship. When he rose to go, he turned towards Evadne. "How goes life with you now, dear friend?"

The grey eyes, full of a clear shining, were lifted to his. "I am absolutely satisfied with Jesus Christ."

It was true and the satisfaction was growing. Like all who look to Christ for the direction of their lives, and are content with his plan and try to serve him in whatsoever circumstances they meet—Evadne was happy and free from care. If things seemed vexatious and trying, she accepted them as coming from him and concluded that there was something in her that needed correction. To be patient, docile, in a word to be like Christ, was her supreme desire, and she left it to him to choose the discipline that would produce that result. With such a rule of life, worry and repining were excluded and her heart was filled with sweet peace.

After the Hawthornes sailed for Europe, she returned to her duties at the hospital, and was gratified to see how cordially the doctors and nurses welcomed her. It was a busy life, so full of ministration that she had no opportunity to visit her aunt and cousins. But she had heard from them and knew that important changes had occurred in the household.

Marion was married and living in New York. Louis had taken a small house, where he boarded with his mother and Isabelle. He spent his days in the monotonous routine of a bank, and to his pleasure-loving nature the drudgery seemed intolerable; but he said little. He remembered that Evadne never complained.

One day he went to see her at the hospital, and she was frightened at the pallor of his face. She led him to the superintendent's reception room—there they would be undisturbed. He staggered blindly as he entered the room and then sank heavily on a sofa near the door. He looked like an old man.

"Louis!" she cried in alarm. "what is the matter?"

He took a letter from his pocket and held it towards her. It bore her own name, and the writing was her father's! She took it from him and read that last message which had been confided to her uncle for her, and which he had never delivered.

"Can you ever forgive?" Then Louis buried his face in his arms and groaned aloud. The awful disgrace and shame of it seemed more than he could bear.

Interminable seemed the hours after Louis had left her, walking slowly, with that strange grey shadow upon his face, and stooping as if some unseen burden were crushing him to the earth. She dared not let herself think. She must wait until she was alone. At last she was free to go to her room.

Down on her knees she read over again the passionate farewell words which made her heart thrill, so full of tender advice and loving thought for her comfort. Through streaming tears she looked at the closely-written pages of instructions, so minute that she could not err—and he had disliked writing so much! This was the weary task which had tried him so! And all these years she had never known. She had been robbed of her birthright!

Fierce and long the battle raged. When it was ended God heard his child cry softly, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us," and she forgave.

She wrote to Louis, telling him not to worry and assuring him that there was no bitterness in her heart toward the dead, and that she was sure that even this loss had been appointed for her by Him who promised that all things should work for good to those who love him. She said nothing of the beautiful work which she hoped to have undertaken, when her father's fortune should come into her hands. That was past now. It could never be, but Christ intended, doubtless, to use her in some other way that might be better for his cause and for her. So she allowed Louis to think that the loss of fortune had not troubled her. And she begged that he would keep the matter secret. Not even to her aunt or Marion or Isabelle was it to be communicated. Their humiliation at their poverty was keen enough, and they must be spared the shame of knowing that Judge Hildreth had been an embezzler. Louis gladly complied, though he wondered at such magnanimity and loved still more passionately the girl capable of it. Many a time when his mother and Isabelle spoke disparagingly of Evadne he was tempted to tell them how she had been wronged, but to please Evadne he held his peace. But how they misunderstood her!

Isabelle wearying of the dullness of Marlborough, and of the coldness of the friends of more prosperous days, went on a visit to her sister Marion in New York.

On the morning after her arrival the two ladies were sitting together talking of old times. Mrs. Simpson Kennard looked very charming in her pretty morning gown with her baby on her knee. She glanced across the room at her sister who was the picture of envy and discontent.

"I wish you had a little child to love, Isabelle. It makes life so different. I am just wrapped up in Florimel."

"For pity's sake, Marion," cried Isabelle, peevishly, "don't you grow to be one of those tiresome women who think the whole world is interested in a baby's tooth! I certainly do not echo your wish. I think children are a nuisance."

Marion caught up her baby in dismay. "Why, Isabelle! Just think how much they do for us! They broaden our sympathies. I read that only the other day, and——"

"Nonsense," said Isabelle, contemptuously. "Easy for you to talk when you have everything you want! If you had to live in that poky little house in Marlborough, I guess you would not find anything very broadening about your lot.

"It is perfectly preposterous to think of our being reduced to such a style of living!" she continued, as Mrs. Kennard strove to soothe her baby's injured feelings with kisses. "Just fancy, only one servant! I never thought a Hildreth would fall so low."

"But you and mamma are comfortable Isabelle. It is not as if you were forced to do anything——"

"Do anything!" echoed Isabelle. "Are you going crazy?"

"Well, see how hard Evadne has to work, and she is a Hildreth as well as you."

"Evadne!" said Isabelle sarcastically, "with her nerves of steel and spine of adamant! Evadne will never kill herself with work. She is too much taken up with her wealthy, private patients. You should have seen her driving 'round with the Hawthornes in their elegant carriage! And I reduced to dependence upon the electric cars! I don't see how she manages to worm her way into people's confidence as she seems to do. I couldn't, but then I have such a horror of being forward."

"'All doors are open to those who smile.' I believe that is the reason, Isabelle."

"Stuff and nonsense!" was Miss Hildreth's inelegant reply.

"She is a dear girl, Isabelle. Why will you persist in disliking her so?"

"Oh pray spare me any panegyrics," said Isabelle carelessly. "It is bad enough to have Louis blazing up like a volcano if one has the temerity to mention her ladyship's name."

"How is Louis?" asked Mrs. Kennard, finding she was treading on dangerous ground.

"Oh, the same as usual. He looks like a ghost and is about as cheerful as a cemetery. He spends his holidays going over musty old letters in papa's desk. I'm sure I don't see what fun he finds in it. It is so selfish in him, when he might be giving mamma and me some pleasure—but Louis never did think of anyone but himself. One day I found him stetched across the desk, and it gave me such a fright! You know what a state my nerves are in. I thought he was in a fit or something—he just looked like death and he didn't seem to hear me when I called. He had a large envelope, addressed to papa, in his hand, and there was another under his arm that didn't look as if it had ever been opened, but I couldn't see the address. I ran for mamma, but before we got back he was gone, and the letters with him. Whatever it was, it had an awful effect upon him, though he won't give us any satisfaction—you know how provoking he is. It is my belief he is going into a decline, and I have such a horror of contagious diseases! If Evadne is so anxious to work, why doesn't she come and help mamma and me? It is the least she could do after all we have done for her, but as mamma says, 'It is just a specimen of the ingratitude there is in the world.'"

Of course Evadne knew that her aunt and her cousin Isabelle disapproved of her course and her principles. Their manner to her whenever they met showed her that they regarded her as one who had disgraced the family and the name of Hildreth by working for a livelihood. There had been a time when the consciousness of the fact would have troubled her. But now she lived for only one approval, and if she could have that, it was sufficient. He did not misunderstand her; he knew all and would never misjudge her. So long as she lived in Christ's love, why should she be disturbed if others disapproved of her? His grace was sufficient for her, and in his sanctuary she was safe from "the strife of tongues."

Day by day Evadne's work went on, and not a day but afforded her some opportunity of ministering to the soul and the body of some poor sufferer. The world is so full of woe and sorrow and affliction that none need seek far to find opportunities of service. Since she had seen Mrs. Everidge's busy life at Vernon, she had realized the glorious possibility that lies within the reach of the sincere soul, and now she was enjoying it. Aunt Marthe wrote her occasionally, cheering her and encouraging her, and assuring her that there was no life so full of peace and joy as that which was full of such service. And Aunt Marthe knew. As Evadne read her beautiful letters and remembered how that lovely life had been lived, and how much she had borne and suffered, her own life seemed trivial in comparison. But it was growing, and the grace and power which sustained the elder woman was available for her and was becoming increasingly effectual in her own being.

Occasionally, too, John Randolph, meeting her in the hospital or in the homes of some of his patients, would utter one of his cheering, energizing remarks that would glow in her memory for days. He frequently sent to her, telling her of some sufferer whom she might help in body or in soul, and so her circle of opportunities was continually enlarging. That question he had mentioned was not put, and he never even distantly alluded to it. So long as Louis' ring glistened on her finger, John Randolph felt that he was in honor bound to keep silence, and thus even he who understood her life so well, misunderstood one, and that not the smallest, feature of it.

Continuance in Well-Doing

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for May 7. Rom. 2 : 1-11

WHEN in church or prayer-meeting the young believer is exhorted, in the well-known hymn, to "cast your deadly doing down," and is warned that "doing ends in death," he is naturally surprised to find in the writings of the Apostle Paul, on whose teaching the doctrine of the hymn is supposed to be based, so emphatic an assurance that by patient continuance in well-doing men may gain glory, and honor, and immortality. There is, however, no real inconsistency. Doing does end in death if the doer expects by it to enter the kingdom of God. Everywhere in the New Testament, the principle is enunciated that fitness for that kingdom depends not on doing, nor on giving, but on being. It is the nature and disposition of a man which determines his fitness or unfitness for the kingdom. And the principle is logical. We can conceive of a man, whose heart is full of hatred, envy and all kinds of malignity, doing some conspicuous service to the cause of Christ, or giving a magnificent sum to build a church in the hope that in that way he will earn admission to the kingdom. But it would be a vain hope. The man's nature must be changed before he is fit for heaven and nothing that he can do, or give, can fit him for it, apart from that change. That is indispensable. So that whosoever is depending on his good works for admission to the kingdom is doomed to failure.

It is so in society. Men who have made large fortunes, or have attained influential position, have often been surprised at finding that the highest and best circles of society are closed against them. Powerful as money is, it does not always give the key to social recognition. When a man of boorish manners and coarse, degraded tastes, does secure an invitation to a house the inmates of which are refined, cultivated, intellectual people, he and they are unlike uncomfortable. To secure pleasant, harmonious intercourse, there must be congeniality of tastes and common subjects of interest. None can enter the kingdom of God but they who have heavenly minds, whose disposition has been attuned to the heavenly harmonies.

It is, however, important to remember that the changed nature manifests itself in a beneficent life. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The lazy, sensual, unfruitful life is so utterly opposed to the spirit of Christ, that we are justified in doubting whether one who leads such a life really has the spirit of Christ. While salvation is the gift of God and can never be bought, or earned, it is a gift in the nature of a trust, a gift given for a purpose. The impulse of the possessor is to help those around him to do something for them that they may be happier and better. He feels a love for all, and has a desire to benefit others in some way. That is the surest of all the signs of conversion. Not only does the converted man yearn to do something for Christ, but the desire of the new nature imparted to him is for helpful service.

It is not any spasmodic efforts of some great or conspicuous kind that the Apostle urges. The patient continuance in well-doing implies a readiness for such opportunities of usefulness as come in common, ordinary lives. And sometimes this is more difficult than distinguished service. There is a charm about going out as a missionary to a heathen land which is not presented by a life of plain usefulness in the home. Yet there are many Christians who are leading lives in a small circle as truly heroic as those of a missionary. It requires no small quantity of grace to be cheerful, helpful, loving and patient among quarrelsome associates, to bear being misjudged, misrepresented and maligned, to continue kindly relations with a neighbor who has no gratitude, to be gentle and magnanimous under injury and to return good for evil. There is no home, no community, no business in which such graces have no opportunity for exercise. The humblest servant and the poorest employee can show the spirit of Christ in such ways. If everyone who bears the name of Christ would steadily set himself, depending on divine strength to follow Christ's example in patience, in forbearance and love, this world would be a changed place, and men would learn more quickly than they will ever learn from preaching how beautiful and beneficent a thing the religion of Christ really is.

Daily Growth in Grace

THE Rev. John Fletcher, Vicar of Madeley, a divine of deep piety and greatly beloved, drew up for his own guidance the following rules for daily self-examination:

1. Did I awake spiritual, and was I watchful in keeping my mind from wandering this morning?

2. Have I this day got nearer to God in prayer, or have I given way to a lazy, idle spirit?

3. Has my faith been weakened by unwatchfulness, or quickened by diligence?

4. Have I walked by faith and seen God in all things?

5. Have I denied myself in all unkind words and thoughts? Have I been delighted at seeing others preferred?

6. Have I made the most of my precious time as far as I had light, strength and opportunity?

7. Have I kept the issues of my heart in the means of grace, so as to profit by them?

8. What have I done this day for the souls and bodies of God's dear saints?

9. Have I laid out anything to please myself when I might have saved the money for the cause of God?

10. Have I governed well my tongue this day, remembering that in a multitude of words there wanteth not sin?

11. In how many instances have I denied myself this day?

12. Do my life and conversation adorn the Gospel of Jesus Christ?

Nervous Prostration—La Grippe.
SANTA CRUZ, Cal., Feb 3 1899.
DEAR DR. SANCHE:—My case was one of severe nervous prostration due to long ministerial labor without real rest. I reached a very low point of vitality a year ago in a sinking spell in church that nearly carried me off. After using Oxydonor No. 2 for about a week, I found the spells of faintness gone. Nine months ago I could not walk two blocks without faintness overtaking me; but now I can walk two miles without any real hurt. I have had La Grippe this winter, but thanks to Oxydonor I have weathered the attack successfully, and am eating, sleeping and feeling better than for years past. You certainly have discovered a road to health that deserves to be heralded abroad with the same enthusiasm as is the Gospel of God for the redemption of mankind. Sincerely yours in gratitude, (Rev.) GEO. R. BIRD.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Korean Gentleman*

ANYTHING that interferes with the rigid fulfillment of Yei (Confucianism) is of course to be avoided, for which reason no gentleman indulges in manual labor, or in fact in labor of any kind. His life consists in one supreme command of coolie service, while the coolie responds to every order. Down to the simplest requirements of life he does nothing, so his hands become soft and his fingernails grow long. From constant sitting, his bones seem to disintegrate and he becomes almost a mollusk before he passes middle life.

When once they have attained to this physical condition of pulp, they are in a measure immune from the thumps and shocks of ordinary life. The impecuniosity of a Korean gentleman is also a profound mystery. I have figured for years on the question as to how an idle man, with nothing left to-day, shall outlive to-morrow; but he lives, dresses just as well and misses none of his meals. He will tell you frankly that the last of his hopes for a livelihood have perished, he is financially a total wreck, and his present condition is one of hanging to the rocks, where he is in momentary peril of the devouring element. You are exercised deeply on his behalf; much more deeply, you learn later, than he himself is. Months pass, and he is in the same condition—a condition in extremis, no better, no worse. By way of encouragement, I have said: "You have managed to live for a month or more on nothing; just continue on in the same manner and you will do very well." "Eat and live!" says he, "of course, every dog eats and lives; you would not expect me to lie down and die, would you?" And he leaves in disgust, feeling that the delicate points of an Oriental question can never penetrate the shell that encases the barbarian's brain.

The fact that tradesmen and business people are regarded as low, encourages the Korean gentleman to neglect thought and training in this line. He is a veritable child in business. Many a foreigner entrusts affairs to his native teacher, and wonders why they should turn out so unsatisfactorily in the hands of a native. If business must be transacted, an honest "boy" will quite outdo in executive skill, the best and most honest scholar.

Not only in business but in other affairs of life, the Korean gentleman is a master of inaccuracy. He pretends to be absolutely certain of everything under the sun, and no subject ever daunts him or is beyond his ability to elucidate. The slightest clue gives him a key to the whole; merely let him see the smoke from the funnel, and he will explain to you the why and the wherefore of the steam-engine. He will tell you what a comet's tail is composed of, or what color the dog is that causes the eclipse of the moon. He compares the minor details of the life about him with what went on in the days of king Sun—a contemporary of Noah—with as much assurance as he would talk of the events of yesterday. The new arrival in the "Land of the Morning Calm" begins to think what a marvel of information this man is, and what a fund of accurate knowledge he has acquired, and he a heathen, too. It is only when you put his statements to the test, you find he is astray in everything. By the rarest accident he may be right, but it is the exception. He has no intention of deceiving you. The defect lies in the fact that there is something radically wrong with his manner of reasoning, and of putting two and two together.

He has a profound contempt for women, speaking of her generally as kechip, or female. He takes for wife the one his father bargains for, raising no question as to her looks, health or avoirdupois. She is a subject altogether beneath the consideration of a member of the male sex, with its massive understanding. She is relegated to the inner enclosure, and lives a secluded life. He refers to her as kosiki ("what-you-may-call-her"), or ken (she), and never loses an opportunity of showing how little is the place she occupies in his extensive operations. If the truth were told, however, we would know that the little woman within the enclosure is by no means the cipher he pretends her to be; but that she is really mate and skipper of the entire institution, and that no man was ever more under "petticoat government" than this same Korean gentleman.

His prime object in life is to have a son, who will sacrifice to his shades when he is dead and gone.

The Song of a Nation*

THE President's March, for which the poem, "Hail Columbia" was specially written, and to which it was easily adapted, was composed in honor of President Washington, who then resided at 190 High Street, Philadelphia. The composer of the popular air was Philip Roth, a teacher of music. Not a great deal is left on record about him, but it is declared that he was a very eccentric character, familiarly known as "Old Roat." A claim has been set up for Professor Phyla, of Philadelphia, but the evidence favors Roth.

During the centennial year an autograph copy of "Hail Columbia" was displayed in the museum at Independence Hall, Philadelphia. This interesting manuscript has marginal notes, one of which informs us that the lines:—

Behold the chief who now commands,
Once more to serve his country stands,
The rock on which the storm will beat;
The rock on which the storm will beat.

But, arm'd in virtue firm and true,
[illegible]
And glooms obscured Columbia's day,
[illegible]

refer to John Adams, who was President of the United States at the time "Hail Columbia" was written. Mr. Hopkinson also presented General Washington with an autograph copy of his poem, and received from him a complimentary letter of thanks, which is now in possession of his descendants.

A GREAT REMEDY.

Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure has Cured More Cases of Catarrh Than Any Other Remedy.

This is the only remedy that goes directly to the diseased parts and is at the same time "constitutional." It reduces the inflammation, heals the ulcerated surfaces, stops the discharge, restores the hearing, when impaired by catarrh, prevents the disease from going to the lungs, or removes it if already there. It gives speedy relief and effects a permanent cure.

This is the best season of the year to begin the treatment of Catarrh. Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure is put up in boxes containing enough medicine for one month's treatment, which is sent postage paid for $1.00. If you have not had a sample, we will send one free by mail, postpaid. Address: Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

Two Wagons at One Price.

It is a matter of great convenience and a saving of labor for a farmer to have a low, handy wagon. They save more than half the labor of loading in hauling manure, hay, grain, corn fodder, wood, stones, etc.

The man who already has a wagon may have one of these low handy wagons at the small additional cost for a set of wheels. These Electric Steel Wheels, with either direct or stagger spokes, with broad faced tire, are made to fit any axle. You can convert your old wagon to a low, handy wagon in a few moments time. You thus virtually have two wagons at one price. Write to the Electric Wheel Co., Box 136, Quincy, Illinois, for their catalogue; which fully explains about these and their Electric Handy Wagons, Electric Feed Cookers, etc.

The Evolution of Blanche Titus

. . . By . . .
Margaret E. Sangster

IT had been a long day, and Mrs. Elkins' kitchen had glowed like a furnace, what with the baking and ironing for six, two of whom were young ladies from town, boarding for the summer, and paying a high price to have their laundry work done in the house. Fluted ruffles and puffs and shirt waists smoothed under the flat-iron till they were miracles of daintiness, meant skill and strength paid out lavishly by Mrs. Elkins. Evening was coming fast, and she was pale and tired—tuckered out, she called it, as she hung the last piece on the clothes horse.

"Some of these things are aired enough to fold," she said, turning to her daughter and fingering the fragrant linen with a practiced touch.

"Oh! mother, no. Do leave them and sit down and take your breath while I mix the bread," cried Florence, getting out the kneading board and bowl, and sifting into it the powdery flour. "I wish we didn't have to take boarders. The Duncans are very nice, but I'm tired of the everlasting work and worry and tret of looking after their wants. Just see them now, cool and comfortable, going off for a spin on their wheels, while we stay here to finish the work made on their account."

"They pay well, Florence," said the mother.

"Why, yes, that is true, but if you have a doctor's bill for pleurisy when winter comes, all because you've gone and tired yourself completely out this summer, the money in the bank will melt away as fast as it did last year. I'm sure it's a mistake, our working so hard. If we could have any help—even a girl from the asylum would save steps."

"No asylum girl for me, Florence," said her mother with emphasis. "I would take a neighbor's daughter, if I could get her, but there are no living out girls in the neighborhood. And anyway, your father might raise objections."

"Yes, he would, probably," sighed Florence. Then added, resentfully, "Father manages to secure what help he needs in the fields, and any labor-saving machine he fancies. Father doesn't stop to wonder what you would say. Well, I'd like to change places with Miss Caroline and her sister once in a while. Say for a single evening. They are just like the lilies in the Bible, 'they neither toil nor spin.' And we, we just drudge and drudge our lives away."

Mrs. Elkins looked troubled, sighed faintly, sorry for Florence's mood. Then she began to fold the clothes. That at least would not need be done to-morrow. Presently she began again on the subject of hired help.

"Your father, Florence, would not like to let a summer pass without our having somebody here besides ourselves in this big house. He works very hard, often beyond his strength, and he thinks we ought not to be idle."

"Idle!" the girl's cheeks flushed hotly. "Without a cent ever paid for even the washing; without a hand to lift the burden, and all the men who come for the harvesting to cook for, as well as our own family. Four of us, two city boarders, and a second table full of hungry men—father does not know what idle means."

There was a low knock at the door.

"Please, Mrs. Elkins," piped up a clear little voice, "let me come and live with you! I'll help you and Florence. Let me fold up the towels and napkins. Aunty has taught me how to work. I'll be worth my keep, you'll see, and if you'll only let me stay here, and go to school, that's all I'll ask; no wages, only a place to sleep and my food, and a chance to go to school. I've clothes enough to last a long, long time. I'd not be a mite of trouble and I'll save a lot of steps. Please try me."

The child in the doorway, her gingham sun-bonnet hanging by its knotted strings at the back of her neck, was a tall, slender girl of thirteen; her dark eyes lighted a plain, sallow face, in which there was no beauty, though it was very intelligent. She was so much in earnest, that without waiting for Mrs. Elkins' answer, she stepped forward and began to fold and pile the clothes with a deftness that pleased that notable housekeeper.

"Why, Blanche!" said Florence, "how can your aunt spare you?"

"Aunty is going to spare me; she can't afford to let me stay with her any longer. She and Uncle Rufus have decided that I must go to town and work in a factory. I can earn three or four dollars a week there, and Uncle Rufus' sister will board me for two dollars and a half. But, dear Mrs. Elkins, my mother was a scholar, and she wanted me to have an education and I can't go back on her; she'd not like it in heaven. I mean to go through school and college and be a teacher by-and-by. I've come to you first, because you knew mamma, but I'm going to every house in the village and over to the Centre, and out on the West Road if I have to, till I find somebody who will let me work my way through school. I'll be a great help, if you'll let me come, Mrs. Elkins."

"Blanche, dear," said Florence, "what will your auntie say? Will she give her consent?"

"She'll not oppose me; she knows how I feel. She'd let me stay there and do my best if Uncle Rufus would be willing. But uncle says it's folly, my going any longer to school, and auntie can't stand out against him."

"Come here early to-morrow morning, Blanche," Mrs. Elkins said, glancing toward the veranda where her husband sat smoking his pipe. "I'll tell you positively then whether or not I'll take you on your terms, which are really very generous ones, my child. You ought to be paid something for your services."

"Oh, no! It will be pay enough if I can have a good home and attend school."

Mr. Elkins was a little disposed to grumble when the plan was submitted to him, but Florence frankly told him that unless her mother and herself could have some assistance they would send their boarders away, and he yielded to their wish. Blanche Titus was presently installed as a child of the house, for though she gave a ready hand everywhere, in kitchen, parlor and chambers, she was not treated as a servant, and she fully made good her word that she would be "worth her keep."

"It's surprising how much that willing little maid accomplishes," observed Miss Caroline to her sister one morning late in the autumn, when before going to school Blanche had made the beds, filled the pitchers, and swept the halls and stairs. Miss Caroline and her sister had found the country so delightful that they had lingered there to enjoy the crisp October mornings, and the drives and rides in the mountains, never so exhilarating as in the sweet days on the edge of Indian summer. The house suited these young women, fastidious as their tastes were; it was so spotlessly neat, the beds were so soft and springy, and the table was perfection. Now that the pressure of farm work was somewhat relaxed, Mrs. Elkins and her daughter were not so weary after the daily toil, and Blanche certainly made their lives easier. Her winsome presence was everywhere felt.

The two young ladies watched her walking swiftly down the road to school, her books in her hand. Miss Caroline had helped her with her examples once or twice, and Miss Susan had looked over her composition and given her some hints about her map-drawing.

"She's a singularly bright and clever girl," said the latter; "and I wish we could give her a lift."

"Why can we not?" said Caroline, going to her desk and taking up her pen. "There's that scholarship of Cousin Leonora's in Ellenborough Institute. I don't think it is filled this year. If Blanche could have that, she could stay at the institute three years and be prepared for college. I'll write to Cousin Leonora at once. Isn't there a special delivery stamp in my purse, Susie?"

"Why such haste, dear? Would you not best consider ways and means?"

"In this case, I think not. I'll act first and consider afterward. If Blanche is to have that particular scholarship I want to secure it for her, provided, that is, that she can pass the needful preliminaries."

"I'll see to that part. I've been watching her progress. She's well grounded in what she has studied, and is very faithful and thorough, and, what I like best, is to observe how nicely she does her housework; she slights nothing; she has a sense of honor and fulfils her part of the contract. Even Mr. Elkins, grumpy old fellow that he is, treats Blanche with respect. He admits that she isn't a shirk. And I do think it has penetrated his consciousness that his wife is better for being assisted."

"Sister," said Miss Caroline, "if we send Blanche Titus to the Ellenborough Institute, we shall have to be responsible for her board and clothing during three years. Are we safe in assuming so much? Ought we not to consult our people at home?"

"Mamma had always insisted on our having a maid."

"True, but if Blanche is at the institute, she ought not to be in the position of an upper servant. The city is different from the country. I don't think it would be the best thing for her, nor could she do more than nominally fill the position."

"Well, perhaps not, but she might be our youthful companion. Then she could have the little room opening out of mine; she would come to our home table at breakfast and dinner, and in return for what we do for her, she could render many small services which would take from her a feeling of pauperism. She could write our checks, keep our accounts, dust the bric-a-brac, read the paper to father on Saturdays; oh! there would be no difficulty about arranging work for her."

So though Blanche did not yet know her good fortune, cordial hands were extended to her at the very moment when they were needed. God does help those who help themselves.

The Duncan sisters had money in their own right and were to some extent independent. A conference with Mrs. Elkins resulted in their sending to town for such a wardrobe as would be suitable for a school-girl under their care, and a simple, well-chosen outfit was soon in their hands. When Blanche learned that she was to go with them to town, she had no word to express her joy.

"It seems too good to be true," she said; "but I'll study hard and try to pay you back when I'm a teacher."

"You will pay us now, without waiting for that time if you do your best, Blanche," said Miss Caroline; "and when you are a graduate, you may be able to help some other earnest girl. But you will find almost as much to do in our house as you have had to do here, so I don't wish you to think we are giving you something for nothing."

"We shall be lost without you, Blanche," was Mrs. Elkins' declaration. "You have been a second daughter to me and you must always think of this house as home, wherever you are." She gave Blanche a little purse in which there were two five-dollar gold pieces.

"You are not going into the great world without a penny," said the kind woman, kissing her little handmaid good-bye.

Life in the Ellenborough Institute and in the Duncan household was somewhat in contrast with that which Blanche had hitherto led. But the essentials of good breeding are everywhere the same, and our country girl learned how to enter and leave a room with grace; how to receive visitors; how to take her modest share in conversation. She was quiet, composed, unobtrusive. Mr. Duncan said one day to his wife:

"That child has good blood. She takes to society ways as if to the manner born."

"I almost feel as if I would like to adopt her."

"Not at all, not at all. That would spoil everything. I am watching with interest the problem she is working out. We are helping her to help herself, and that is far better than it would be for us to lift and carry her. But she is gaining more than mere education here. She is acquiring an air of distinction and of charm."

There were many besides Mr. Duncan who observed the same thing when at the end of her preparatory course Blanche, in the center of the white-robed graduates, modestly slipped forward and gave the valedictory. She had chosen her college, one of New England's most famous and honored, and had successfully passed every examination. The beneficence of the alumnæ had provided several scholarships there, and on one of them Blanch: Titus entered, assisted in certain ways by her friends, the Duncans, but supplementing her narrow means by efforts open to college women when they need or choose to make them.

She had been in college only a month when one of the teachers said to her:

"You are more fortunate than many of our students, Miss Titus. You have had an all round preparation for your work. Girls are not always aware that much besides book-knowledge is needful for a college course."

Blanche understood that whatever lay before her in the future she could meet without dread and with an assurance of victory. To Florence Elkins, with whom she kept up a steady correspondence, she wrote at this time:

"I don't know what your dear mother will say when she hears that I am going one of these days to be a doctor. I have quite resigned the idea of teaching. Since I came to college I have been taking work in the laboratory and studying biology. I feel a call within me to medicine and I've a strong hope that the way will be opened. God has been very good to me thus far, and friends have been raised at every step. I'm coaching a girl who does not find Greek as easy as I do, and I've undertaken to do the mending of another who never has handled a needle in her life. These girls pay me liberally for my help. The president and faculty are very kind. Of course it's looking quite far ahead to think of the medical college after four years here, but I dare to reach forward: I dare to believe that nothing is too hard for a girl who can work steadily on to a plain objective point, one day at a time."

I HAD A letter last week from Doctor Blanche Titus. She is the representative of her college in a mission field on the other side of the globe.

"I have been helped all my life," she writes, "and now I am enjoying the privilege of helping others. It is no easy lot I have chosen, but it is most fascinating in its splendid opportunities of doing good. These poor women are shut into their zenanas and their lives are very dark and bare. I used to think life was narrow and hard on a New England farm, but I tell you, it is rich and luxurious, no matter how hard a woman may toil, in comparison with the lot of a Hindu lady, hemmed in by restrictions, with nothing to think about, no chance to grow, no outlook for this life or the next.

"As a Christian woman I can guide these gentle dark-faced sisters to the better life.

"As a doctor, I have many chances to relieve their body from pain and suffering. I am busy and I think useful, and I am very thankful and happy. The mails bring me dear letters from home, from the Elkins, and the Duncans and my college friends, and I know I am loved in the home land. Don't you think I may be called a fortunate girl?"

You cannot be well when your blood is impure. Impurities of the blood clog every organ. Hood's Sarsaparilla will cleanse the vital fluid and instill rugged health to your whole system.

A Famous Gospel Singer Dead

Prof. John R. Sweney, Author of Many Sweet Hymns, Passes Away

FEW men in the last quarter of a century have been more widely known in connection with Gospel song and revival work than Prof. John Robson Sweney, who passed away a few days ago at his home in Chester, Pa., at the age of sixty-one. Mr. Sweney was the author of many sacred songs that have been helpful to men and women in all stages of the Christian life. Perhaps the most famous of his compositions is "Beulah Land," which is now sung by Christian worshipers in many languages. He also wrote "Calvary," "More About Jesus," "Showers of Blessings," "Little Ones Like Me" and hundreds of others almost equally well known.

Mr. Sweney was born in West Chester, Pa., December 31, 1837. At nineteen he began the study of music under Prof. Barili. When the Civil War opened he became bandmaster of the Third Delaware Regiment. From 1871 until the time of his death, he was actively connected with Sunday School and church work, for which a large number of his most popular hymns were written. He edited many hymn books, and the royalties from his copyrights were large. He was greatly in demand as a leader of singing at the principal summer religious assemblies, and was a well known figure at the camp-meetings at Ocean Grove, Round Lake and the Thousand Islands. Many of his choicest compositions have appeared from time to time on the music page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

New Ideas in Christian Work

An Open Forum for Practical Suggestions, to Which All Interested Readers are Invited to Contribute

POSSIBLY some of our readers may know of a better or even more successful way of meeting a church's financial emergency than that explained in the letter given below, but Mr. Smiley's experience is certainly worthy of consideration:

An Old Way to Pay Church Debts

To the Editor "Christian Herald": I cannot individually answer the many inquiries reaching me regarding the "Temple Chest Method" of raising the mortgage from the Twenty-third Avenue Presbyterian Church. I gladly, however, avail myself of the privilege of your columns to diffuse this general information for the encouragement of our poorer congregations whose influence is embarrassed by the burden of a church debt. It has never been my duty to contract a church debt, but it has been my privilege to assist in their payment. Of all the experiments thus far tried, I am pleased to proclaim that the "Temple Chest Method" is the most satisfactory and successful. Its Scriptural warrant impressed me while reading II. Kings 12. When King Jehoash needed funds to repair the dilapidated temple, we are informed that "Jehoiada, the priest, took a chest and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar . . . And the priests that kept the door put therein all the money that was brought into the house of God . . . And there was much money in the chest." Such a chest was prepared for a similar purpose and placed upon our pulpit Easter Sabbath. It was simply dedicated by the reading of a few selected passages of Scripture, emphasizing God's claim upon our stewardship, and a brief exposition of the same. Prayer was offered and the nature of the service explained. The people were then invited to deposit their free-will offerings in the chest. The ushers were soon kept busy bearing the gifts enclosed in the envelopes provided for the purpose to the pastor, who dropped them into the chest.

The uniqueness of the method was as surprising to many as the result. There was no "begging sermon," no effort to stimulate competition,no exhortation to evoke large amounts under the stimulus of unwarranted enthusiasm, not even the names of the donors were announced. He who gave sparingly, and he who gave bountifully stood upon the same plane. The object and plan was publicly announced the previous Sabbath, and the people came prepared to "give as unto the Lord." At the afternoon service the children of the Sabbath School brought their savings, which in many cases spoke eloquently of self-denial, and deposited their pennies, nickels and dimes in the chest. A third service was held in the evening, and notwithstanding the blizzard that raged, a large congregation again assembled. About 2,000 people attended the three services. At this service, some who felt upon reflection that they had not given according to their ability in the morning, brought an additional offering. It was a day memorable in our history, and our church will feel the stimulus of it for months to come.

At the evening service the total contents of the chest was announced. There was a natural curiosity to know whether the novel experiment would prove as successful in this ambitious age as in the ancient church. $4,400 were the offerings of the day. Six thousand pennies were found in the chest. The silver coin weighed 100 lbs. There were also bills and checks. We can truthfully say as of old: "There was much money in the chest."

We are free to pronounce the effort an unqualified success, and to commend it to the churches as worthy of trial.

Denver, Colo. (Rev.) FRANCIS E. SMILEY.

The Usher

Editor "Christian Herald": Among your modern ideas in Christian work I think you should have a word to say about the usher. He is a more important functionary than people generally think. I have had rather a wide experience of visiting churches where I am not known, and I have formed the conclusion that the right kind of usher is one of the best helps a church can have. You must not suppose from this that I am a religious vagabond, but must understand that my business duties call me to various cities, where, having an inveterate habit of church-going, I always make a point of being in the house of the Lord on the Lord's day. I am always interested in the mode of reception. Sometimes the usher will stand and look one over as if he were making an estimate of one's social standing, on the basis of one's clothing, and rapidly deciding the kind of seat that should be given to a person so attired. I never worry about this and always hope he settles it to his own satisfaction, but I can imagine that to some people it would be disagreeable. Then there is the usher who seems harassed by the visitor's arrival as if he really did not know what to do with him, though there are unhappily few churches so well attended as to have no vacant place, after the ninety and nine are seated for the hundredth unexpected man who does not belong to that fold.

But my object in writing you is to tell you of an experience I had in a certain church which gave me an impression of "liveness" and enterprise truly commendable. As I entered the lobby, the usher, a bright, alert man of middle age, recognized the stranger right away as if I was his legitimate prey. He gave me kindly greeting, put a calendar of the services into my hand and conducted me to a seat. So far so good; but he was not through with me. When I came out with the congregation after the service, he greeted me again, asked me if I was staying long in town, and said he would send me a calendar of the midweek services if I would give him my address. He also offered to take me around and introduce me to the pastor, after he had secured my name. I thought then and think now that if I had been a newcomer about to settle in the town permanently, I should have been greatly influenced in my choice of a church home by that usher's friendliness. I believe many a church would be benefited if its ushers were to make a motto of the Scriptural injunction: "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. Yours truly,

CONSTANT READER.

[Our friend's hint should not be lost upon those churches—unfortunately too numerous—where a new visitor is made to feel like a stranger and unwelcome, through the coldness and indifference of the officers whose duty it should be to extend a cordial welcome.]

A Remarkable Pittsburgh Church

To the Editor "Christian Herald:" Second Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., is in the heart of the down-town region, surrounded by business sky-scraping buildings, it being estimated that the members pay in addition to all other expenses an annual aggregate of over $10,000 in car fares. There is no feature of an institutional church; no outside evangelist is ever employed, and no extra meetings are held. An after service follows each Sabbath evening preaching service, and new members are received by session each Sabbath and frequently Wednesday evening. READER.

[This church would seem to be conducted on "strictly business" principles, yet not to spiritual detriment. We would be pleased to hear from other churches similarly situated.]

Soul-Hunger

ARE you hungry for the Saviour?
Do you long his love to know?
Do you need the joy and comfort
Only Jesus can bestow?
Are you hungry for the Saviour?
Does your fainting spirit crave
Him who made the soul to love him,
Him who died the soul to save?

Are you hungry? Are you thirsty?
Are you weary, sick and cold?
Are you longing for the shepherd,
And the shelter of his fold?
Are you hungry? Are you hungry,
Starving on the husks of sin?
Mercy's door is standing open—
Freely you may enter in.

Are you hungry for the Saviour?
'Twas the Saviour gladly died
That a feast might be provided
And all longing satisfied.
Are you hungry for the Saviour?
He is waiting now to bless
Every sinner who is hungry
And athirst for righteousness.

Are you hungry for the Saviour?
Do not go away to-night
Till you claim his offered bounty,
Peace and pardon, love and light.
Freely take of his abundance,
It will life and health restore—
Take the living bread of heaven,
And you shall not hunger more.

A REMARKABLE INVENTION

BY AN OHIOAN

A genius of Cincinnati has patented and placed on the market a remarkable Bath Cabinet, wherein by any one resting on a chair within, enjoys the famous Turkish, hot vapor or medicated baths at home for three cents each, in which enjoyed only by the rich at public bathrooms, health resorts, hot springs and sanitariums. These baths are celebrated for their marvelous cleansing, purifying and invigorating effects upon the human system, and this invention brings them within the reach of the poorest person in the country.

Clouds of hot vapor or medicated vapor surround the entire body, opening the millions of sweat pores, causing profuse perspiration, drawing

IN OPERATION—DOOR CLOSED

FOLDED

out of the system all impure salts, acids and poisonous matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs and skin, causing disease, fevers, debility and sluggishness.

Astonishing is the improvement in health, feelings and complexion by the use of this Cabinet, and it seems to us that the long-sought-for natural method of curing and preventing disease without medicine has certainly been found.

The makers inform the writers that 82,386 of these Quaker folding thermal Cabinets have been sold since January 1, and showed letters from thousands of users who speak of this Cabinet as giving entire satisfaction.

Since this invention bathtubs have been discarded, for it gives a better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water, and as there are millions of homes without bathing facilities, it seems this would be a good article for our readers to take the agency for.

Thousands of remarkable letters have been written the inventors, and to our knowledge persons who were full of drugs and nostrums, and have been given up to die, have been restored to perfect, robust health, to the astonishment of their friends and physicians.

E. L. Eaton, M.D. of Topeka, Kan., gave up his practise, because, he said, he could do more good for humanity with this Cabinet than his medicines, and has already sold more than 600 of them. Congressman John J. Lentz, Mrs. Senator Douglas, Rev. R. E. Peale, Una, S. C.; Rev. Samuel Cooper, John T. Brown, editor of the Christian Guide, and a host of our most eminent people recommend it.

J. A. Hagan, Richfield, Mo., afflicted 15 years with rheumatism in its worst form, was cured in 6 days. L. B. Westbrook, Newton, Ia., afflicted 45 years, was cured in three weeks of catarrh, asthma, heart and kidney trouble. O. P. Freeman, Sparta, O., afflicted 17 years, unable to walk, was cured of kidney troubles, piles and rheumatism. A prominent citizen of Elwood, Ind.—E. Veher—was cured of a serious case of obesity. A lady in Maysville, Mo.—Mrs. L. Coen—was cured of woman's troubles, and recommends it to all suffering ladies.

We find this is a genuine Cabinet, with a door, handsomely and durably made of best materials, rubber-lined, has a steel frame, and should certainly last a life-time.

It is important to know that the makers guarantee results, and assert positively, as do thousands of users, that this Cabinet will clear the skin, purify and enrich the blood, cure nervousness, weakness, that tired feeling and the worst forms of rheumatism. (They offer $50 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures woman's troubles, malaria, ague, sleeplessness, neuralgia, headaches, piles, dropsy, liver, kidney and nervous troubles. It will make you strong, energetic, full of life and vigor with the coming of spring and summer, and avoid illness later.

To please the ladies, a face and head steaming attachment is furnished, if desired, which clears the skin, beautifies the complexion, removes pimples, blackheads, eruptions, and is a sure cure for skin diseases, catarrh and asthma.

All our readers should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Cabinet complete, with Heater, formulas and directions, only $5.00. Head steamer, $1 extra; and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much genuine health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day to the World Mfg. Co., 586 World Building, Cincinnati, O., for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money after 30 days if not just as represented. We know them to be perfectly reliable. Capital $100,000.00, and they will ship promptly upon receipt of remittance.

Don't fail to send for booklet, anyway.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and to our knowledge many are making from $100 to $150 per month and expenses. It is certainly an opportunity not to be neglected.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

V. H., Alexandria, S. D., S. T. J., Kasson, Minn., and others. If, as Mark says, our Lord promised that certain signs "should follow them that believe," how is it that we do not see them now?"

He did not promise that they should always follow. The speaking with tongues, casting out devils, taking up serpents, etc., were signs suitable for that age when the people, being densely ignorant, expected miracles and signs. Christ reproved the tendency, and on more than one occasion refused to gratify them. He wanted them to learn from the sign to seek spiritual blessings at his hands, which were of much greater value to them. We have entered into that higher and better understanding of him. It is much more wonderful to see a drunkard reclaimed, a vicious man reformed, than it was to see a lame man healed. The power to cast out devils and to speak with tongues and take up serpents would not be near so valuable to us as is the power he gives to transform evil lives.

J. N., Mahanoy City, Pa. Since the fall of man has it been natural or unnatural for man to sin?

Judging by the prevalence of sin and the early age at which children usually begin, we should say it was natural. David seemed to have that opinion (see Ps. 51 : 5). It was not much better before the fall. Adam and Eve do not appear according to the account in Genesis to have made much resistance to temptation. The fact of its being natural accounts for a new nature being necessary, as Christ explained to Nicodemus (John 3 : 1–21).

H. W., Pittsburg, Pa. 1. If there are on the committee for the building of a new church, men interested in the liquor business and the conduct of worldly resorts, should a Christian refuse, on that ground, to become a member of the committee? 2. What was that hymn that the Lord and his disciples sang at the institution of the Lord's Supper?

1. Very little good work would be done, if Christians insisted on only good men being engaged in it. Of course the ideal condition is to have the workers pure, but Paul reminds his readers (I. Cor. 5 : 10) if they were to refuse altogether to be associated with evildoers they must needs go out of the world. In the case in question the Christian would, we think, be acting wisely in going on the committee, if he is invited, and trying to keep the project free from the taint which might come if it were left in the hands of irreligious men. 2. Probably the Psalms we now know, the one hundred and fifteenth and the three following which were those usually sung at the Passover.

Reader, Riner, Va. 1. Does the warning against adding anything to the "words of this book" (Rev. 22 : 18) apply to the whole Bible or only to Revelation? 2. Is it not adding to the words to speak of sanctification as "the second blessing?" 3. In what sense can it be said, as in Hebrews 11 : 13, that the Old Testament saints did not receive the promises?

1. To the book of Revelation only. The New Testament books had not at that time been collected into one volume, and it is possible that one or more had not been written. Therefore the warning could not apply to the whole Bible. 2. No, it would not be adding to the word; but you would be more accurate in calling it a continuous or progressive blessing. It is a process, not a thing conferred. 3. They had but a vague conception of the revelation that was made by Christ to the world. They had faith in the promise and sufficient light to enable them to seek after righteousness, but they did not receive the blessings promised, nor did they receive the promises Christ made to those who followed

E. P., E. Roxbury, Mass. If, as you say, it is probable that a majority of the Samoans regard Mataafa as their lawful king, why does our government interfere to prevent them having their way?

Because their way is not good for them, and we have made ourselves responsible for the welfare and good government of the islands. With Mataafa as king, the islands would relapse into barbarism, and all the progress that has been made, would be lost. Bismarck knew this, when, in drawing the triparite treaty, he stipulated that Mataafa should not be king. The savage fellow had killed and mutilated German sailors, and he was rightly excluded from the throne. It is a pity that German officials have adopted a new policy. In the recent encounter, Mataafa's followers showed by their mutilation of our sailors, that they are as barbarous as ever. Unhappily, the majority of Samoans like that kind of thing, but it may be hoped for the sake of the better and more civilized part of the population, that they will not succeed in gaining control.

If you are asking our opinion as a matter of advice as to your own course, we would advise you, if you have not begun the habit, not to use it, especially as you appear to have doubts as to its being right. It is an expensive habit and you can put the money it would cost to a better use in these days when churches and missionary societies are in urgent need of funds. Besides this, the habit is not cleanly, it is offensive to other people who do not practice it. On all accounts we advise you not to acquire the habit. But on the other hand, if you ask the question that you may have our authority for condemning some one else, we decline to give it. It is not for us to tell some sufferer who finds relief from it, or who has innocently used it for many years, that he is doing wrong. Let every man be guided by his own conscience.

This antique, carved chair was presented by the Methodists of Great Britain to the Methodist University of Washington, D. C., and will occupy a prominent place in the University building.

Ellen V., St. Petersburg, Fla. Why are people so fond of eggs on Easter?

The Easter-egg custom is as old as history. The "Paskha" or paste-egg was literally an egg used at the Passover, and was probably a custom borrowed from the Egyptians, who regarded the egg as the emblem of creative power. The use of eggs at Easter (the season of nature's re-birth) was also common among the Scandinavians, and was a feature of the annual festival to the heathen goddess Ostara every Spring. The egg in modern times has lost much of its ancient significance, but is still an Easter accompaniment in many lands. In Russia, when an Easter-egg is presented, the giver says to the recipient: "Christ is risen," and the latter responds: "It is so of a truth." In a Christian sense, the egg is a token or emblem of the resurrection.

Timely Truths About Cuba

A Warning Against Wild Investment Schemes — Where the Real Opportunities Lie—The Distress Disappearing

A GREAT many folks in the United States want to know how things are going in Cuba. Having been there for several months, I may be able to tell them so that they will feel they know something about it.

There is distress in Cuba, and there will necessarily be distress for months to come. But the situation has improved every day since the American military occupation began, and it is improving every day now. It is true that most of the reconcentrados died, and if it had not been for American relief, a large portion of the population which did not belong to the reconcentrados would also have died. Yet after the army got under way in distributing rations, thousands were saved from starving. It is my understanding that the distribution of rations will be continued through the summer season, the money being taken out of the customs receipts of the island.

The "Crop Season"

Summer is the winter season in Cuba. I do not mean by that that you can see a flake of snow in the air, but that the summer months are those in which the land cannot be well tilled on account of the heavy rains. The Cubans plant in the autumn, and harvest in the winter. During the summer they do some farming, but the rains which keep the earth moist for nine months fall in the period of three or four months in such tremendous downpours that regular farming is not practicable. Therefore, during these summer months there may be reports of distress in the agricultural portions of the island which the people of the United States will not understand without explanation. They will naturally wonder why anybody should starve in what they suppose is the crop season. The explanation is, as I have already given it, that in Cuba the summer months are not the crop season.

Now, regarding the distribution of rations. Some of us who were there thought in the beginning that the army was not the best means of carrying on that work. The time is past for having opinions on that subject. The work was entrusted to the army, and it has gone forward with the distribution. I think, too, that the army officers have done very well. They have been systematic and thorough, and while not without sympathy for the suffering, they have not allowed their sympathies to run away with their judgment. The great point is that the army has organization, and that this organization extends from one end of the island to the other. There is consequently the certainty that no section will be neglected. My own decided opinion is that private relief should not seek to supplement in any way the distribution of rations by the army. It can find other channels in which more effective good can be done.

The Orphans

The great need in Cuba to-day, and the need for months and even years to come, is of orphan asylums and institutions for the women and children. The American military authorities cannot undertake this work. The most they can do is to give their support and encouragement to the private societies and associations in the United States which are undertaking to establish and sustain the asylums. Dr. Klopsch saw that clearly when he directed his activities toward the maintenance of the Havana Orphan Asylum, in which, through his efforts, so many Americans have become interested. It is a good work; no better work could be done. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee takes a kindly personal interest, and his watchful eye is always alert for the welfare of those orphans. I know at times discouraging and conflicting reports come from Cuba concerning institutions of this kind. It must be remembered that there are many difficulties surrounding their management. As much should not be expected from them as from similar institutions in the United States. It is certainly better for the homeless waifs to be housed and cared for under any conditions, than for them to be left to starve in the streets or grow up in idleness and vice.

About other things in Cuba. A great many people have asked me when it is going to be Americanized. If some of the samples of Americanism which have been in the island this winter and spring were to be taken as types of the American people, I should hope it would never be Americanized. But we all know that the adventurers and the schemers and that class are not the real representatives of the people of the United States. It was simply the scum of Americanism. Now the scum is being swept away by the currents of legitimate enterprise, and one can look around and study the prospects.

THE YELLOW FEVER HOSPITAL, HAVANA

GEN. LUDLOW'S HEADQUARTERS, HAVANA

In the first place, I want to say that gold does not grow on trees in Cuba, nor is it shoveled up from the earth by the bucketful. The wealth of Cuba is in its soil. I do not believe there is a richer soil in any portion of the globe. But in order to produce wealth this soil has to be cultivated, just as the soil of barren New England has to be cultivated. Men must plow and sow and reap and market their crops. Two crops of almost everything can be raised in Cuba in a single year, but sombody must raise them. Of course this is not true of sugar, because after the cane is planted and has had an eighteen months' growth, it produces an annual crop for a long series of years.

Raising sugar cane is not a business for the small farmer. It takes a large amount of capital, anywhere from $100,000 to $1,000,000. It is my belief that after a time coffee-raising will again become one of the leading agricultural industries of the island. At present, there are some very fine coffee plantations in Santiago province. There is an immense amount of land which is capable of coffee production. Some of it is within twenty or thirty miles of Havana. But it takes four years to bring a coffee plantation to the point where the trees bear the coffee beans; so while it is a promising business for the future, it is not one from which immediate returns can be had. The crops which can be raised within a year are all kinds of fruits, tobacco, corn, potatoes, onions, and vegetables generally. I should except oranges. Of course an orange grove cannot be planted and be made to bear fruit within a twelvemonth. But it will be a profitable business in the future.

Suspicious Schemes

When I am writing this way, I am thinking of the Cuba of five years hence. It is my conviction that people who go there and buy land and cultivate the land themselves will not regret it. Nor do I think that the climate stands in their way. But it is absolutely certain that Cuba cannot become prosperous until its rich land is again under cultivation. Therefore, I should be suspicious of enterprises of all sorts which promise large returns right away, or which have for their basis fancy schemes of money-making. They cannot drive the cart before the horse in Cuba any more than in the United States. After the land gets under cultivation again and the people get to work, then will come the time for what may be called industrial enterprises.

If I were an American investing in Cuba, I should first want to see the field of my investment. If that were not possible, I should want somebody to see it who was capable of giving me disinterested advice. My own opinion is that an American farmer, or an American who is not a farmer, but has good horse sense, can do very well in Cuba after a time, if he begins right. If he should go to Cuba in the fall—and that is the time to go—during the first season he would get enough out of his land to support himself and family, and probably to pay for stocking it with oxen and farm implements. After that he would get a larger return for his money. Speaking generally, I should beware of all enterprises which promised very heavy returns the first year, and which did not require the investor to know anything about his investment. Even Klondike schemes are safer, because there are gold nuggets in the Klondike.

Security of Land Titles

On one thing the man who is looking to Cuba for investment need have no fear. This is the security of land titles. It seems to be a common mistake in the United States to think that Cuban titles are insecure. They are just the opposite. It must be remembered that Cuba is an old, settled country. I don't believe there have been government lands, or what we would call public lands for the last 200 years. Titles have been handed down from family to family. The Spanish law, oppressive in many ways, had the effect of diminishing cloudy titles. If any of the various formalities required by law were omitted, the Spanish government refused to recognize the title, and it was rarely validated by legal process. Therefore, when land transfers did take place, they were thorough. In every judicial district in the island there is a well kept registry of property.

Americans to Redeem Cuba

My own notion is that Americans who invest money in Cuba—and Americans will invest when the conditions suit them—should be on the island themselves to watch the investment. The young fellow whose father wants to do something for him, if there is the right stuff in the lad, will not make a mistake in giving him a start in Cuba. Many of the American soldier boys who were there last winter will go back next fall to stay. The cultivation of the land must precede other enterprises. Then will come the chances for trade. American enterprise is going to supply Cuba with nearly everything that the inhabitants of the island consume. As the population increases there will be more flour, cotton goods and other articles sent to Cuba, and after a time it may be that American wholesale houses will be established in Havana. But for some years to come American goods will be sold to the Spanish wholesale houses by commission agents. A few American retail stores may be set up in Havana and may do fairly well, but they will be merely a drop in the bucket of retail trade. When the conditions change, there will be railroad-building across the island, so that Havana will be connected with Santiago, and there will be branch lines to the north and south coasts. At present the railroad system may be said to end at Santa Clara, which is about the centre of the island. Large American investments have already been made in the forest lands, and probably the work of taking out the timber will begin within a few months. That will afford some outlet to American energy, and may open up some fresh opportunities. But my advice to everybody is to keep in mind the fact that, in the end, more money is made in legitimate enterprises of this kind and in cultivating the soil than in the promising schemes which seem to give everybody a chance to get rich right away.

A word may be useful on another point. An American young fellow with business training will have his chance in Cuba if he can possess himself in patience. When the land begins to yield its products and new enterprises spring up, then the opening will come for him. American capitalists and American companies engaged in developing the resources of the island will make room for hard-working young Americans who have not capital of their own. In the meantime, these young Americans should learn Spanish. Their countrymen would rather employ an American who knows Spanish than a Spaniard or a Cuban who knows English. Last winter many letters came to me from American young men who were seeking openings. While for the reasons I have already given the opportunity was not then at hand, in every case where I brought the matter to the attention of men of capital they could see a prospect for the young fellow who knew Spanish. It is not a hard language to learn, and after studying it at home, a few months' intercourse with the people who talk it affords a passable facility in its use. So, while no American is certain of getting a place in Cuba any more than he is certain of getting it at home, his chances will be much better if he knows Spanish.

. . . The Drunkard's Woe . . .

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Exodus II: 6, . . .

And there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt

THIS was the worst of the ten plagues. The destroying angel at midnight flapped his wing over the land, and there was one dead in each house. Lamentation and mourning and woe through all Egypt. That destroying angel has fled the earth, but a far worse has come. He sweeps through these cities. It is the destroying angel of strong drink. Far worse devastation wrought by this second than by the first. The calamity in America worse than the calamity in Egypt. Thousands of the slain, millions of the slain. No arithmetic can calculate their number.

Once upon a time four fiends met in the lost world. They resolved that the people of our earth were too happy, and these four infernals came forth to our earth on embassy of mischief. The one fiend said: "I'll take charge of the vineyards." Another said: "I'll take charge of the grain fields." Another said: "I'll take charge of the dairy." Another said: "I'll take charge of the music." The four fiends met in the great Sahara Desert, with skeleton fingers clutched each other in handshake of fidelity, kissed each other good-bye with lip of blue flame and parted on their mission.

The fiend of the vineyard came in one bright morning amid the grapes and sat down on a root of twisted grapevine in sheer discouragement. The fiend knew not how to damage the vineyard, or, through it, how to damage the world. The grapes were so ripe and beautiful and luscious. They bewitched the air with their sweetness. There seemed to be so much health in every bunch; and while the fiend sat there in utter indignation and disappointment, he clutched a cluster and squeezed it in perfect spite, and lo! his hand was red with the blood of the vineyard, and the fiend said: "That reminds me of the blood of broken hearts: I'll strip the vineyard and I'll squeeze out all the juice of the grapes, and I'll allow the juices of the grapes to stand until they rot, and I'll call the process fermentation." And there was a great vat prepared, and people came with their cups and their pitchers, and they dipped up the blood of the grapes, and they drank and drank and went away drinking, and they drank until they fell in long lines of death, so that when the fiend of the vineyard wanted to return to his home in the pit, he stepped from carcass to carcass and walked down amid a great causeway of the dead.

Then the second fiend came into the grain field. He waded chin-deep amid the barley and the rye. He heard all the grain talking about bread, and prosperous husbandry, and thrifty homes. He thrust his long arms into the grain field and he pulled up the grain and threw it into the water and he made beneath it great fires—fires lighted with a spark from his own heart—and there was a grinding, and a mashing, and a stench, and the people came with their bottles and they dipped up the fiery liquid, and they drank, and they blasphemed, and they staggered, and they fought, and they rioted, and they murdered, and the fiend of the pit, the fiend of the grain field, was so pleased with their behavior that he changed his residence from the pit to a whiskey barrel, and there he sat by the door of the bunghole laughing in high merriment at the thought that out of anything so harmless as the grain of the field he might turn this world into a seeming pandemonium.

The fiend of the dairy saw the cows coming home from the pasture-field, full-uddered, and as the maid milked he said: "I'll soon spoil all that mess: I'll add to it brandy, sugar, and nutmeg, and I'll stir it into a milk punch, and children will drink it, and some of the temperance people will drink it, and if I can do them no more harm, I'll give them a headache, and then I'll hand them over to the more vigorous fiends of the Satanic delegation." And then the fiend of the dairy leaped upon the shelf and danced until the long row of shining milkpans almost quaked.

The fiend of the music entered a grog-shop, and there were but few customers. Finding few customers he swept the circuit of the city, and he gathered up the musical instruments, and after nightfall he marshalled a band, and the trombones blew, and the cymbals clapped, and the drums beat, and the bugles called and the people crowded in, and they swung around in merry dance, each one with a wine glass in his hand; and the dance became wilder and stronger and rougher, until the room shook, and the glasses cracked, and the floor broke, and the crowd dropped into hell.

Then the four fiends—the fiend of the vineyard, and of the grainfield, and of the dairy, and of the music hall—went back to their home, and they held high carnival because their work had been so well done; and Satan rose from his throne and announced that there was no danger of the earth's redemption so long as these four fiends could pay such tax to the diabolic. And then all the demons, and all the sprites, and all the fiends, filled their glasses, and clicked them, and cried: "Let us drink—drink to the everlasting prosperity of the liquor traffic. Here's to woe, and darkness, and murder, and death. Drink! Drink!"

But whether by allegory or by appalling statistic this subject is presented, you know as well as I that it is impossible to exaggerate the evils of strong drink. A plague! A plague! In the first place the inebriate suffers from the loss of a good name. God has so arranged it that no man loses his reputation except by his own act. The world may assault a man, and all the powers of darkness may assault him—they cannot capture him so long as his heart is pure and his life is pure. All the powers of earth and hell cannot take that Gibraltar. If a man is right, all the bombardment of the world for five, ten, twenty, forty years will only strengthen him in his position. So that all you have to do is to keep yourself right. Never mind the world. Let it say what it will. It can do you no damage. But as soon as it is whispered, "he drinks," and it can be proved, he begins to go down. What clerk can get a position with such a reputation? What store wants him? What Church of God wants him for a member? What dying man wants him for an executor? "He drinks!" I stand before hundreds of young men—and I say it not in flattery—splendid young men who have their reputation as their only capital. Your father gave you a good education, or as good an education as he could afford to give you. He started you in city life. He could furnish you no means, but he has surrounded you with Christian influences and a good memory of the past. Now, young man, under God you are with your own right arm to achieve your fortune, and as your reputation is your only capital, do not bring upon it suspicion by going in and out of liquor establishments, or by an odor of your breath, or by any glare of your eye, or by any unnatural flush on your cheeks. You lose your reputation and you lose your capital.

The inebriate suffers also in the fact that he loses his self-respect, and when you destroy a man's self-respect there is not much left of him: Then a man will do things he would not do otherwise, he will say things he would not say otherwise. The fact is that man cannot stop, or he would stop now. He is bound hand and foot by the Philistines, and they have shorn his locks and put his eyes out, and made him grind in the mill of a great horror. After he is three-fourths gone in this slavery, the first thing he will be anxious to impress you with is that he can stop at any time he wants to. His family become alarmed in regard to him, and they say: "Now do stop this; after a while, it will get the mastery of you." "Oh! no," he says, "I can stop at any time; I can stop now. I can stop tomorrow." His most confidential friends say: "Why, I'm afraid you are losing your balance with that habit; you are going a little further than you can afford to go; you had better stop." "Oh! no," he says, "I can stop at any time; I can stop now." He goes on further and further. He cannot stop. I will prove it. He loves himself, and he knows nevertheless that strong drink is depleting him in body, mind, and soul. He knows he is going down, that he has less self-control, less equipoise of temper than he used to. Why does he not stop? Because he cannot stop. I will prove it by going still further. He loves his wife and children. He sees that his habits are bringing disgrace upon his home. The probabilities are they will ruin his wife and disgrace his children. He sees all this, and he loves them. Why does he not stop? He cannot stop.

I had a very dear friend, generous to a fault. He had given thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to Bible societies, tract societies, missionary societies, asylums for the poor, the halt, the lame, the blind, the imbecile. I do not believe for twenty years anybody asked him for a dollar, or fifty dollars, or a hundred dollars for charity but he gave it. I never heard of anybody asking him for help but he gave it. But he was under the power of strong drink, and he went on down, down, down. His family implored him, saying: "You are going too far in that habit; you had better stop." He replied: "I can stop any time; I am my own master; I can stop." He went on down, down. His friends advised and cautioned him. He said: "Don't be afraid of me; I am my own master; I can stop now; I know what I am doing." He went on down until he had the delirium tremens. On down until he had the delirium tremens twice. After the second time the doctor said: "If you ever have an attack like this again you will die; you had better stop." He said: "I can stop any time; I can stop now." He went on down. He is dead. What slew him? Rum, rum! Among the last things he said was that he could stop any time. He could not stop.

Oh, my young friends, I want to tell you that there is a point in inebriation beyond which if a man go he cannot stop. But sometimes a man will be more frank than that. A victim of strong drink said to a reformer: "It is impossible for me to stop; I realize it. But if you should tell me I couldn't have a drink until to-morrow night unless I had all my fingers cut off, I would say, 'Bring the hatchet and cut them off.'" I had a very dear friend in Philadelphia whose nephew came to him and was talking about his trouble and confessed it. He confessed he could not stop. My friend said: "You must stop." He said: "I can't stop. If there stood a cannon, and it was loaded, and there was a glass of wine on the mouth of the cannon, and I knew you would fire it off if I approached, I would start to get that glass of wine. I must have it. I can't get rid of this habit. I can't get away from it." Oh! it is awful for a man to wake up and feel that he is a captive. I hear him soliloquizing, saying: "I might have stopped three months ago, but I can't stop now. Dead, but not buried. I am a walking corpse. I am an apparition of what I once was. I am a caged immortal and my soul beats against the wires of my cage on this side and beats against the wires of my cage on the other side, until there is blood on the wires, and blood on the soul, but I can't get out. Destroyed without remedy!"

Again, the man suffers from the loss of usefulness. Do you know some of the men who have fallen into the ditch were once in the front rank in churches and in the front rank in reformatory institutions? Do you know they once knelt at [illegible] mental days? Do you know they once stood in the pulpit and preached the Gospel of the Son of God? We will not forget the scene witnessed some years ago in my Brooklyn church when a man rose in the midst of the audience, stepped into the aisle and walked up and down. Everybody saw that he was intoxicated. The ushers led him out, and his poor wife took his hat and overcoat and followed him to the door. Who was he? He had once been a mighty minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in a sister denomination, had often preached in this very city. What slew him? Strong drink! Oh, what must be the feeling of a man who has destroyed his capacity for usefulness? Do not be angry with that man. Do not lose your patience with him. Do not wonder if he says strange things and gets irritated easily in the family. He has the Pyrenees and the Andes and the Alps on him. Do not try to persuade him that there is no future punishment. Do not go into any argument to prove to him that there is no hell. He knows there is. He is there now!

But he suffers also in the loss of physical health. The older people in this audience can remember Dr. Sewell going through this country electrifying great audiences by demonstrating to them the effect of strong drink upon the human stomach. I am told he had eight or ten diagrams which he presented to the people, showing the different stages in the progress of the disease, and I am told tens of thousands of people turned back from that ulcerous sketch and swore eternal abstinence from all intoxicants. God only knows what the drunkard suffers. Pain files on every nerve, and travels every muscle, and gnaws on every bone, and stings with every poison, and pulls with every torture. What reptiles crawl over his shivering limbs! What spectres stand by his midnight pillows! What groans tear the air! Talk of the rack, talk of the funeral pyre, talk of the Juggernaut—he suffers them all at once.

See the attendants stand back from that ward in the hospital where the inebriates are dying. They cannot stand it. The keepers come through it and say: "Hush up, now, stop making this noise. Be still! You are disturbing all the other patients. Keep still now!" Then the keepers pass on, and after they get past, then the poor creatures wring their hands and say: "O! God. Help, help! Give me rum, give me rum! O! God. Help! Take the devils off of me. O! God. O! God." And they shriek, and they blaspheme, and they cry for help, and then they ask the keepers to slay them, saying: "Stab me, strangle me, smother me. O! God. Help, help! Rum! Give me rum. O! God. Help!" They tear out their hair by the handful, and they bite their nails into the quick. This is no fancy picture. It is transpiring in a hospital at this moment. It went on last night while you slept; and more than that, that is the death some of you will die unless you stop. I see it coming. God help you to stop before you go so far that you cannot stop.

But it plagues a man also in the loss of home. I do not care how much he loves his wife and children, if this habit gets the mastery over him he will do the most outrageous things. If need be, in order to get strong drink he would sell them all into everlasting captivity. There are hundreds and thousands of homes that have been utterly blasted of it. I am speaking of no abstraction. Is there anything so disastrous to a man for this life and for the life to come? Do you tell me that a man can be happy when he knows he is breaking his wife's heart and clothing his children with rags? There are little children in the streets to-day, barefooted, unkempt, uncombed, want written on every patch of their faded dress, and on every wrinkle of their prematurely old countenance, who would have been in the house of God this morning as well clad as you, had it not been that strong drink drove their parents down into penury and then down into the grave. O! rum, rum, thou despoiler of homes, thou foe of God, thou recruiting officer of the pit, I hate thee!

But my subject takes a deeper tone when it tells you that the inebriate suffers the loss of the soul. The Bible intimates that if we go into the future world unforgiven, the appetites and passions which were regnant here will torment us there. I suppose when the inebriate wakes up in the lost world, there will be an infinite thirst clawing upon him. In this world he could get strong drink. However poor he was in this world, he could beg or he could steal five cents to get a drink that would for a little while slake his thirst; but in eternity where will the rum come from? Dives wanted one drop of water, but could not get it. Where will the inebriate get the draught he so much requires, so much demands, No one to brew it. No one to mix it. No one to pour it. No one to fetch it. Millions of worlds now for the dregs that were thrown on the sawdusted floor of the restaurant. Millions of worlds now for the rind flung out from the punch-bowl of an earthly banquet. Dives called for water. The inebriate calls for rum.

If a fiend from the lost world should come up on a mission to a grog shop, and having finished the mission in the grog shop, should come back, taking on the tip of his wing one drop of alcoholic beverage, what excitement it would make all through the world of the lost; and if that one drop of alcoholic beverage should drop from the wing of the fiend upon the tongue of the inebriate, how he would spring up and cry: "That's it; that's it! Rum! Rum! That's it!" And all the caverns of the lost would echo with the cry, "Give it to me. Rum! Rum!" Ah! my friends, the inebriate's sorrow in the next world will not be the absence of God, or holiness, or light; it will be the absence of rum. "Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it moveth itself aright in the cup; for at the last it biteth like a serpent, and it stingeth like an adder."

When I see this plague in the land, and when I see this destroying angel sweeping across our great cities, I am sometimes indignant, and sometimes humiliated. When a man asks me: "What are you in favor of for the subjugation of this evil?" I answer, "I am ready for anything that is reasonable." You ask me "Are you in favor of Sons of Temperance?" Yes. "Are you in favor of Good Samaritans?" Yes. "Are you in favor of Good Templars?" Yes. "Are you in favor of prohibitory law?" Yes. "Are you in favor of the pledge?" Yes. Combine all the influences, O Christian reformers and philanthropists. Combine them all for the extirpation of this evil.

Thirty women in one of the Western States banded together, and with an especial ordination from God they went forth to the work and shut up all the grog shops of a large village. Thirty women, with their song and with their prayer; and if one thousand or two thousand Christian men and women with an especial ordination from God should go forth feeling the responsibility of their work and discharging their mission, they could in any city shut up all the grog shops.

But I must not dwell on generalities; I must come to specifics. Are you astray? If there is any sermon I dislike it is a sermon on generalities. I want personalities. Are you astray? Have you gone so far you think you cannot get back? Did I say a few moments ago that a man might go to a point in inebriation where he could not stop? Yes, I said it, and I reiterate it; but I want you also to understand that while the man himself, of his own strength, cannot stop, God can stop any man. You have only to lay hold of the strong arm of the Lord God Almighty, He can stop you. Many summers ago I went over to New York one Sabbath evening—our church not yet being open for the autumnal services—I went into a room in the Fourth Ward, New York, where a religious service was being held for reformed drunkards, and I heard a revelation that night that I had never heard before—fifteen or twenty men standing up and giving testimony such as I had never heard given. They not only testified that their hearts had been changed by the grace of God, but that the grace of God had extinguished their thirst. They went on to say that they had reformed at different times before, but immediately fallen, because they were doing the whole work in their own strength: "But as soon as we gave our hearts to God," they said, "and the love of the Lord Jesus Christ has come into our soul, the thirst has all gone. We have no disposition for strong drink."

It was a new revelation to me, and I have proclaimed it again and again in the hearing of those who have far gone astray, and I stand here to-day to tell you that the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ can not only save your soul, but save your body. I look off to-day upon the desolation. Some of you are so far on in this habit, although there may be no outward indications of it—you never have staggered along the street—the vast majority of people do not know that you stimulate; but God knows, and you know; and by human calculation there is not one chance out of five thousand that you will ever be stopped in this life. Beware! It is a hard thing to say, but it is true, and I utter the warning lest I have your blood upon my soul. Beware! As to-day you open the door of your wine closet, let the decanter flash that word upon your soul, "Beware!" As you pour out the beverage let the foam at the top spell out the word, "Beware!" In the great day of God's judgment, when a hundred million drunkards shall come up to get their doom, I want you to testify that this day in love of your soul and in fear of God, I gave you warning in regard to that influence which has already been felt in your home, blowing out some of its lights—premonition of the blackness of darkness forever.

O! if you could only hear Intemperance with drunkards' bones drumming on the top of the wine cask the Dead March of immortal souls, you would go home and kneel down and pray God that rather than your children should ever become the victims of this evil habit, you might carry them out to the cemetery and put them down in the last slumber, waiting for the flowers of spring to come over the grave—sweet prophecies of the resurrection. God hath a balm for such a wound, but what flower of comfort ever grew on the blasted heath of a drunkard's sepulchre?

General Lee and the Volunteers

During the last few weeks the work of mustering out the volunteers who enlisted for service in the war with Spain has steadily progressed, and is now almost concluded. In bidding good-bye to the volunteer organizations who served with the Seventh United States Army Corps, General Lee, commander of that corps, paid them high compliment. He said: "The pages of military history will inscribe the deeds of no troops who won a greater reputation for discipline, drill, and manly discharge of duty, soldierly conduct and cheerful obedience to all orders. The President's assurance, had the war with Spain continued, that the Seventh Corps would have been selected to lead the assault upon the Havana lines, proves that the corps possessed the confidence of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, a confidence shared by his fellow-countrymen. It is gratifying to review the career, and remember the harmony which existed among the forty thousand soldiers who answered the roll-call at Tampa, Jacksonville, Savannah and Cuba. Whether it were the 'volunteers' who afterwards, at various times, broke ranks and resumed the duties of American citizenship, or the 'regulars,' whose standards are still flying, and who are now the advance agents of American progress and civilization—soldiers of the North and South took the sunshine and storm of camp together, and marched side by side under one flag, in one cause, for one country. May health and happiness crown their days, and when their thoughts sometimes wander back to Camps Cuba Libre, Onward and Columbia, may their hearts beat quickly as they remember they once marched under the banners of the Seventh Army Corps."

MRS. THOMPSON'S OLD HOME IN HILLSBORO

"Mother Thompson's" Prayer

Its Answer Led Her to Become the Heroine of a Great Temperance Crusade

IN a beautiful and picturesque old-fashioned home, surrounded by large and well-shaded grounds, in Hillsboro, O., lives Mrs. Eliza Jane Trimble Thompson, better known the world over as "Mother Thompson," the founder of the Temperance Crusade in America, and incidentally of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as this organization was really an outcome of Mother Thompson's Hillsboro Crusade. Although Mrs. Thompson is now, to use her own words, "three years beyond eighty," she carries her age well, and is still comparatively active; she is of slight build, with white curly hair, kind eyes and a low and sweet voice. Of late years she has but seldom appeared in public in the cause of temperance, but she has lost none of her interest in the subject.

"MOTHER THOMPSON"

"The Hillsboro Crusade," said Mrs. Thompson, speaking of the incidents connected with it, "dates back to a lecture given in this place December 23, 1873, by Dr. Lewis, in which he urged the women to go into the saloons and pray. My seventeen-year-old son and my daughter were there, and they came to me on their return home and related the incidents of the evening, how Dr. Lewis told of his own mother and several of her friends uniting in prayer for the liquor sellers of his native town until they gave up their business.

"The lecturer said we might do the same thing in Hillsboro, if we had the faith, and then, turning to the ministers and temperance men upon the platform, he added: 'Suppose I ask the women of this audience to signify their opinion upon the subject?' They all bowed their consent, and fifty or more women stood up in token of approval. When he asked the men how many would stand as 'backers' if the women undertook the work, sixty or seventy arose. They had placed my name on some of the committees. My husband opposed our participation, but after a while he said: 'Children, you know where your mother goes to settle all vexed questions. Instead of family prayers, let her alone to make her decision.' I went to my room, kneeling before God, when I heard a step at the door. Upon opening it, my daughter stood there, and with tearful eyes she handed me her small Bible, open at the 146th Psalm. And my eyes fell upon the words: 'This is the way, walk ye in it.' No longer doubting, I repaired to the church and took my seat near the door. I was unanimously chosen as president or leader, Mrs. Gen. McDowell, vice-president, and Mrs. D. K. Fenner, secretary, in the work that was to follow.

"Appeals were drawn up to druggists, saloon-keepers, and hotel proprietors. The pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. McSorly, after a few moments, said: 'Brethren, let us adjourn and leave this work with God and the women.' As the last man closed the door I walked forward to the minister's table, and called upon Mrs. McDowell to lead in prayer; it seemed as though an angel had brought down 'live coal' from off the altar and touched her lips. Then Mrs. Cowden, the Methodist Episcopal minister's wife, started the hymn, 'Give to the Winds Thy Fears,' and we all joined in singing this hymn, and formed in line, two and two, and proceeded to our sacred mission, trusting in God. As our band reached the street we were singing:

> Far, far above thy thought,
> His counsel shall appear,
> When fully he the work hath wrought,
> That caused thy needless fear.

"On we marched, looking neither to right or left, until we arrived at a drug store on East Main Street. Mrs. Milton Boyd had been appointed to read our appeal. The druggist quickly signed the druggist's pledge, not to sell liquor except on prescription. Two others signed willingly and assured us of their good wishes. A doctor next signed. After visiting the drug stores we delayed action until the 26th of December, when our committee of seventy ladies met and again formed in procession and visited a number of hotels and saloons. Our first saloon prayer meeting was in a noted resort on High Street. The proprietor walked to his accustomed stand behind the bar."

The leader addressed him: "Well! Mr. ——, this must seem to you a strange audience; I suppose you understand the object of our visit?" He showed agitation, and Mrs. Thompson said: "As you look upon some of the faces before you, and observe the marks of sorrow caused by the unholy business that you ply, you will find that it is no wonder why we are here. We have come, however, not to threaten, not even to upbraid, but in the name of our Divine Friend and Saviour, and in his spirit to forgive and to commend you to his pardon, if you will but agree to abandon a business that is so damaging to our hearts and to the peace of our homes." Turning to her comrades, she said: "Let us pray." Instantly all, even the liquor-seller himself, were on their knees. Mrs. Thompson prayed most fervently, and then the ladies joined in, pleading with the saloon-keeper to accept Christ and abandon his sinful calling. Their prayers were not in vain. This incident—one of many—illustrates the character of the work done by this brave band of godly women.

Mrs. Thompson has been for twenty-five years president of the local temperance union, and has attended the National Conventions until the last two years. Since her retirement from active labor in the temperance field, she has devoted her time to literary work, and her latest book, Hillsboro Crusade Sketches and Family Records, has received general recognition.

Christ Betrayed and Arrested

S. S. Lesson for May 14. John 18: 1-14
Golden Text, Isa. 53: 3

OUR Lord had poured out his heart to the disciples (John 13: 16) and he had poured out his heart to the Father (17) in that prayer which reveals to us the secret of those mornings "a great while before day," when he was alone with his Father, and those nights of prayer of which we read from time to time in the Gospels. Having thus settled matters with him that sent him, he was ready to be offered as the great sin-offering, "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." He had accomplished the work which the Father had given him to do by his life, and had proved indisputably that man, with God dwelling in him could, in spite of the weakness of human nature, in spite of the opposition of Satan, perfectly fulfil the will of God. He was "the anointed priest," and no other priest could offer such an offering. "Through his own blood he entered in once for all into the holy place" (Heb. 9: 12). How he knew the Scriptures! The sin-offering, the guilt offering, the passover lamb had an intense signification for him which was impossible to any other child of man. He, "the Word," was indeed embodying the Scriptures in his own person. We see his glory in his deepest shame and suffering, because in it he was carrying out, at any cost, his Father's will.

"When Jesus had spoken these words (John 17), he went forth with his disciples over the brook Kidron, where was a garden, into the which he entered, himself and his disciples." It was Gethsemane (Matt. 26: 36-46). "The steps of a man are ordered by the Lord, and he delighteth in his way" (Ps. 37: 23, R. V.). The Father must have watched over every step which the Son of his love took upon earth! Everything was ripening, and hidden things were coming to the surface. Every step of the Lord hastened the redemption of the world, but it hastened also the treachery of Judas, which was also ripening, and the consummation of the sin of the chief priests and rulers. Judas knew the place. Very often before had our Lord escaped his enemies because his hour had not yet come, but now he had said, "Father, the hour is come" The time for his betrayal was fulfilled, and he sought no more to escape. Judas "having received the band of soldiers and officers from the chief priests and the Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns and torches and weapons." The Lord's arrest was imminent: how would he meet it? "Jesus, therefore, knowing (from the Scripture which he fulfilled) all the things that were coming upon him, went forth and saith unto them, whom seek ye?" "Jesus of Nazareth." "I am." It was the Word of God's truth, and it went home. Not one of these soldiers, trained for war, could stand upon his feet when the Word become flesh, simply asserted himself by pronouncing the name, "I am!" It was the name by which Moses must make him known to the children of Israel (Ex. 3: 14). But they recovered themselves, and again the same question received the same answer. "I told you that I am," he said: if, therefore, ye seek me, let these go their way," that the word might be fulfilled which he spake. Of those which thou hast given me, I lost not one (R. V.). "Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end."

He knew they would forsake him and flee; he had just come from Gethsemane, where even the chosen three had proved that they could not watch with him one hour; there was nothing at all in them to draw out from him this regard at the very moment when, if ever, it seemed as though he needed their succor, and they failed him. But the love of God is not regulated by the same considerations as human love. Human love is like a fire which needs continual fuel to keep it alive, in that which attracts, pleases and gratifies it. The love of God is self-existing: it needs no such fuel. God loves because he is Love, and cannot but love. Where he sets his love he overcomes, as we yield to him, that which in us is distasteful, unattractive and repelling. "Ye have not chosen me," he says, "but I have chosen you, that ye may go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit shall remain, that whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name he should give it you (John 15: 16).

And yet one of these very disciples, just at that very time, acted in a spirit directly contrary to his own, and to his teaching. "Simon Peter therefore, having a sword, drew it, and struck the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. Now the servant's name was Malchus.' And at such an hour the Lamb of God manifested his true character and spoke his last word of authority to his own disciples before he suffered: "Put up the sword into the sheath! the cup which the Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" It was easier to the carnal heart of Peter to defend his Master with the sword, at the risk of his own life, than to bear the reproach of a maid servant. Self rejoices to be heroic, but self has no play in the spirit which endures, and takes everything in meekness from the hand of God. Jesus touched the ear of his enemy and healed it, and thus he saved Peter, not himself, from arrest (Luke 22: 51).

"The cup which the Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" The Word made flesh, had traced out in the Scriptures in the law of Moses, and the prophets and the Psalms "the things concerning himself," that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day," and thus he saw Judas, the chief priests, scribes and Pharisees, with the soldiers and servants who were sent to take him, as simply instruments permitted by his Father to carry out his will. It was his Father's cup, not the cup of the rulers of the Jews which he should drink. And his disciples had so entered into the truth of this that we find the apostles, both Peter and Paul saying the same thing (Acts 2: 23; 4: 27, 28; 13: 27).

And shall we not also recognize the hand of our Father in everything which he permits for us? We also have to fulfil the Scriptures. How much there is written of us and to us. Are we faithful in embodying the Word of God in our lives as our Master was before us? The cup which our Heavenly Father hath given us, shall we not drink it?

"THEN THE OFFICERS TOOK JESUS AND BOUND HIM AND LED HIM AWAY"

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

LIKE the other incidents in John's Gospel, this description of the arrest was written for a definite and instructive object. It is evidently, as we see from the reports of the other Evangelists, not a complete account. John says nothing about the pathetic prayer in the garden, nor about the agony and bloody perspiration, nor the reproach to the sleeping disciples, nor the kiss of the traitor; but he describes the involuntary adoration of the armed band and gives us the name of the High Priest's servant whose ear was cut off, and mentions that it was Peter who did it, both of which details the other Evangelists omit. John also reports the arraignment before Annas which the others do not mention. He doubtless had their Gospels before him when he wrote, and intended his treatise to cover their omissions without repeating what they had written. His purpose in mentioning the fact of the soldiers falling to the ground is in line with his principle of selection all through. He wrote to prove that Jesus was the Son of God, and here he shows the instinctive reverence that overcame even the rough Roman soldiers. He is also anxious to show that Christ's sacrifice was voluntary. He "knew all things which should come upon him." He would drink the cup his Father had given him, and even to the last his concern was for others: "Let these go their way." The remark was characteristic of Christ's whole mission. He would give himself up peaceably if only his people might go unharmed. So in this one act he typified his work, and as Isaiah said, "The chastisement of our peace was upon him."

Over the brook Kedron. It runs on the east side of Jerusalem in the gorge between the city and the Mount of Olives. As Jesus crossed this brook with the full knowledge of the suffering awaiting him, he probably remembered how a thousand years before that same brook had been crossed by his great ancestor when he fled from his traitorous son (II. Samuel 15: 23). Not many years before Christ crossed this little stream, there had been another eventful passage across a river. Cæsar had crossed the Rubicon, a small [illegible] which formed the boundary of Cis-Alpine Gaul and entered Roman territory, thus [illegible] this esteemed in the history of the world that it has passed into a proverb, and to cross the Rubicon is equivalent to saying that a man has taken a step from which he cannot recede. To the great men of that day [illegible] compared with Cæsar's act, yet the Roman Empire, with all its might and glory, has passed away, while the kingdom that Christ established grows from one generation to another and will continue to grow until it fills the whole earth.

Judas knew the place. Christ was aware that he knew it and was also aware of the plot he was concocting, yet he would not avoid it. It is still doubtful what Judas's motive was. It may have been that the greed and love of money, which he had manifested before, had so eaten into his soul that he was at last willing to sell his Master for the sake of the pitiful sum that the priests were willing to pay. A more probable theory is that he was impressed by the enthusiasm manifested at Christ's entry into Jerusalem and thought to precipitate the kingdom. He may have believed that when Christ was seized, he would exercise his miraculous power, and the people coming to his support, he would be delivered and proclaimed King of the Jews. His despair and suicide, when he saw Christ led away to execution, seem to imply that he had some such plan in mind and was appalled when he saw how fatally it miscarried. It is remarkable how often schemes and plots fail to produce the results intended. Henry VIII. worked for years to get a divorce from Catherine, yet after all, in spite of the divorce, Catherine's daughter came to the throne. Napoleon divorced Josephine, so that he might have a son to succeed him. But the man who did succeed him was the grandson of Josephine, and all the pain and shame went for nothing.

That one man should die for the people. It was a cynical, brutal idea, and it shows the character of the man who could advocate it. Caiaphas had no idea of atonement, though his position as high priest rendered him familiar with it. He merely meant that it was better that an innocent man should die than that the nation should be imperiled by Roman anger. There are, however, noble examples of men who have had the same idea, but it was when they offered themselves as sacrifice to save others. Everyone has heard of the pilot who remained steadfast at the rudder of the burning steamboat that he might run it ashore and save the lives of all on board, and remained until he accomplished his purpose at the cost of his own life. The legend of Curtius is familiar. The legend runs that a chasm opened in the Roman forum and which portended evil to the state. The oracles declared that only by throwing into the chasm Rome's richest treasure could it be closed. Whereupon Curtius, declaring that the state had no treasure so precious as a good citizen, jumped into it, and the ground closed over him. When the English king besieged Calais, and the citizens defended themselves so obstinately as to anger him and cause him to condemn them all to be put to the sword, he relented only on condition that seven of the most prominent citizens should come to his camp with ropes around their necks. It seemed like certain death, but seven men volunteered to give their own lives to save their fellow-townsmen. They were ordered to execution, but were pardoned through the intercession of the queen.

Let these go their way. During the mutiny in India in 1857 an English officer named Baird was taken prisoner. He was severely wounded and was very weak. Nevertheless the order was issued to put fetters on him like the others. But a gray-haired prisoner stepped from the crowd and protested against their putting fetters on a man so weak. He even offered to wear Baird's fetters in addition to his own. He was taken at his word, and was doubly fettered.

By SHELDON JACKSON, D.D., LL.D.

III.—Perils of Arctic Travel—Lapps and Deer in a Northern Blizzard—The Homeward Journey

IN the spring of 1894, acting for the Bureau of Education, I had brought to the United States seven Lapp families to take charge of the domestic reindeer that the government had commenced introducing into Alaska from Siberia. These families came under a three years' contract, at the expiration of which they were to be returned to Lapland, if they so desired. The limit having been reached last fall, four families asked to be returned to their homes, which was done, and Mr. William A. Kjellmann, superintendent of the reindeer stations in Alaska, was sent in charge of them to convey them safely back to their native country, and also to procure a number of Lapps to engage in the raising and training of reindeer in Alaska.

He sailed from New York, December 1, 1897, and reached Bosekop, Lapland, on the 23d. While passing through Washington, November 30th, he had a conference with the Commissioner of Education and General Agent of Education in Alaska, at which time he was informed that possibly Congress would make an appropriation for the relief of the miners in the Yukon Valley, and if so, he might be called upon to purchase reindeer and procure drivers for the same. In view of this, he was directed while en route to make such inquiries, that if telegraphed to procure deer, he could do so with but little delay. Upon arriving at Bosekop, he received the cablegram of Dec. 23d from the Secretary of War, directing him to purchase 500 reindeer. On the morning of December 25th before leaving New York, according to instructions from the Secretary of War, I cabled him to hire all the help he needed to expedite matters and to send out in different directions. Consequently borrowing one thousand kroners on December 29th, he hired Mr. Per Rist, and sent him to Kautokeino, 112 miles over the mountains, and on the 31st, Mr. Samuel Kemi (both Lapps returned from Alaska), who were sent to Enare, Finland, 265 miles distant, and Mr. Carl Suhr to Sjus Javre, 101 miles, to bargain for trained reindeer, sleds and harness.

Upon arriving at Trondhjem, Jan. 8th, I arranged that the moss purchased by Mr. Kjellmann should be shipped to Mr. Tonsette, commission merchant at Trondhjem. I have already referred to the efforts made in London to forward money to Mr. Kjellmann, and that it was not until I reached Trondhjem, January 8th, that I succeeded. Receiving this money on the morning of January 9th, Mr. Kjellmann left the same forenoon with reindeer team for Kautokeino. There he found his lieutenant waiting for him with the welcome news that the whole number of reindeer, sleds and harness were secured. On the 12th Mr. Kjellmann signed contracts with twenty-three Laplanders as drivers, and on the 13th started on his return to Bosekop to report to me progress and secure additional funds for further payments. Encountering a blizzard in crossing the mountains and losing his way, he did not reach Bosekop until the 16th. Securing from me additional funds, on the 18th Mr. M. Kjeldsberg and Mr. Per Rist were sent to Maci and Kautokeino to complete payments and bring the reindeer, sleds and harness, together with the drivers and their families to Bosekop for shipment. On the 19th Mr. Kjellmann left for Sjus Javre to do the same thing for that section. On the 21st Mr. Carl Suhr was despatched from Sjus Javre to Bautajok, 162 miles, and Mr. Samuel Kemi to Enare to assemble and move to Bosekop the reindeer, drivers, and so forth, procured at those places.

Having started his lieutenants, Mr. Kjellmann himself left Sjus Javre on the 21st for Karasjok, where on the 24th he contracted with the drivers and paid for the reindeer which had been secured by Mr. A. Paulsen. Final settlements being completed, Mr. Kjellmann started on the 25th to return to the coast, reaching Bosekop on the 28th in the midst of a furious storm, the most severe of the winter. That storm had been raging almost without cessation for three weeks, piling the snow in great banks along the fences, filling lanes even full above the fence tops, and obliterating all evidences of roads or tracks in the open country, had been gradually increasing in severity until the 26th, 27th and 28th of January it had turned into a blizzard, culminating on the 28th in the worst day of the season. The hotel at Bosekop, a strong log building with a substantial stone foundation, in a sheltered spot, trembled under the furious blasts of wind and snow. Although the window in my bedroom had double sash and all joints were packed with cotton, over which was pasted heavy paper, the landlord insisted on nailing heavy woolen blankets over the window and moving the bedstead away from the walls into the centre of the room.

At midday on the 28th, houses a block away could not be seen through the driving snow. All traffic was suspended in the streets, and yet on the mountains, where the cold was much greater and the wind swept with the force of a hurricane, were four herds of reindeer and between one and two hundred men, women and children in open sleds facing the blizzard as, on different roads and widely separated sections, they were centering into Bosekop. Anxious lest they should be detained and perhaps some of the children perish, meeting the Mayor (Landsman) of the village, I inquired what were the prospects of their getting through. Shaking his head, he replied that nothing could face that storm for any length of time and live. And I doubt whether any other race than the Lapp, that was cradled in the snow and inured from childhood to hardship, could have done so, or any other animal than the reindeer have brought them safely over the storm-swept and trackless mountains.

About noon, going to a window and with a knife scraping off the frost in order to get sight of a thermometer hanging outside, I saw faintly through the whirling snow a solitary reindeer coming up the street, and soon after could make out a sled with a man encased in ice and snow. It was Mr. Kjellmann, his great fur coat covered with snow and his face and whiskers encased in a mask of ice.

Towards evening a Lapp arrived, announcing that Mr. Mathias Kira, with a band of ninety deer, had arrived from Maci, and gone into camp in the mountains back of the village. And on the afternoon of January 31st, we were cheered by the safe arrival of the other three bands.

THE CITY OF HAMMERFEST

A GROUP OF YOUNG NATIVES OF LAPLAND

Driving out with reindeer teams, seven miles to the crossing of Alten River, we met Mr. Carl Suhr and Mr. Samuel Kemi with four men and 114 head of deer from Bautajok, 165 miles distant. They were sent into camp on the east side of Alten River. Returning to Bosekop, we were met by a messenger announcing that Mr. M. Kjeldsberg and Mr. Per Rist from Kautokeino, with 44 Lapps and 252 head of deer had arrived and gone into camp.

While we were rejoicing in their safe arrival, another messenger came with the news that Mr. A. Paulsen, with 29 Lapps and 90 deer from Karasjok, had also arrived and gone into camp outside of the village. The three parties starting from places a hundred miles apart, and journeying by different routes, had reached the rendezvous within a few hours of one another.

On February 1st, the little village of Bosekop awoke from its Arctic night to unusual stir and activity as the Lapps and reindeer came pouring in long lines over the hill into the village, filling up Market Square. The hundreds of Lapps in their bright colored picturesque national dress; those that were going away and those that had come to see them off—greeting old friends and meeting new ones, the unpacking of sleds and preparations for embarkation all made a picture never to be forgotten. All was bustle and excitement. By night everything was ready for the arrival of the steamship, and the first part of the expedition, the purchase of reindeer, sleds, and harness, together with the securing of competent drivers, was an accomplished success. The greatness and extent of this success is heightened by the environment.

At the hotel with myself were two Norwegian judges en route by reindeer transportation to hold court at Kautokeino, 112 miles inland; they were waiting for better weather. On the 21st they had their baggage packed and their reindeer teams and sleds before the door ready to start, but as the storm was still raging they did not finally get away until Saturday afternoon.

In the meantime Lieut. D. B. Devore had chartered the transport steamer Manitoban, of the Allan Line, Glasgow. Sailing from Greenock, Scotland, January 16th, she arrived at Trondhjem, January 23d, for the purpose of loading up the moss, which had been gathered there for the use of the reindeer herd. A severe storm detained the vessel at Trondhjem until the 29th, when she sailed, reaching Bosekop on February 2d. Learning that the steamship had arrived, I went on board and arrangements were quickly consummated for loading the Lapland reindeer.

At 4 A. M., on Friday, February 4th, the anchor was hoisted, and we were off for New York. We had on board 539 reindeer, at an average of $10 each; 418 sleds at $3.60 each; 511 sets of harness at $2.50 each. There were also on board 43 men, 16 women and 19 children, Lapps; 15 men, 3 women and 7 children, Norwegians, and 10 men, Finns, making 78 Lapps, 25 Norwegians and 10 Finns, or 113 emigrants. Of the women 16 were married, 6 of them having been recently married. Among the Lapp men was a Mr. Samuel Johannesen Balto, who accompanied Nansen in his famous trip across Greenland, for which he received a silver medal from Oscar II., King of Sweden and Norway. There was also in the company Johan Petter Stalogargo, a Finn who has the distinction of being the northernmost mail-carrier in the world, having for eight years carried the mail on his back to North Cape, Norway, traveling on skees (Norwegian snowshoes). Among the 68 men are 13 who have had experience in carrying the mail with reindeer teams across the mountains and canons and plains of Arctic Lapland.

The reindeer proved to be good sea-travelers, learning to balance themselves with the rolling of the ship, and to rest by lying down the same as if they had been on their native pasture. The loss of one deer by death out of 539, was a very small thing; that death, however, was not due to the sea voyage, but to injuries received in fighting The same was liable to occur if they had been running at large on land. Whenever, during the journey, we encountered a snow-storm, the snow was carefully gathered from the deck by the Lapps in pails, and carried to the pens for the use of the reindeer and they ate it with avidity. The men were organized into gangs, with overseers, for the feeding and care of the deer upon the trip.

On February 27th, our eyes were gladdened with the welcome sight of land off New England, and that evening we dropped anchor inside of Sandy Hook.

On the afternoon of March 1st, in two sections, we started across the continent by way of the Pennsylvania, Wisconsin Central and Great Northern Railways to Seattle.

Post-Mortem Praise

WHAT eulogiums in Congress and Legislature and church courts of men who were pursued all their days! The very orators whose tongues were drawn swords turned into the service of apotheosis. All around us are people blamed for what they cannot help. There is something in their health, or something in their worldly circumstances, or something in their domestic condition, that disqualifies and disables them. Blamed for idleness, when they have not the strength to work. Blamed for parsimony, when their finances are cramped. Blamed for ill-temper, when their nerves have given out. Blamed for misanthropy, when they have had enough to disgust them forever with the human race. After we have criticized, and blamed, and exhausted the vocabulary of abuse, death steps in and makes revelation of the wrong we have done, when it is too late for reparation. The rough nails driven into the coffin by denunciation while he lives, are silver-headed with panegyric now that he is dead. Let us learn to do our duty with respect to God's approval, rather than with respect to what the world may say. Meanwhile, we had better temper our tirades until we know all. There are many to-day who would pay largely to get back the words yesterday uttered. But words fly not in circles, coming back to the lips that uttered them, but in a straight line, and no gunner ever had fowling-piece that could shoot them on the wing. As we get older, let us get more lenient. When we hear things adverse to any one, let us always remember there is another side. How often we are compelled to change our opinions of men and things. There frequently comes a great outburst of feeling against public men, and after a vast expenditure of reprehension we hear explanations satisfactory to all. We let the dogs out of the kennel for a chase that ought never to be made. After a while our turn comes to be pursued, and then we learn by bitter experience how we may be misrepresented and belied. We need to put ourselves into more frequent association with disposition mild and gentle and which think no evil. Charity, beautiful grace, and rare grace of apostolic and Christ-like commendation—we all need more of it in our speech and lives. Above all, by constant communion with Christ, we will absorb something of that gentleness and love which were the characteristics of his life. No one can be much with him without catching something of his spirit. On the contrary, it is impossible to be much with the hypercritical and acerb without catching their sin. Avoid those who would rather believe evil of others than good. Keep out of the path of nettles and walk in the garden of the Lord.

Evil Speaking

AT times the air is full of defamation. Waste no time in hearing gossips slander others. As soon as she unties the strings of her hat and lies back to have a good talk, excuse yourself and get out into the fresh air, and look up at the stars and think of God. In the first year of my ministry I heard that which has impressed me until this day. In central New York I heard in a parlor a minister of religion, in conversation, most vividly condemn the sin of a minister of the Gospel, saying that he (the minister speaking) could never be tempted to such a crime. It was right that he should condemn the sin, but I did not like the self-righteous declaration that he never could have been tempted that way. Before two years passed that minister of religion was tried for the same crime and condemned—the jury out only a few minutes, so evident was his guilt. The condemned man died of a broken heart, and his body went out to Greenwood, and his soul to that God who, I hope, was more merciful to him than he had been to his fallen brother. James 11:13—"He shall have judgment without mercy who hath shown no mercy." Look out for that! I was not quite certain where that passage in Scripture was to be found, so I picked up my Concordance and found the verse and discovered how many times the word "mercy" is recorded in the Bible. And how many times do you suppose that one word occurs—that princely, beautiful word "Mercy"? Two hundred and eighty-five times it either appears alone or is a part of some other word.

The Death of a Volunteer Fireman

MR. HAMILTON S. WHITE, of Syracuse, N. Y., a relative of Hon. Andrew D. White, came to his death by exposure at a fire in Syracuse, recently. For a generation he has been known in that city, and in distant parts of the country for his unpaid enthusiasm in the study and practical treatment of city fires. Wealthy, honored, a leader of many business enterprises, he once equipped an engine-house, and paid the expense of running it twelve years, and then turned it over to the city. At the time of his death, which occurred from breathing poisonous gases, he was President of the Fire Department, and was recognized as at liberty to take part in battling all conflagrations.

His foible, if we should call it so—was it not just as much his heroism, as that of the leader of a forlorn hope in battle?—at last occasioned his death. John Howard is regarded the prince of philanthropists because his travels and criticisms changed the whole character of prisons. Is there a philanthropy in making a study and an indefatigable battle with such calamities as desolate whole city squares: yes, sometimes sweep a whole city's site? Hamilton S. White, certainly deserves in Syracuse, in some public square, an emblematic monument. Few men can do what he did. His work is not done till his name shall be forgotten. That ought never to be.

One of Our New Possessions

PORTO RICO we for the present shall be likely to hold as our own. We obtained almost bloodless possession of her. Her population is largely white. She has a coast line of three hundred and sixty miles; being [illegible] with an area of some thirty-six to forty thousand square miles. Nine-tenths of her surface is mountainous. The highest eminences do not exceed four thousand feet; the ordinary mountains being less than two thousand. These mountain areas are covered with a deep red, arenaceous clay soil, to which vegetation clings with great tenacity. This soil is one of the marked features of the island. Owing to it, the mountains are susceptible of cultivation to their very summits. Many of the most productive crops of coffee are grown upon steep declivities, which would never be cultivated even by the daring American farmer. Over cultivation has temporarily ruined considerable portions of the island, which can be restored only by the use of fertilizers or forestization. Here are problems for the agricultural chemist as well as the farmer. The equable climate, the high elevation, the beautiful scenery, must make Porto Rico attractive to the tourist; must make it a delightful resort for the half-invalids of the United States. It is said that yellow fever almost never scourges Porto Rico. The only exception is in the barracks of Spanish soldiers and in the ill-cared-for prisons. Indeed, on the whole, as a writer in Harper's Weekly has lately said: "Porto Rico has a most salubrious climate and engenders the smallest number of physical ailments among the unacclimated of all the regions of the Western Hemisphere within the torrid zone. In any country where vegetation grows rank and luxuriant, where the suns are hot and the rainfalls frequent, disease is necessarily more prevalent; but Porto Rico has been remarkably free from the scourges which afflict the people of the adjacent islands; moreover, it should be remembered, in summing up the situation, that this fair condition exists on an island where the population, is, and has been for centuries, more dense than that of almost any other purely agricultural section of the New World."

IMPORTANT NOTICE

While only a small percentage of the mail is lost or rifled, still, people who send cash run that risk, and, when safer modes of remittance are equally convenient, they should certainly be utilized.

"M. D. WHEELER,
"[illegible]"

During the last three or four months there have been many instances in which letters, purporting to have contained cash, when received at this office proved to be "without inclosure."

We trust our subscribers will co-operate with us in our efforts to avoid losses in the mails by sending their remittances by means of non-negotiable paper, such as is described above. If you send money by post office order, or express order, or draft drawn to the order of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, then, should it by accident be lost or should it be stolen, it can be duplicated with little or no expense to you. Surely the security thus obtained is worth the little additional effort the employment of safe means of remittance may involve?

One of the last beneficencies of the late Baroness de Hirsch was an effort to ameliorate the lot of many Jews in Algeria, who were thrown out of employment by the anti-Semitic agitation. The Baroness' gift of two million francs will be used to open manufactories in which the Jews dismissed from Christian firms may find employment.

Mr. D. L. Moody has received a monster petition from Australia to hold revival meetings in that land. It is signed by over sixteen thousand persons. An urgent request has also come from Scotland for a series of meetings. A Bible Institute similar to that in Chicago has been established in Glasgow, at Mr. Moody's suggestion.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the International Missionary Union will be held at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 14-21, 1899. All who are interested in this very worthy project may send their contributions to Gen. Howard, No. 10 East Twenty-third Street, New York, and all such gifts will be acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

To Pacify Samoa

NONE too soon has the commission representing the United States, Germany and England started for Samoa. The situation there grows daily more critical, and the representatives of the three powers now in the islands seem to be drifting into more decided antagonism. One of the latest developments has involved the death of one British and two American officers and two sailors of each nationality. They were part of an expedition, consisting of 214 men, which marched against Mataafa's supporters and was attacked by an ambush on a plantation belonging to a German resident. The expedition was fired on from the rear and both flanks, and the Samoan members of it fled. The Americans and English stood their ground until a shell from one of the vessels in the harbor dropped in the plantation and scared their assailants away. They returned, however, to mutilate the seven dead bodies according to the barbarous Samoan custom. It would appear that there was a suspicion of complicity on the part of the manager of the plantation, for he has been arrested and imprisoned on board a British warship. The accounts of the troubles are conflicting. The Germans charge the British and Americans with arming the followers of Mataafa and encouraging them to fight. On the surface, it would appear that the American and British attitude is in accord with the treaty of Berlin, which regulated the tri-partite government of the islands. It provided that if any dispute arose about the succession to the throne, it should be decided by the Chief Justice of the islands. It is not disputed that Chief Justice Chambers, who is an American, decided in favor of Tanus. So that, legally, Tanus is the king of Samoa. Why the Germans favor his rival, Mataafa, is not clear. It is the more surprising because it was at the request of the German government that he was excluded from the throne. Bismarck, who conducted the negotiations, stipulated before the treaty was signed, that Mataafa, who had barbarously mutilated German sailors, should in no case be allowed to reign. The German consul, however, appears to think that the prohibition was not intended to be permanent, for he has enthusiastically championed his cause. As there is no probability of the three consuls coming to an agreement, and as their opposition encourages the hostility of the rival claimants to the throne, the three powers have acted wisely in sending out a commission vested with full power to settle the dispute. It consists of Baron Von Sternberg, representing Germany; Mr. Bartlett Tripp of South Dakota, formerly minister to Austria, representing our Government, and Mr. C. N. E. Eliot, of the British Embassy at Washington, representing England. It is hoped that these three commissioners, going to Samoa unpledged and unbiased, will act harmoniously, and so put an end to the unhappy dissension. We trust that in deciding the questions at issue the commissioners will not be concerned alone with the commercial interests involved, but will take into account the welfare and best interests of the Samoan people, which ought to be the chief object to be attained. There is little doubt that the majority of the Samoans would prefer the rule of Mataafa, who belongs to the old order of rulers, and has proved that he has not learned better ways by his banishment: but the commission will probably find that there is more hope of the development of the people under the young king Tanus, who has learned the ways of civilization. It is as it was in the days of the Preacher:

Better is a poor and a wise child than an old and foolish king who will no more be admonished, for out of prison he cometh to reign, and he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor (Eccles. 4: 14).

SAMOAN WARRIORS MARCHING THROUGH THE MAIN STREET OF APIA

Which is the Faster Foot

A writer in a popular journal calls attention to a curious fact which though known to scientific men has escaped general observation. He asks each of his readers to find out which is his faster foot. It is not a silly question, nor one with a catch in it, but a demonstrable fact that one foot is in nearly every case more active than the other. He says: "If you will take any pavement that is clear of other pedestrians, so that there shall be no interference and walk briskly in the centre, you will find that before you have gone a hundred yards you will have veered very much to one side. You must not make any conscious effort, of course, to keep to the centre or you may do it, but if you will think of something and endeavor to walk naturally, it is a hundred to one you cannot keep a straight line. The explanation of this lies in the peculiarity of one foot to walk faster than the other. Or, to be more correct, perhaps it should be said that one leg takes a longer stride than the other,and this, combined with the quicker movement causes one to walk more to one side than the other. It is well known, for instance, that if one is lost in the woods the tendency is to walk in a circle and eventually to return to about the starting point. This demonstrates the fact, also, that one foot walks faster than the other." Unhappily there is the same tendency to deviate from the straight course in the moral and spiritual walk. Every one has need to heed the warning Solomon gave to his son:

Ponder the path of thy feet and let all thy ways be established. Turn not to the right hand nor to the left; remove thy foot from evil (Prov. 4: 26).

Suspected Robbers

An arrest made in New York a few days ago is believed to be one of great importance. A man called on a firm of jewelers and purchased a pair of diamond ear-rings, presenting in payment a draft issued by a bank at Waverly, N. Y. He said that the jewelers would probably like to satisfy themselves that the draft was genuine, so he would leave it and call later for the ear-rings and the change. The jewelers telephoned to the bank and learned that the draft was genuine, but that it had been stolen in transmission by mail. It was in one of a number of letters in a registered mail pouch which was stolen from the mail-car at Buffalo, N. Y., recently. The purchaser of the ear-rings and a man who was in his company when he returned, as he had promised, were arrested. On being searched, a check was found upon one of them for a trunk in a railroad baggage-room. This was opened, and in it was found the uniform of a mail clerk with a badge bearing the initials R. M. S. (Railroad Mail Service). The post-office detectives say that this explains the mystery of the robbery, and of others of a similar character, which have taken place at various times and places. A careful watch has been kept against thieves, but suspicion would not be aroused against a man attired in the garb of an employee of the post office, who apparently understood his business. No ordinary person could get access to the pouch, but it would be easy for a man wearing the uniform of an employee of the post-office to do so. Unhappily the Church of Christ suffers in a similar way. The greatest harm it suffers comes not from avowed enemies, but from those who wear the garb of religion. There is still need to heed our Lord's warning:

Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves (Matt. 7:15).

Heroic Convicts

A remarkable scene was witnessed at the penitentiary on Blackwell's Island, New York, a few days ago. It was that of convicts acting as life-savers. A fire had been discovered in one of the upper floors of the old building, which is occupied by the sick patients and the cooking department. There were eighteen patients in the infirmary on the fourth floor, most of them too sick and weak to move from their beds. The warden invited volunteers from among the prisoners at hand, and sixty men offered themselves for service. They were organized in three gangs, and while two gangs fought the fire, one gang went to the infirmary to carry down the patients. The elevator was useless, as the flames had turned the shaft into a roaring chimney. The sick persons had to be carried down three flights of stairs. It was a work of no little difficulty and danger, but the convicts never flinched. They brought every one safely down, and then, while the fire was raging fiercely, they went up again at the risk of their lives and searched the attic floor to see if there was any person there who had been overlooked. Meantime, the other convicts were aiding the firemen in saving the remainder of the buildings. The courage and devotion the convicts displayed, won the admiration of all who witnessed the scene. It is singular that men capable of such heroism should be under punishment for crime. It shows what a mixture of good and evil there is in human nature. What a pity it is that such men cannot be induced to apply the remedy that Paul found efficacious against that evil:

I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind and bringing me into captivity (Rom. 7: 23).

A Belated Vindication

The Legislature of Massachusetts has received a petition, presented by Representative Davis, and signed by many influential ministers and laymen, praying for the reversal of the sentence of banishment, passed on Roger Williams two hundred and sixty-four years ago. The petition pleads that "Whereas, Roger Williams's doctrine of religious liberty, for advocating which he was banished, has become the fundamental sentiment of Christendom. Be it resolved, we petition the honorable Legislature at your earliest convenience to pass an act revoking said sentence of banishment, and your petitioners will ever pray God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts." It does not signify whether the Legislature does or does not comply with the request. Roger Williams has long been beyond the power of men to do him good or evil. What is more to be desired is that men may learn from the mistakes of the past to mend their ways and to cease to persecute those who differ from and with them. Even in Christ's time there was the same need, as he told the rulers of his people:

Ye build the tombs of the prophets and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous and say, If we had been in the days of our fathers we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets (Matthew 23: 29, 30).

Heroic Treatment

A reporter of a Missouri journal visiting a hospital at Sedalia, heard a story from one of the surgeons which shows how important it is to trust a doctor rather than sensation. It was the case of a brakeman who in entering a car which had been laden with bananas touched a strange creature which was clinging to the side of the car. It looked like a large spider, and as he touched it the creature bit one of the fingers of his hand. He knocked the creature down and set his foot upon it, and then went about his work. Soon afterwards the bitten finger began to swell, and he poulticed it, but as it grew worse he went to the hospital. The doctor lanced it, and after examining the discharge, advised the man to have his hand amputated. The brakeman laughed at him and refused. It seemed so unnecessary for him to give up his hand because of a little bite on his finger. But as it grew worse, he consented to have his finger cut off. The surgeon who performed the operation told him he had better have the entire hand amputated, but he would not consent. Later he was scared by the progress of the swelling and the intense pain, and asked to have the hand cut off. But it was too late then, and the surgeons told him that he had better lose his arm. To this, however, he would not agree, and the hand was amputated. Still the pain continued, and then the brakeman placed himself in the doctor's hands and bade him do as he thought best. The surgeon amputated the arm at the shoulder, and the man, after being four months in the hospital, left feeling thankful that his life was saved. Christ intimated that there were cases of moral and spiritual poison of a like character, in which heroic treatment was necessary, and associations dear as a right hand or a right eye must be given up to save the soul.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell (Matt. 5: 30).

TRUANTS AND PARENTS AWAITING EXAMINATION

"FIXING" A BOY'S HEIGHT TO STOP LYING

A TRUANT ON TRIAL

IN a great cosmopolitan city, with its teeming population, one of the most important problems is that which relates to the education of the young. New York's schools are in many respects a model to those of other large cities throughout the Union. Improved methods have made studies more attractive, and the school-room is no longer what it was a generation ago—a place to be dreaded by children who are neither of a studious nor industrious turn of mind. Yet every public school in the metropolis has had its own experience with truants—little lads who, through a natural bent for mischief and a disinclination to study, have persistently absented themselves from school. So numerous did the truants become, and so great a hindrance to class work and an annoyance to teachers were they that it was at last decided by the Metropolitan School Board to adopt a new system of punishment which should act as a check on this growing evil. Accordingly, two years ago, the New York Truant School was opened at No. 215 East Twenty-first Street. It is a four-story brick building, containing laundry, kitchen, play-room, wash-room, offices, dining-room, two school-rooms, a number of dormitories, a hospital and disinfecting-room. The institution is under the control of Mrs. M. E. R. Alger, Supervisor, with a small corps of assistants, including three teachers, who are appointed by the Board of Education. The provisions of the Compulsory Education Act are enforced in New York through the efforts of twenty Attendance Officers, who investigate every case of truancy. Since the beginning of the last school term (October 1, 1898) 900 children have been saved from truancy and the aimless life of the streets by these means. The Attendance Officer, having investigated a case, brings the delinquent to the office of the Truant School, and the parent or legal guardian is summoned to attend and make explanation as to the cause of the continued staying away from school. The hearing is private. Should the parent or guardian refuse, he or she is summoned before a magistrate. Should the hearing be satisfactory, and if the truant make promise of amendment, he is paroled and receives a card, which must be signed daily by the parent or guardian and which contains the record of school attendance and conduct. He must report at stated intervals at the Truant School for a certain time. If, on the other hand, he prove incorrigible, he is committed, either with the [illegible] to the Truant School, where he must remain for the balance of the school year. Truants are also committed to the New York Juvenile Asylum, the House of Refuge, and the Catholic Protectory.

All are dressed in plain uniforms; they [illegible] other, and are permitted only to speak to the teachers. The little prisoners get up at 6 A.M., breakfast at 7, help a little at washing dishes and similar work, then study lessons and go through certain manual training exercises from 9 A.M. to 4.30 P.M., with an interval [illegible] and the open air. Supper is served at 5 o'clock, after which comes more dish-washing; at 6.45 the truants assemble for military drill, and at 7.45 they listen to a short talk by the drill-master. At 8 all retire to the dormitories, and an hour later lights are out and the truants are in dreamland, forgetting schools and laws and stern magistrates in the sweet oblivion of sleep.

Mrs. Alger, Supervisor of the Truant School, states that since the beginning of the present term, about 415 children have been admitted and released, of whom at least 400 have been thoroughly cured of the truant habit, and are now model, well-behaved boys. For several of the older lads, who have reached the limit of the school age and wanted to work, suitable employment was secured. In addition to the truants committed to her care, about 700 have been paroled by card on pledge of regular attendance at public school. The parents' pledge reads as follows:

I hereby acknowledge the charge of non-attendance as brought against my child in the statement of the Attendance Officer, and promise to require his regular attendance at School No.—— for the remainder of the current year. I therefore pray that this case be dismissed or that action be suspended for this violation of the law (Signed) ..... Parent.

Attempted escapes from the Truant School are rare, and still more rarely are they successful. The delinquent knows that to try to escape would bring him into still greater trouble, in the event of recapture. Last year of those paroled on card, nearly all honorably kept their pledge, only eight having been committed for breach of parole. Of the total number committed, only nine were so utterly incorrigible as to necessitate their detention until the close of the school year.

It is proposed to establish a more commodious Truant School, the present accommodations being altogether too small, in which event the present building will be utilized as a Truant House of Detention. There is no arrangement for the care of incorrigible girls, but the probabilities are that a school for their commitment will also be opened.

Our photographer in the illustrations on these two pages has given us glimpses of life at the Truant School which may carry a salutary and helpful lesson to many homes where education is undervalued and the opportunities of childhood are neglected. The little absentee who suddenly finds himself in the grasp of the truant officer, doubtless experiences a shock as startling in its way as that of the older offender who is "rounded up" by justice. He looks forward with dread to what is to follow. Another photograph shows a party of truants and their parents awaiting a hearing in the ante-room of the Supervisor's office, while still another represents an examination of the parents and the offender. Class-room work, the fire-drill, and calesthenics are also shown. Two novel punishments are the solitary recess or cupboard for repeated misbehavior, and "fixing a boy's tongue," to cure him of lying, both of which have proved effective in most cases. The "fixing," it need hardly be explained, is harmless, consisting of the application of a pinch of quinine, which leaves a bitter taste in the boy's mouth that he is not likely to forget, when he next feels the temptation to utter a lie.

THE PADDED CUPBOARD

ARRESTING A TRUANT

A LITTLE RECALCITRANT

Unquestionably the moral effect of the Truant School is an excellent one. Children of wayward and idle disposition, or those who have been led away by evil associates of the "street Arab" order, are there taught the value of obedience to law and respect for their teachers; and the compulsory studies, together with the temporary deprivation of freedom, seldom fail to convince them of the folly and wickedness of their previous misconduct. A kindly Christian spirit pervades the institution and its management, and the boy usually leaves with the conviction that he has passed through a wholesome, if rigid, discipline. It is an experience which is calculated to awaken his better nature, stimulate his energies and influence his whole after-life. Thousands of boys in future years will recall with gratitude the Truant School and its kindly mistress, who set their feet firmly on the path of instruction.

Prayer in the Home

Its Practical Helpfulness — The Story of One Woman's Prayerful Life

"I PRAY," said an aged mother in Israel, "that I may win my home eternal in the heavens, and that I may be worthy of it." Her meek eyes would have opened in wide wonder if some one had told her, "By your prayers you have made an earthly home almost like heaven." Yet this was what many said of that house which was a place of peace and of spiritual refreshment and inspiration to all who came within it. As far as worldly goods went, it was a very humble home; yet rich neighbors were glad to visit there, and find a help and comfort of which their palatial dwellings, rich with furnishings of silk and velvet, silver and gold, were sometimes bare.

"Granny," as the village children called her, had known many sorrows; she had borne them beautifully. In her girlhood, when death had claimed the father and mother to whom she clung, and the brother and sister whom she loved, she had carried her troubles to God and left them there: when the grim reaper took her first-born, she had again laid her grief before the great burden-bearer, and had come forth from her closet ready to minister to bereaved ones, wise to utter just the words that would heal. Thus, those whom death visited came to her. People who suddenly lost their riches, came, for they knew that poverty had been, with her, a means of grace. Dwellers in palaces where discord reigned sought to discover the secret of her peaceful abode. Her wedded life had not been a path of roses, as everyone knew, but she had trodden it almost as if it were; and at last, by prayer and patience, had made it nearer what she wished. So troubled young wives found her a safe, sympathetic, helpful counselor. The son, whose opportunity she had labored and sacrificed to secure, was led away by evil associates at college. Her prayer proved stronger than his temptations; he was reclaimed, and made her proud and glad by his labors as a minister of Christ. With troubled friends she prayed—to one and all she said: "All the sorrows I ever had I just laid on the Lord, and he carried them. When I haven't known what to do, I just talked it over with God; and then I'd do all my little duties as they came to hand the best I could, and try to keep cheerful and trust."

One of her children said: "I've never heard my mother speak a cross word. I've seen her cheeks flush when she was tired, but she'd go off by herself a little while and come back presently with a peace not of earth on her face. When we vexed her with childish peccadillos, when we tortured her with fearful trials in our maturity, it was the same thing. We're trying to build our homes the same way: by praying, and then by doing the little duties that come to hand the best we can, while we trust God for his part."

Not Needed Ones

It must be a sad wail that goes up from the heart when this feeling enters the breast, says Mrs. J. H. O'Bryan. If in the home—the dearest spot on earth—there dwells a soul who feels that it is not needed, extend your helpful sympathy to that one. The sick and the aged ones need reassurance on this point. Make them feel by words and smiles and actions that there is a place for them yet; a work for them to do. The aged and the invalid can be patient and loving and cheerful—although the last may cost a struggle. And what is more precious in any home than patience, love and cheerfulness? Their price is above rubies.

Southern Woods and Gardens

A letter which an old friend and long-time reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD writes from Inman Park, Atlanta, Ga., gives an idea of how very pretty things were looking down there on April 20, when the letter was written: "Whenever possible, my little daughter, Mary, and I are out walking and riding. We drive way out in the country; the woods are lovely now; sweet with the fragrance of wild honeysuckle, gay with red, white, blue and purple wildflowers, restful in their leafy greenness; and so musical with bird songs. Some days we take a lunch with us, a nice book to read, or the latest issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and have a real little picnic. My roses are putting up from the roots. I feared they were all dead—killed by the hard winter. My garden is backward, but looks well. We have our first dish of spring greens to-day. It was so cold that we have very few little chickens. We have two pretty little calves, and Bossy and Dimple are giving us milk and butter in abundance. The colt is quite clever, and is taking kindly to education; if he can't talk, he can ask Mary for a lump of sugar; and when he wants water, he lets his requests be known. You should see the new strawberry bed, and our fine row of blackberry bushes. Berries, canteloupes, watermelons and grapes help out our own table every year, and carry refreshment to some sick and poor folks; so we hope none of our vines and bushes will fail us.

A Strange Doll

The following incident related in a New York daily, while very sad must bring a sense of thankfulness to many of our readers, through whose instrumentality so many children of the slums have found happy play in green lanes and flowery fields; and in the tender care and Christian environments of our Children's Home, where we hope that very many will be cared for this summer.

I was [illegible] me and a fine, driving rain, when my attention was attracted by a little girl about [illegible] girl, about five or six [illegible] ly dressed and quite unprotected from the rain, so far as an umbrella went. I hurr[illegible] thinking about how wet and cold and miserable the child must be and reiterating in my mind a determination to which I have often come, not to go home by that ferry, but to cross the bridge for the express purpose of escaping the sight of the children down there. When I came quite up to the child she turned suddenly and faced me. She looked up with the most engaging smile and said, quite simply but pleasantly: "My dolly's as'eep." I looked down and discovered that she was nursing in her little arms a whiskey bottle, quart size and unadorned save for a white label discolored by the rain. For days and nights the picture of that child with a whiskey bottle for a doll troubled my waking and sleeping hours.

Children carrying beer-cans between saloons and homes is a common sight in Cherry, and other streets. God speed the day when there will be no saloons.

Singers Help Song-Birds

A WOMAN'S club has again come to the help of the birds, and our feathered friends of field and forest might pipe their gratitude in tuneful numbers if they knew. The Women's Philharmonic Society of New York, recently passed resolutions discouraging the wearing of plumage by women, and pledging their moral support and active influence to the Audubon Society and its President, Morris K. Jessup. They also applauded "the great merchant and princely lover of fine arts, Marshall Field, of Chicago, for having given up more than a year ago the sale over his counters of millinery ornaments manufactured from slaughtered birds; and commend his example to the department stores throughout the country as one of the most potent means of stopping the traffic in question." They ask all "musical and humane women" to memorialize Congress and Legislatures on the subject of legal protection for feathered folk. The preamble urges that the annual slaughter of twenty-five million of insect-eating birds "upsets the balance of nature as arranged by our Divine Creator," and exposes crops to destruction and causes extermination of valuable and beautiful species. The preamble prettily says "for their gift of song, birds should be especially dear to all musical women."

A Nice Doggie

A gentleman signing "Bow wow," in a recent publication, tells of many clever things which his Newfoundland Lion, learned to do. Lion always got his master's slippers out of the slipper-case and brought them to him when he came home at night. If he made a prolonged absence from home, Lion would take note of whether the evening meal was set for one or two. If set for two the intelligent animal knew that master was coming, and the gentleman would find Lion in the hall waiting, with slippers in charge. He knew when his master was going away, for the gentleman would make Lion understand that particular care must be taken of his wife during his absence. Accordingly the big doggie followed his mistress up-stairs and down-stairs, slept at her door, and never willingly let her out of his sight.

Training Children in Self-Reliance

Both in thought and conduct, says Martha B. Mosher, the child should depend upon himself as much as possible. Parents mistakenly enjoy the child's dependence on them, and defer the period of self-reliance as long as possible, thinking perhaps the child may, at a later age, be spared the unpleasant consequences of inexperience: but as he learns mainly by experience, and cannot altogether escape the rude teacher, he in reality gains nothing by a longer period of helplessness. His faculties grow by self-activity alone, and neither his mother's perception nor her experience can be a total substitute for his own. It is hard for a mother to stand by and see her little one commit and take the consequences of various small acts from which he must suffer: and also to deny herself the pleasure of waiting on baby, and have baby wait on himself when he can: but carried out judiciously, the plan is a good one.

Little Things Worth While

AMELIA E. BARR

THERE are some domestic requirements not often included in the list of a woman's accomplishments which deserve our attention, because they are important factors in the happiness-making of the household. First among them is an intelligent knowledge of cooking. It may be taken as an axiom, that no one is insensible to the charm of a good meal, and by a good meal is meant any meal, however simple, if it is only well dressed. Our physical wants are our most importunate wants, our most constantly recurring wants, and their satisfaction in the best possible manner is a good which only begins there—its results are still better. For the body being refreshed, the mind rejoices with it; the brain gives clearer counsel, and the heart more generous responses.

Many a Christian may lay his hours of dark despondency, not to an angry or indifferent God, but to his own weakened or disordered body. We have "this treasure in earthly vessels," and the absolute dependence of the spiritual condition on the physical one is a subject of great individual importance. And if the spiritual health is dependent on the physical health, the latter depends for its highest state of efficiency on the food eaten, and the manner in which it is prepared.

Not only our spiritual happiness, but our business success is very much affected by the meals we take. A fretful, belated, half-cooked breakfast can take all the energy out of a man and send him into the world to fight his battle at a great disadvantage.

ALL women are fond of admiration, and yet many of them miss a road to it that lies through all their household ways. For though we may please ourselves by imagining men are peculiarly susceptible to refined and artistic pleasure, the truth is, that where one man's heart in a thousand may be reached through his artistic instincts, the hearts of all men are open to the charm of a delicate, well-cooked meal.

There is hardly any office in the household more honorable and more important than that of a good cook; for no service is so necessary to our spiritual, mental, and physical health. And surely when God condescends to be caterer for his great human family—to find them fish and flesh and fruits and dainty sweets—we need not be ashamed to prepare his gifts in the way which shall best honor the wonderful goodness of the Giver. Such an office touches far more nearly than is generally understood all the feelings and events which go to make a happy home.

Another important accessory to pleasant hours at home, is the art of knowing how to talk well. No great intellectual effort is included in this household grace. It has only two vital points—to promote kindness and to unburden the mind. It is therefore an unconscious relaxation, and not a display. If we all cultivated our colloquial powers, we should become insufferable companions. Doubtless many of us have heard on one or two occasions, great wits and clever men air their talents in this way, and we may as well admit that they took a great deal out of us. After an hour in their company, we were not fit for much but sleep. But this is not the conversation that makes the household happy and merry.

FOR that purpose let us have all the digressions, personalities, stories, and inaccuracies of domestic chatter and news. Let us give and take—make random shots, even commit blunders. We want to be far more intent on bringing out our thought, than on the choice of words for that purpose. We want to have the relief and delight of giving voice to our feelings and opinions; and quite unconsciously, the result of this inspiring confidence is, that it carries weight in general society.

All of us have the gift of speech; and at this day there is so much to talk about that all of us ought to try and use the gift. For talking is self-discipline in a high degree. It acquaints us with ourselves, for as we talk to others we unconsciously reveal to ourselves the trend of our thoughts and aspirations, and the limitations of our powers.

TALKING has another advantage—it is a wonderfully exhilarating physical exercise. It keeps the mind and body in a glow, and physicians assert it to be one of the secrets of long life. As a rule, great talkers are long livers.

Yet ours is a supercilious, silent age. Even in home-life there is a tendency to prefer books and newspapers, and individual dreaming to the charming interchange of household news, and social happenings. Our young people are in bondage to type, and so cut themselves off from half the important personal influences which ought to stimulate their ideas. Books are very important, but it is also very important to look into intelligent eyes, and to learn through the action of cheerful voices, many things that will not be learned without their aid. Conversation, even with ordinary people, unchains the faculties, and gives us command of words. It also encourages the habit of observation, the art of expression, and that light handling of everyday subjects which makes the household interchange of thought so personal and so charming.

There are people who can talk at once to everybody, and if we examine their conversation it will be found to consist of all that comes into their minds, especially little bits of personal history. A woman among women easily begins on the subject of dress—her own dress—its quality, its price, its maker; and everyone listens because the subject is interesting to everyone. A man who can talk about a dog he once had, or a peculiar accident, or a strange dream, or some household event will, as a rule, find grateful listeners. Such conversations are not to be criticized; they are social amenities, things we say to passing acquaintances, and if they do not show off our wisdom, they at least make people feel that we desire to be pleasant to them.

THE remarks usually made to strangers about the weather must be taken only as preliminary courtesies, and when they are over many are embarrassed as to the next topic to be introduced. If the stranger has the same tastes and pursuits there is no difficulty. Two literary men, two soldiers, two physicians, two society women, can easily make talk. To be sure there is a foolish prejudice against talking "shop;" foolish, because talking shop means talking of matters that are of interest to the speakers and well understood by them. If the tastes are not in common, then it is safe to fall back upon public events, books, the exhibitions on view, summer watering-places, or traveling.

For three thousand years women have been accused of talking, as if it was a crime to talk. In all languages "silence" has been held up to them as a grace extraordinary; and even with regard to men there has been a superstition that great talkers were somehow little doers. The world has grown wiser, lately, and has become quite alive to the blessing of people who have something to say, and who know how to say it. For good talking is not only an accomplishment; it is also a moral excellence. How can we like a person who repels all our advances with "yes" and "no"? We feel in such curtness a real want of good-will. Our own good-will is soon frozen up, and a sentiment of resentment follows.

However, though this art seems so easy, it is not attained without habit and practice. It cannot be taken up as a resource when we have nothing else to do. We have to learn to talk, and it is an accomplishment worth learning. For conversation is designed to be the long-lasting, never-failing amusement of mankind. It is the pleasure that begins earliest, outlives all other pleasure, and through it, even at the point of death, we signify to those we are leaving, the glory of our hopes and the eternity of our love.

KINDRED to the pleasure of talking to each other is that of reading aloud. If we have nothing interesting to tell, if we are a little weary of our surroundings, and desirous to escape to stranger people and stranger lands, then there is no more delightful companion than a good book, which being read aloud, has all the advantages of a delightful visitor, besides many other advantages specially its own. In every home there ought to be one or more members accomplished in the art of reading aloud. Nothing better relieves that little strained feeling that comes to all households; it is like opening the windows and letting in a fresh breeze.

But reading aloud as an accomplishment is only attained by considerable study and practice. The middle register of the voice must be relied on, but this can be immensely improved by cultivation, so that even harsh voices can be changed to resonant and flexible ones. Natural readers are apt to find the management of the breath troublesome. The secret is to take breath before the existing supply in the lungs is exhausted; and wherever it is possible, on the vowels "a" or "o." When this is managed, the breathing is not heard; and there is no interruption to the flow of words. It is well that there should be some gesture and variation of voice. If the general tone is impressive, and the articulation absolutely clear, then in many respects a good reader is better than a good actor; for the best actors are apt to spoil their representations by personal mannerisms and perverse pronunciations.

To cook a good meal, to stimulate household mirth and confidence, to chatter and laugh and arouse social interest, "to lose and neglect the creeping hours of time" in simple interchange of simple hopes and plans, to charm the gathered household with the magic hid between the pages of a new story—these things may not be great accomplishments in the eyes of the world, but they are among the little unconsidered blessings that give, unconsciously, not only the tone, but the color to our lives.

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

CHAPTER XXX

Realizing an Ideal

EVER busy in the service of helpful ministration, Evadne scarcely noticed how the months rolled by. Each day brought its opportunity for relieving suffering, its anxiety over life trembling in the balance and its need for direction to be given to some poor, dark soul groping after the light. It was a strange life for one whose early girlhood had been spent as her's had been, but she had obeyed her father's dying injunction to make it the business of her life to seek Jesus Christ, and she had sought and found. That made all the difference. To her, now, Jesus Christ was the one centre of all her thoughts and purposes and her very being. Without him her life would have gone out in darkness. He brightened every hour, and her consciousness of his continual and abiding presence kept her in a beautiful sweet peace. People spoke of her as a self-reliant girl going her own way and leading her own life; but that would have been far from her own description of it. Her sole reliance was on Christ, and not on herself, and she was strong only in him.

One day she sat in the Superintendent's room reading a letter which the postman had just delivered. It bore the Vernon post-mark. When she saw it she grasped it eagerly, realizing for the first time how long it was since her eyes had been gladdened by Aunt Marthe's familiar handwriting. Mrs. Everidge's hands had been full, for her husband's health had failed utterly and he needed continual care. Now her long beautiful ministry was over, for Horace Everidge, serenely selfish to the last, had fallen into the slumber which knows no earthly awakening, and Aunt Marthe was free.

"I do not know what it means," she wrote, "but something tells me I shall not be long in Vernon. I am just waiting to see what work the King has for me to do."

Evadne pressed the letter to her lips. "Dear Aunt Marthe! If the majority had your tribulum, they would think they had earned the right to play!"

She looked up. John Randolph was standing before her, with a package in his hands. "I have been commissioned by the Hawthornes to give this into your own possession," he said with a smile.

She opened it wonderingly. Bonds and certificates of stock worth a modest fortune bearing her name. What did it mean? John Randolph had drawn a chair opposite her and was watching her face closely.

"You cannot think what long consultations the Hawthornes and I have held on the subject of what you would like," he said. "You seemed to have no wishes of your own. They went away with the matter still unsettled. There was another subject about which Reginald and I had often talked. His wife's illness and recovery strangely stirred the depths of his nature. You must have noticed that. He seemed for the first time to realize that the community had some claims on a man so rich as he, besides the mere spending of money on his own gratification. He wanted to do something which should be a thank-offering for the life spared, but he did not quite see what was the best form for it to take. In crossing the ocean he seems to have wrestled with both the unsettled problems and eventually he had the happy thought of combining them.

"He determined by one act to show his gratitude to you and his obligation to society. So he sent me a Power of Attorney to transfer these bonds and stocks to you as a trust fund to be used to help the poor and the suffering. He knew that nothing would please you so much as to have such means at your command, and he says he is sure that if he searched the world over, he could not find anyone who could use it so wisely for the purpose he has in mind—that of helping the kind of people who have most need of help."

A great wave of joy swept over her bewildered face. "So God has sent me the fulfilment of my dream!" she said softly. And John Randolph understood.

That evening she wrote to Mrs. Everidge. "Dear Aunt Marthe: The King's work is waiting for you in Marlborough. The work that we used to long for—the joy of lifting the shadows from the hearts of the heavy-laden—God has given to you and me!"

After that letter had been mailed, Evadne counted the days until Mrs. Everidge's arrival. She would take no step until Aunt Marthe could come.

At last on one never-to-be-forgotten day Evadne met her at the depot, and the dear, sweet, heavenly face was kissed with a rapture which told how glad the girl was to see again the guide who had led her into the light.

Then came days of peaceful quiet, during which they talked of plans for the future and discussed the best way of turning Reginald Hawthorne's magnificent gift to the best advantage. Then this subject was put aside until Dr. Randolph could spare a day to talk with them and bring the benefit of his experience and wide knowledge of the poor of the city to help in the solution of the problem.

Evadne described him to Mrs. Everidge, and as she did so her heart thrilled with that old feeling which had come so often when she met him or talked with him. Was it really love? She had analyzed her heart many a time without being sure. Now, with this dear counselor, Evadne felt that she could speak of it and yet shrank from confession of a secret, which as he had not spoken, seemed almost shameful to her. She broke off abruptly and asked: "Dear Aunt Marthe, what is love?"

"I will answer you in the words of one who for years has lived the love life," said Mrs. Everidge. "One must be himself infinite in knowledge to define it, infinite in comprehension to fathom it, infinite in love to appreciate it. Love is God in man, for 'God is love,' and 'every one that loveth is born of God': but love is not merely veneration, nor respect, nor justice, nor passion, nor jealousy, nor sympathy, nor pity, nor self-gratification: to love something as our own is but a form of self-love; to love something in order to win it for ourselves is just a perpetration of the same mistake.

"Dr. Karl Gerok wrote: 'Love is the fundamental law of the world. First, as written in heaven, for God is love: second, as written on the cross, for Christ is love: third, as written in our hearts, for Christianity is love.'

"And Drummond tells us that 'Love is the rule for fulfiling all rules, the new commandment for keeping all the old commandments, Christ's one secret of the Christian life'; and another writer says: 'You are a personality only as your heart lives: and the heart lives only as it loves. Love is all action, therefore the amount of your active love measures the size of your personal heart.'

"Love has been defined 'as the desire to bless.' That is like divine love for there can be no self-thought in God. 'God's love is over all and above all: but when our love responds to his, his love—underneath and about us—becomes to us a personal experience.' Love can reach down when in loving trust we reach up. Love is like the seed. It manifests no life until it begins to grow. Like the seed it must rise out of the dark ground into the light of heaven—out of self-thought into God. God's love to us is like the sun-light: we can make it our own only by being in it: if we try to shut up the sunlight, we shut it out. We forget to do wrong when loving God. As we love God the love we feel for him goes out to others."

"Yes," said Evadne, musingly, "but is it to all and not to one specially?"

"Ah! that is a different matter, little one. This love that I speak of goes out to all without consideration of their qualities, or of any response. It is the overflow of the fountain in the heart. Real love means giving always of our best. God so loved that he gave his Son, the essence of himself. Jesus gave his life, not only in the final agony of the crucifixion, but all through the beautiful years of ministry in Nazareth and Galilee. There is a truer giving than of our temporal goods. Our friends, if they really love us, want most of all what we can give them of ourselves. It is those who give themselves to the world's need who come nearest to the divine pattern Christ has set for us to copy, and if we truly love him, we shall want not his gifts but himself. People seek after holy living instead of perfect loving, they do not realize that we can be truly holy only as we love, for 'love is the great reality of the spiritual world.'"

"But when there is no response, not even gratitude, does it not give you a heartache? Forgive me for speaking of it, Aunt Marthe, but when I saw you in your home, I wondered how you could bear to give out all, as you did, and to receive nothing. Your treasure was unappreciated and it seemed to me that you must sometimes feel that there was an aching void in the place from which your love came. I will tell you some day how I have come at times to have that feeling."

"There is a vast amount of heartache, little one, in this old world, and self is at the bottom of it all, when we stop to analyze it. We want to be first, to be thought much of, to be loved best. No wonder that the selfless life seems impossible to most people. Think what a continuous self-sacrifice Christ's life was! So utterly alone and lonely, among such uncongenial surroundings, with people uncouth and totally foreign to his tastes. Ah! we don't realize it. We look at him doing the splendid things amidst the plaudits of the multitude, but think of the monotonous, weary days, going up and down the sun-baked streets, surrounded by a crowd of noisy beggars, full of all sorts of loathsome disease, and the hum-drum life in Nazareth; and all the time the great heart aching with that ceaseless sorrow. 'His own received him not.' Oh, what a waste of love! We do not realize that it is in these footsteps of his that we are called to follow. We are willing to do the great things with the world looking on, but not for the loneliness and the pain! It seems a strange antithesis that Paul should count that as his highest glory, and yet how comparatively few seem counted worthy to enter with Christ into the shadow of that mysterious Gethsemane which lasted all his life. 'The fellowship of his sufferings.' It must surely mean the privilege of getting very near his heart, just as human hearts grow closer in a common sorrow knit by pain. Yes, dear child, self must die, and it is a cruel death—the death of the cross. But then comes the newness of life with its strange, sweet joy, which the world's children do not know the taste of. How can they, when it is the 'joy of the Lord.'?

"Among all the pictures of the Madonna," she continued after a pause, "the one I like best is where Mary is sitting, holding in her hands the crown of thorns; everything else had been wrenched from her grasp, but this they had no use for. What a legacy it was! As I look at it, I see how he has gathered all the thorns of life and woven them into that kingly garland which is his glory. All the wealth of the Indies could not shed as dazzling a light as that thorny crown. Like that brave soldier, who gathered into his own breast the spears of the enemy, Christ has taken the stings from our sorrows and made us more than conquerors over the wounds of earth. Surely he has tasted it all for us—the baseness and coldness and ingratitude and treachery which have wrung human hearts all through the ages. When Judas betrayed him, Peter denied him, and they all forsook him and fled; do you suppose any other pain was comparable to that? Only our friends have the power to wound us, you know, and 'He was wounded in the house of his friends.'"

As Evadne listened, she thought how beautiful had been the life, the inner springs of which Aunt Marthe was laying bare. She had said nothing of all she had borne and suffered; but she was giving her beloved niece the secret of that noble service which she had rendered during all those weary years. Human nature, alone, could not have borne the strain. Here was the Source from which the strength had come.

Evadne was silent for several minutes and the two women, with hands clasped, sat still in the gloaming, each busy with her own thoughts. John Randolph found them so when he dropped in nearly an hour later. A bright intuitive perception lighted his face as he looked at Mrs. Everidge when Evadne introduced him. Aunt Marthe smiled pleasantly as she grasped his hand. It seemed as if both those souls animated by the same principles, walking in the same light, recognized one another by some subtle revelation.

"I am come," John said, "not to talk with you now but to tell you that I am going to take a whole day off to-morrow. Dr. Wilson has promised to see to my patients and I shall have a whole day to myself. I am going to give it to you and I want you to come with me to the Willows, where we will be undisturbed. You will be delighted to meet my dear Lady Di, who is the owner of the place, and she will be glad to welcome you. We will start early, if you are agreeable, and have a long day."

"Aunt Marthe and I were going house hunting again to-morrow," said Evadne, "but your scheme sounds more tempting. I long for a breath of the open country. What do you say, Aunt?"

"I am in your hands, my dear; I will do whatever you think best. You look as if a change might do you good."

So it was settled, and early the following morning John came and carried them off to the Willows.

WYANDOTTE BAKING SODA

is the best baking soda for these reasons:

A package costs but five cents. You get a bigger package for the same money than you do of other kinds.

Ounce for ounce it is stronger and goes farther than other kinds. It is absolutely pure.

Perfect soda makes perfect biscuits.

WYANDOTTE WASHING SODA is a perfectly pure washing soda.
It separates the clothes from the dirt without hurting them.
It will do all your washing and do it better with half the usual amount of soap.
A two-pound package costs five cents, and is a bigger five-cents' worth than any other kind.

BELL STARCH is the starch that stiffens the clothes and without sticking to the iron
It is made without boiling. It gives a rich gloss.
An eight-ounce package costs five cents. Other and inferior kinds have only six ounces. A sixteen-ounce package costs ten cents. Ten-cent packages of other starches not so good weigh only ten ounces.

Send us the name of your grocer and we will send you three coupons—one each good for one package of these three things.

Our Fresh-Air Work

Many Children Plead—Our Readers' Deep Interest in This Beautiful Charity

PREPARATIONS are going forward for re-opening our Fresh-Air Home for city waifs. Applications from former guests are coming in. Now and then a little waif wanders into the Bible House and anxiously inquires if "the country will open," or if he or she can come. Missionaries and Sunday School teachers are voicing the wants of many children who plead for an outing. Even so early as this, mortality rates in the tenements are creeping up towards the high-water mark which they reach in mid-summer. Statistics of 1897 show that some 7,000 city children died during the summer months.

"SCUPS" FROM THE TAMBLYN'S.

Could you go down into the tenements and see the life that is led there, you would not wonder. Many people live underground in cellars and basements. Others in small, ill-ventilated rooms, towards which they climb up dark, narrow, ill-smelling stairways. After public school hours children are so thick in the malodorous streets and alleys and courts that one can hardly walk for them. This keeps up till late night hours.

Our illustration shows how childhood's natural, God-given instinct for play surmounts difficulties. The little ones have improvised "scups" (swings), with a lamp-post doing duty as tree. No wonder tenement waifs who have been our guests are eager for the grassy lawns, the "scups" hanging from leafy boughs, the bird-songs and the wild-flowers.

In many tenement homes, a table is rarely set. "Table?" say wondering little ones, if you ask how often a table is set in their homes. "We have no table." There is a loaf of bread on a shelf and a piece of meat somewhere, if times are prosperous with basement dwellers. In other cases, there are tables — bare of covering, but scoured to spotless cleanliness by toiling tenement mothers — set forth with meagre fare. These mothers are inexpressibly relieved when several hungry little ones are taken off their hands, carried to a Christian home, fed, clothed and tenderly cared for. Of course, the children of the tenements and many mothers of children are thinking of the bountiful table spread at the Children's Home.

Little guests have noised abroad the good times they had when they went on a ten days' outing up the Hudson to a beautiful place where everybody was so kind, and where children could play on the grass and had plenty to eat. Our Fresh-Air work is growing, and our readers who have co-operated with us in the past, are taking stronger interest than ever in this excellent charity. With gifts of money and promise of little garments come earnest pledges of prayer.

In few ways can so much good be accomplished at such small cost. Three dollars gives a waif a ten days' outing, covering cost of transportation both ways, food, shelter, clothing, medical and caretakers' attention. Six dollars sends two; $9 three; $12 four; and $35 will make twelve children happy for ten days; bring twelve little creatures under Christian influences that may powerfully affect their whole after-lives; and doubtless be the means of restoring to health some little ones who might otherwise have perished.

What Shall . . the . . Children Read?

MARGARET E. SANGSTER

.... Don't be Unforgiving —Tricks of Manner—My Brother's Keeper, etc. ....

A MOTHER, who is trying to bring her little children up to be clever people, good citizens and true Christians, naturally thinks a great deal about what they shall read. One such dear mother writes asking advice, and she tells me, and I tell her in turn, that half her battle is already won, that her children are book lovers even now. It is a great delight to have book-loving children in the home. Also it is a great responsibility. Parents are bound before God and the community to rigidly exclude bad books from their households. In these days there are plenty of good books and in great variety. Only on your part must there be intelligent care. A book-loving child is, in my opinion, far more easily amused and occupied, less liable to get into harm's way, and altogether more comfortable and companionable than one who does not enjoy reading.

IN my childhood, we had the Rollo books, by Jacob Abbott, and a delightful series of histories from the same gifted man, a row of books bound in red, ranging, as I recall them, from Hannibal and Charlemagne to Charles I., and the Empress Josephine. There were The Fairchild Family, Little Henry and His Bearer, The Shepherd of Salisbury Plains, Anna Ross, and other stories, which many of us hold in loving recollection. We had the wonderful masterpieces of Scott: Ivanhoe and Waverly and Kenilworth and Tales of a Grandfather. As a child, I delighted in Thompson's Seasons, Milton's Paradise Lost and Cowper's Task. Perhaps you will hardly believe it, but before I was twelve years old, I had read a large part of Matthew Henry's quaint Commentary on the Holy Bible, for the reason that having devoured every other thing within my reach, I was obliged to fall back on those stately volumes, a goodly shelf-full of which flanked the Book itself in my father's house. Once, a small maiden not high enough to reach over the top of the pew in church, I became so absorbed in a memoir of one Colonel Gardner, who was converted under the preaching of John Newton, that the sexton did not see me, and locked up the church on a gray, wintry afternoon, leaving me the sole occupant. There had happened for some reason to be no service, and I, not knowing this, had gone from Sunday School as usual to the family pew.

I MENTION these books and others, such as the dear Pilgrim's Progress, and Baxter's Saints' Rest, and Doddridge's Rise and Progress, and D'Aubigue's Reformation, and the Life of Ann Hasselton Judson, to show that if a child is born with a genuine book-hunger, all will be fish that comes to her net, and the most important thing for parents and teachers is to keep out of sight the merely silly and foolishly sensational stuff which is erroneously supposed to form children's literature. Avoid carefully all books in which precociously pious children set a good example to their fathers and mothers, and pose as little martyrs who are suffering for the truth. Such books have a great vogue among children, but they show a false sentiment and are hurtful. Let the children read the dear old fairy tales, Cinderella, and Beauty and the Beast, and Jack and the Beanstalk, and all the rest of them. The children of every age and every tongue have heard these narratives, and they belong to the literature of pure imagination, and should be freely allowed to our boys and girls.

To cultivate a love for the Bible in our children, we must read it with them every day. It may be read in many ways. You are quite right to read the Bible straight through with your darlings. And you are very safe in picking out the beautiful stories of Noah and the Ark, David and Goliath, of Samson, and Ruth and Josiah, and Joseph and his brethren, and telling them, in their historic order, or out of it, as you choose, in a vivid dramatic way, till the children welcome no stories as they do the Bible stories. Don't be satisfied with letting your children learn a golden text once a week, and study a Sunday School lesson once a week; introduce them to the profit and delight of daily, happy Bible reading and study.

I have said all this for one dear, anxious mother, who tells me her little ones already love just such reading as God gives us in his Word. I am sure this precious and thoughtful friend prays for light and help in her daily problems, and also often kneels with her children, and talks to God on their behalf.

One word more before we leave this subject. Cultivate in children kindness for dumb animals, and let them read Kipling's Jungle Books, and stories of animal life generally, and such books as Black Beauty. Also give them books of travel and to some extent of adventure. These books will form delightful reading for the whole family.

* * *

I WOULDN'T, if I were you, Constance, cultivate an unforgiving spirit. Even if Irene has treated you unjustly, try to pardon her. But you are not sure she has been in the wrong. At present you are condemning her on hearsay evidence, and—on a testimony that is often misleading—that of circumstances. Why not talk the matter over with her, candidly and fairly, and in that sweet disposition of the heart which leads us, as Christ enjoined, to forgive our enemies not only, but, what is harder, to forgive our friends until seventy times seven.

* * *

A SISTER who yearns over a brother's welfare, both being motherless, consults me about his evenings, which he too often spends away from home. Make home so attractive that he will not want to leave it; ask his friends in to visit you; play games with him, and if you wish to subscribe for a paper for him to have as his own property, why not try Success, which I fancy every wide-awake young man in my acquaintance must enjoy.

Lecture on Consumption

Why So Many Die and So Few Are Saved

I have made the lungs a specialty for nearly fifty years, and know by experience that Consumption is curable in all stages. By this I do not mean that it is curable in every case, for in some the patient's constitution is so bad and broken down that no healing power is left in the body. But treated in its early stages, fully 95 per cent. recover under antiseptic medicated air inhalations.

All medical colleges now admit that Consumption is Curable, but differ as wide as the poles as to its proper treatment. Since 1891, when Koch's Lymph was heralded by the profession as the long looked for panacea for Consumption (but which proved to be the most murderous quackery that ever disgraced the annals of medicine), general physicians have had no treatment beyond palliation and the temporary relief of symptoms. Patients have been practically left by them to die of the disease without any attempt to save them by curative treatment.

It would be invidious for me, as a physician, to make these statements, had I not before me absolute proof of their truth in the testimony of many prominent physicians, given only a few weeks ago before a special committee of the New York State Senate and published in its report.

In answer to the general question, "Does medication, as at present understood and applied, promise much for the arrest and cure of consumption? Professor Herman Briggs, of the New York Health Department, said: "Medication alone promises absolutely nothing." His idea of a remedy was to shut up all the "poor" Consumptives in pest hospitals and have the Board of Health interne the "rich ones" in their own homes under the supervision of the Board! Dr. A. H. Doty, Health Officer of the Port of New York, said: "Medical treatment does not promise much." Hon. Z. Taylor Emery, M.D., former Health Commissioner of Brooklyn, gave it as his opinion that "Medication alone does not promise much for such cases." Dr. E. G. Janeway, Consulting Physician of the Presbyterian Hospital, New York City, considered "outdoor life and good food the best remedy." Dr. T. Mitchell Prudden could only say that he considered "medication often useful in certain phases of the disease," but had no curative treatment to advise. Dr. Henry P. Loomis, in answer to the same question, said emphatically "No." He knew of no treatment that would cure consumption, and yet he has a boarding house up in the Catskills which he calls a "sanitarium for the treatment of Consumption." Dr. J. Edward Stubbert said: "Medication in the way of symptomatic treatment is indicated in almost all cases." In other words, a mere system of palliation of symptoms, without ever getting at the root of the disease, or attempting to heal the injuries done to the lungs. Dr. E. L. Trudeau, who has a sanitarium at Saranac Lake, said he had "no specific medication. His only treatment was to relieve symptoms and improve the general health." Dr. J. H. Pryor, of Buffalo, N. Y., "did not consider medication promised anything but to relieve symptoms." Dr. Joseph H. Raymond, Professor of Physiology and Hygiene in the Long Island College Hospital, former Health Commissioner of Brooklyn, "thought a good deal might be done by treatment," but said "his experience was not sufficiently extensive to enable him to answer the question."

In this long array of testimony, by representative physicians, speaking of their own practice and the results of their own treatment of the disease, only one had any confidence in any treatment he could advise. The single exception was a Doctor Evans, who announced himself "a thorough believer in the active treatment of Consumption and in its local medication by inhalation." I was gratified at this endorsement of my treatment which I introduced nearly fifty years ago and am still applying with great success in thousands of cases of Consumption and other lung diseases. It is the only treatment that ever cured true Consumption. By it I have rescued hundreds in the last stage of Consumption, and given up as hopeless, who are alive to-day to bear grateful testimony to their restoration to health by my treatment. No stronger proof of the cure of any disease exists than I have shown of the cure of Consumption by my antiseptic air inhalations. The records of my office are always open to inspection and hundreds of cured patients are willing to be referred to.

But the mere act of inhaling some fragrant nostrum, is not what I mean by inhalation treatment. The remedies must be adapted to the disease and condition of each patient. The physician must have thorough knowledge of medicines, be able to detect the different forms of lung disease and have experience in the action of inhaled remedies on the lungs or he cannot apply it with success.

Consumption, to have the same chance of cure as other diseases, must be treated in its early stage before serious injury has been done to the lung structures. Almost every case is seen in this stage by the patient's family physician, and if he knew the remedies to use, their strength, and how to apply them to the lungs, there would be few deaths by Consumption.

But what possible chance has anyone afflicted with Consumption, under the care of physicians who never cured a case in their whole professional career, who confess that they have no curative treatment of their own, and no confidence in anything they can do for the disease? What moral right have they to treat Consumption at all, or to permit their patients to believe they are striving to cure them when all they are doing is but a wretched system of palliation of symptoms?

Here is the real cause of this wide-spread mortality of Consumption. People die of it because general physicians do not know its proper treatment and are wholly incompetent to cope with it. Before they can do so they must be retaught the principles of medical science which govern the treatment of all local diseases, and, acting under them, must discover, as I did, the remedies which, when locally applied to the lungs, will kill the germs and heal the ravages they have made in that organ.

I have given to the world a positive cure for Consumption in my Antiseptic Medicated Air Treatment, when applied before mortal lesions have taken place. It is a treatment which places Consumption in the list of curable maladies and renders their cure as certain as other serious local diseases. By it healing and germicidal remedies are brought into direct contact with the internal surfaces of the nose, throat, larynx, air tubes and cells of the lungs. It soothes the mucous lining of the breathing organs, arrests irritation and prevents inflammation, while the antiseptics destroy the germ life on which the disease depends.

New "Doors of Hope"

Forty-nine Rescue Homes the Fruit of Mrs. Whittemore's Labors—Redeemed Lives

SINCE the account given in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD two years ago, of the opening of thirty one rescue homes under the Door of Hope Union, sixteen new Doors of Hope have been organized, making in all forty-nine rescue homes established in a little over eight years. The object of these institutions, as was then explained, is not simply that of reformation, or of giving such industrial instruction as prepares the recipient for honest self-support, or of shielding unfortunate and penitent women from a publicity that would drag them into deeper shame and sin—although all these purposes are embraced in the general plan—but those seeking are received as a sacred trust, to be brought by the help of God to as speedy as possible an acceptance of Christ.

MRS. WHITTEMORE
Founder of the "Door of Hope"

Hundreds of wayward girls have been truly turned from evil works unto good, and are powerful examples of what the all-sufficiency of grace can accomplish. "On the other hand," says Mrs. Whittemore, "it must be mournfully admitted that large numbers have returned to the old paths. Still, we have the comfortable hope that the good seed sown in the hearts of even these will some time bear fruit. Our faith in God and our experience with individual cases gives ground for this hope. Almost all who come profess to accept Christ before leaving; numbers give positive evidence of a changed heart by an almost startling change of character and life. In this special line of work, accurate statistics of exact numbers saved beyond doubt cannot, of course, be had; but the recompense, as shown in the honest, industrious lives of many of our girls with whom we are able to keep in touch, is more than worth all our trial and trouble."

In the first Door of Hope, opened October 25, 1890, at 162 E. 61st St., New York City, and the second, established later at Tappan, N. Y., both of which are under the founder's supervision, over 2,400 girls have been housed. "The work," Mrs. Whittemore testifies, "has been one of faith in answer to prayer, and without aid of formal collections or personal solicitations over $62,000 has been received."

Illustrations like the following instances of what is being done, could be multiplied many times. A young woman from a distant town came into the Home last winter, and was under deep conviction. She was pointed to Christ as a Saviour from sin, but she ended every conversation by wringing her hands in agony and saying, while great tears coursed down her cheeks: "Yes! yes! it's all true! but he couldn't save me; he couldn't save me!" She had not only lived an evil life herself; she had led others astray; there was but the extenuating circumstance that she had grown up the child of a drunken mother, who had taught her no better, but who acquiesced in her evil ways, and cursed her when she cast them aside. She said: "I have left that life behind. But I need never expect to be forgiven; if I were only responsible for my own sins, there might be hope; but, Oh, when I remember that I have the blood of souls upon me, that I have led other girls astray, it almost crazes me. I know I needn't expect God to forgive such awful sin as that. He couldn't, I wouldn't dare ask him." Her anguish seemed to be wearing her life out; she could not sleep or eat. But at last came acceptance of belief that the words, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved," included even herself. This woman is now doing good work for others; one of the first things she did was to bring her mother to a saving knowledge of Christ. Thus, one life which would have been blighting many lives, is now uplifting many. Last September a letter came from one who for twelve years had been the slave of intemperance and graver sins. It said: "Is there any hope for such as I?" When lying in the hospital two years before, a missionary had laid at her side the tract, "The Pink Rose," the story of Delia—Delia, the reclaimed girl, who in eleven months after conversion had brought one hundred souls to Christ. The girl made promises to God, and then going back to evil surroundings, fell into old ways. The day before writing the letter, she had seen the dead body of a former associate, a suicide, carried out of the house opposite, and had determined to seek Christian help and shelter. She is now thoroughly turned from her evil ways and is working to save others. Another case, a fifteen-year-old child, who came a moral and physical wreck, is now a shining example of what God's saving grace can do for penitent sinners. She is, like the other two, an active member of a church, which accepted her with full knowledge of her history.

There are Doors of Hope as far South as Texas and Florida; as far West as California; in Paris, France, and Glasgow, Scotland, and other foreign cities. Six years ago the Door of Hope Union organized a foreign missionary branch, known as the Delia Memorial, supported the inmates of Homes one and two, and through the sales of Mrs. Whittemore's books and tracts. So far, over $10,000 has been realized, and the society is represented in China, Japan, Africa and India.

CURE CATARRH NOW.

This is Best Season of the Year to Begin the Treatment of Catarrh For a Permanent Cure.

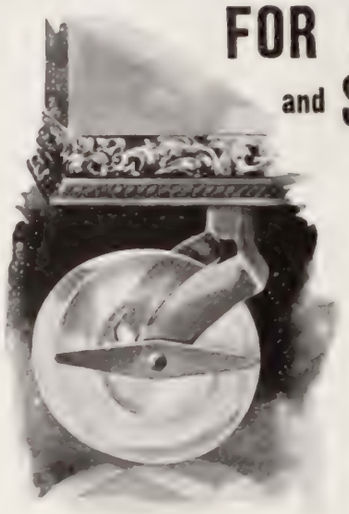
Dr. Blosser, the discoverer of the great remedy, which has undoubtedly cured more cases of Catarrh, Bronchitis and Asthma, than any other known medicine, says that this is the best season of the year to begin the treatment of Catarrh.

As Spring approaches and warm weather sets in the disease can be permanently cured so that it will not return. Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure eradicates the disease by killing the germs, which are the direct cause of all Catarrhal disease.

Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure is put up in boxes containing enough medicine for one months treatment, which is sent, postage paid, for $1.00

A trial sample will be mailed free to any sufferer who has never tried the remedy. Write, or order at once, addressing Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 50 Broad St., Atlanta, Ga.

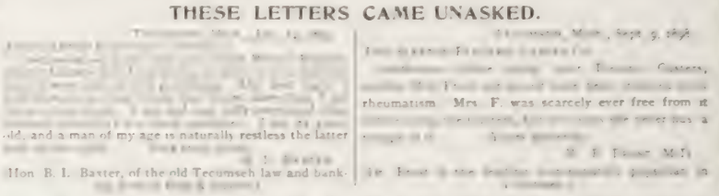
FREE TREATMENT
FOR RHEUMATISM and SLEEPLESSNESS.



These ailments in the vast majority of cases are greatly relieved or permanently cured by the use of SLAYTON'S ELECTRIC SWITCH GLASS CASTERS on the patient's bed. The treatment is on the theory of Dr. Brown-Sequard that these diseases and all others arising from weakened vitality or nervous energy were caused by an excessive flow of electricity from the body to the earth. In health this flow is natural and beneficial; but in certain disordered conditions of the system it must be stopped. To do this is the work of the SLAYTON'S ELECTRIC SWITCH CASTERS, which insulate the occupant of the bed completely from electrical connection with the earth.

Such is the theory. The effects are truly wonderful; but we do not ask you to accept our word. We ask you this: When 3,000 sets of these Casters have been taken on trial and paid for only after proving their power over these obstinate diseases, isn't it worth while, for your own benefit and that of your friends, to take a free trial of this treatment, which cannot possibly harm you?

THESE LETTERS CAME UNASKED.



Hon. B. L. Baxter, of the old Tecumseh law and bank-rheumatism. Mrs. F. was scarcely ever free from it

FREE TRIAL FOR ONE WEEK. We will gladly send any reputable person a full set of the Slayton Electric Glass Casters on receipt of 17c. for postage. Try them for one week according to directions. If they do not help you send them back by mail and no charge will be made. If they do help you, send us $2.00 in full payment.

Be sure to state whether for brass, iron or wooden bedstead.

God's Covenant and Ours

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for May 14. Ps. 105: 1-10

WHEN the Scripture writers represent the relations of God to man in the light of a bargain, they show that they perceive the fact that man lives in the world under the reign of law, and is not merely the sport of chance or caprice. It was characteristic of the Hebrew mind that its conception of the doctrine should take the form of a personal undertaking, that in consideration of certain services rendered, as a lawyer would say, by the party of the second part, certain specified rewards should be conferred by the party of the first part. Far back in the history of the beginning of the nation, the patriarch Jacob had said, "If God will be with me," and will do so and so, "I will surely give," etc. God would reward a man for being good, and the man would give a percentage of the reward back to God. It was a crude idea of the conditions of man's being and one liable to lead to doubts and difficulties, but it was, at any rate, a better creed than that of the sceptical, pessimistic author of Ecclesiastes, who, when he saw the good man perish in his righteousness and the wicked man flourish in his wickedness, jumped to the conclusion that a man had no pre-eminence over the beast.

The leaders of the nation were continually confronted with the problem of accounting for the troubles which fell upon the chosen people of God. But there was always an escape from the conclusion that God had failed to fulfil his promise of protection, in the fact that Israel had not fulfiled his side of the contract. The covenant, they held, had been broken, because the people had not observed the conditions; therefore, God, after long years of patience and forbearance, had at last felt that there was no remedy, and had refused any longer to be bound by the contract. One prophet after another pointed this out to the people, and assured them if they would live up to their bargain, God would do all and more than all, he had promised. In the Psalm associated with the topic, the writer reminds his readers of the signal instances in the past, in which, though provoked by the persistent breaches of the contract, on the part of the nation, God had interfered on its behalf and had been faithful to it. In the following Psalm he reviews the conduct of the nation and shows, by the contrast, that it had no ground of complaint against God. Still clearer was the message of the later prophets, when it began to dawn on their minds that this principle was no bargain at all, but a great law of the universe, that the man who did righteousness was fulfiling the purpose of his being, and would receive in himself the results of righteousness, in peace and true happiness. He might not enjoy temporal prosperity, for God does not always pay in money, but he would always enjoy the higher spiritual blessings of life, which are of more value.

God's covenant and ours are better understood than they were in the Psalmist's time, but the practical conclusion has not changed. Man is so constructed and the conditions of his life in this world are so arranged, that righteousness tends to progress and the highest development of his being. It is a law rather than a covenant. One idea of God is not of that of one man bargaining with another. It is that of a Being intent on the development of the race and patiently wooing men into the ways which lead to that result. The man who chooses righteousness, will enjoy the fruits of righteousness; the man who tries to help others, to bear their burdens, to relieve their wants, and help them to easier, better lives, will receive in himself the joy and satisfaction of service. He may not prosper financially; he may not receive the gratitude of those he tries to help. God himself does not receive the thanks due to him for his uniform love and kindness, and even Christ, the greatest of all earth's benefactors, was rejected and crucified. We need not complain if our work is misunderstood and our service rejected; the reward is not dependent on others; it comes of itself, in the form of the peace which the world cannot give, neither can it take away. So long as sin remains in the world and the majority of men care more for their bodies than their souls the life of the righteous man is liable to be stormy and troubled; but he will always be supported by the inward fortitude that outer circumstances cannot disturb, and his development will go on throughout eternity.

Against the Canteen

A LARGE mass meeting was held at Cooper Union, on the afternoon of April 24, to protest against the canteen in the army contrary to law. The speakers were the Rev. Drs. A. C. Dixon, David I. Burwell, R. S. McArthur, Theodore L. Cuyler, C. H. Meade and Mr. C. H. Howard, of Rochester. Admiral Philip was expected, but sent a telegram which read: "Owing to orders just received, impossible to attend." It is well known that the Christian hero of Santiago is on the side of the home against the saloon. Dr. Dixon, who presided, introduced a resolution drawn up by the New York Prohibition Union of Christian Men condemning the decision of Attorney-General Griggs and the action of Secretary of War Alger permitting canteen in military camp and asking President McKinley to enforce, in spite of this decision, the law against liquor traffic in the army, passed by Congress and signed by himself. It was urged that as Secretary Long had the power to say there should be no liquor traffic in the navy, our President, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, had surely the right to prohibit canteen in the army. It was stated that General Miles, General Shafter, and the better class of soldiers were themselves opposed to the canteen system, calling the canteen quarter the "slums" of the camp, and protesting that it put their regiment on a bar-room level, and developed gambling and kindred vices which they wished to exclude. The announcement was made that over one hundred of New York's churches had opened their doors to the Prohibition Union for a series of meetings to be at once instituted for fighting the liquor traffic in the army and elsewhere, until the curse should "be wiped from the face of the earth." It was said that $50,000 a year for three years subscribed to this movement would meet the needs of a campaign which should rid New York State of saloons. It was emphasized that the Union was a non-political organization, inviting into its ranks men of all creeds and parties who believe that the saloon is a bad thing and ought to go. Dr. Dixon announced that Dr. Louis Klopsch, of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Hon. William T. Wardwell, and Dr. Funk were ready to lead a subscription with liberal contributions. A generous collection was taken up. Many poor people eagerly contributed small sums.

Promptings to Immortality

HAVE we not seen before the north wind blew,
And the fields glowed in mellow autumn light;
The little birds their summer haunts eschew,
And through the trackless air southward take flight.

The power that leads them ever leads aright,
For true as the charmed needle to the pole,
Unerring instinct makes their pathway bright
And guides the creatures to their distant goal.

Man has his instincts, too, as well as these,
Promptings to worship, sense of duty owed;
Immortal cravings nothing can appease
Till the soul finds its final rest in God.

—NEIL MACDONALD.

A REMARKABLE INVENTION

BY AN OHIOAN

A genius of Cincinnati has patented and placed on the market a remarkable Bath Cabinet, whereby any one resting on a chair within, enjoys the famous Turkish hot vapor or medicated baths at home for three cents each, heretofore enjoyed only by the rich at public bathrooms, health resorts, hot springs and sanitariums. These baths are celebrated for their marvelous cleansing, purifying and invigorating effects upon the human system, and this invention brings them within the reach of the poorest person in the country.

Clouds of hot vapor or medicated vapor surround the entire body, opening the millions of sweat pores, causing profuse perspiration, drawing

IN OPERATION DOOR CLOSED

FOLDED

out of the system all impure salts, acids and poisonous matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs and skin, causing disease, fevers, debility and sluggishness.

Astonishing is the improvement in health, feelings and complexion by the use of this Cabinet, and it seems to us that the long-sought-for natural method of curing and preventing disease without medicine has certainly been found.

The makers inform the writers that 82,386 of these Quaker folding thermal Cabinets have been sold since January 1, and showed letters from thousands of users who speak of this Cabinet as giving entire satisfaction.

Since this invention bathtubs have been discarded, for it gives a better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water, and as there are millions of homes without bathing facilities, it seems this would be a good article for our readers to take the agency for.

Thousands of remarkable letters have been written the inventors, and to our knowledge persons who were full of drugs and nostrums, and have been given up to die, have been restored to perfect, robust health, to the astonishment of their friends and physicians.

E. L. Eaton, M.D. of Topeka, Kan., gave up his practise, because, he said, he could do more good for humanity with this Cabinet than his medicines, and has already sold more than 600 of them. Congressman John J. Lentz, Mrs. Senator Douglas, Rev. R. E. Peale, Una, S. C.; Rev. Samuel Cooper, John T. Brown, editor of the Christian Guide, and a host of our most eminent people recommend it.

J. A. Hagan, Richfield, Mo., afflicted 15 years with rheumatism in its worst form, was cured in 6 days. L. B. Westbrook, Newton, Ia., afflicted 45 years, was cured in three weeks of catarrh, asthma, heart and kidney trouble. O. P. Freeman, Sparta, O., afflicted 17 years, unable to walk, was cured of kidney troubles, piles and rheumatism. A prominent citizen of Elwood, Ind.—E. Veher—was cured of a serious case of obesity. A lady in Maysville, Mo.—Mrs. L. Coen—was cured of woman's troubles, and recommends it to all suffering ladies.

We find this is a genuine Cabinet, with a door, handsomely and durably made of best materials, rubber-lined, has a steel frame, and should certainly last a life-time.

It is important to know that the makers guarantee results, and assert positively, as do thousands of users, that this Cabinet will clear the skin, purify and enrich the blood, cure nervousness, weakness, that tired feeling and the worst forms of rheumatism. (They offer $50 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures woman's troubles, malaria, ague, sleeplessness, neuralgia, headaches, piles, dropsy, liver, kidney and nervous troubles. It will make you strong, energetic, full of life and vigor with the coming of spring and summer, and avoid illness later.

To please the ladies, a face and head steaming attachment is furnished, if desired, which clears the skin, beautifies the complexion, removes pimples, blackheads, eruptions, and is a sure cure for skin diseases, catarrh and asthma.

All our readers should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Cabinet complete, with Heater, formulas and directions, only $5.00. Head steamer, $1 extra; and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much genuine health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day to the World Mfg. Co., 586 World Building, Cincinnati, O., for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money after 30 days if not just as represented. We know them to be perfectly reliable. Capital $100,000.00, and they will ship promptly upon receipt of remittance.

Don't fail to send for booklet, anyway.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and to our knowledge many are making from $100 to $150 per month and expenses. It is certainly an opportunity not to be neglected.

GOUT AND RHEUMATISM...

A prominent physician writes:

DEAR SIRS:—Replying to yours on the use of TARTARLITHINE as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are a little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished in years.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

C. E. W. D., Washington, Ind. Do you believe that the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews was mistaken when he said (Heb. 6: 4-7), that it was impossible for one who knew the truth believed it, and then fell away, to be renewed unto repentance?

Does he say that explicitly? He evidently believed that there was a stage, which he describes in clear terms, from which, if a man fall, it is impossible to renew him. We know by experience that there is no class so hard to reach as those who have fallen away after having made a profession of conversion, and we can well believe that, as the writer you quote says, there is a stage when it is impossible. But the difficulty is, not that the mercy of God is limited, or that the backslider is refused pardon, but that the man himself is disinclined to seek it. If he would seek it, it would be given according to promise.

F. O. B., Holloway, N. C. I am a prisoner in Doubting Castle. I know the Saviour has let out the key that would give me release, but the trouble with me is that I cannot accept it. What must I do?

There is no remedy but for you to stay where you are and suffer. If you will not accept release (it is not a question of "cannot"), you are not entitled to any pity. God himself can do nothing more for you than he has done. He has made the way of escape so easy that a mere child can avail himself of it. If you were sick, and a doctor was ready to attend you, without charge, a doctor who never failed to cure such cases as yours, the only stipulation being that you trust your case entirely and unreservedly to his hands, following his instructions, what would you deserve if you did not commit yourself to him?

P. S., Bacon, O. A minister who has been preaching here tells us we are on the wrong road, because, according to our belief, a man is not entirely sanctified until he dies. Are we wrong?

If he taught you that a man can reach a stage beyond which he has no need of more grace, or a stage beyond which there is no progress, no further growth in grace, so that he does not get better, holier, and more like Christ, his views are not only unscriptural but contrary to experience. The man who believes he has attained the highest development possible to him is mistaken. He may continue growing better all his life and we do not believe the process stops at death.

N. C. B., Stoyestown, Pa. Is it wrong to go driving for pleasure on a Sunday if your occupation does not permit you to do it on a week day? Is it wrong to play marches, waltzes, etc., on a Sunday?

If you devote your week days to your occupation and your Sundays to pleasure, when do you attend to the interests of your soul? Considering that the soul will live through eternity and our life here is a preparation for it, don't you think that one-seventh of our time is small enough proportion to give to the most important concern we have to attend to? Business and pleasure should not fill the whole time, otherwise at the end of our life here we shall be unprepared for that better life we expect or hope for beyond the grave. It is not so much a question of right and wrong, though even on that ground there is much to be said, but in this, as in other matters, he that sinneth wrongeth his own soul.

T. S. T., Friar's Hill, W. Va. Why do you speak of John's Gospel when you know it is Christ's Gospel written by John, who was a mere man?

It is merely a form of expression, and is perfectly understood by every reader of ordinary intelligence. The correct phrase would not be Christ's Gospel, but, the Gospel according to John; that is, the Gospel as John was accustomed to teach and preach it. It is not by any means certain that he actually wrote it, though there is good reason for thinking that he did. But if he did not, it was based on his teaching, and was mainly a report of his testimony (see John 21: 24).

A. W. S., Spring Brook, N. Y., and many others. I see by the local papers that a prominent minister of your city, speaking at a ministers' meeting, said that he could no longer regard the Bible as infallible. Is that the opinion of ministers generally? etc. etc.

Perhaps you have misunderstood the remarks. Many people have done so through reading only a few extracts from the speech which were separated from the context and selected with the object of causing a sensation. No minister or layman supposed that the Bible, as we have it translated into English, is free from error, otherwise there would have been no need of a Revised Version. Neither was the book from which it was translated free from human errors, due to the mistakes which were inevitable when every book was copied by hand. One such error, as to the age of a king, was pointed out recently by a correspondent in this column. All are agreed so far. Then arises the question whether certain parts are literal, or allegorical, history or parable. Here ministers differ according to their scholarship. But the questions involved do not touch the essence of the book. Even if the higher critics could prove all that they hold—which they cannot—the Bible would remain the guide and authority it has always been to the believer. If for example it could be proved that Jonah was not swallowed by a whale and that the book of Job was a symposium and Solomon's song an epithalamium, the sublime moral and spiritual lessons they teach would still be invaluable as they were before. You need not fear that any attack on the Bible, from outside or inside the church, can undermine its power.

H. C., Eldridge, Ia. How does it come that God gave us a Sabbath and now it is called Sunday? I don't find Sunday in all the Old or New Testament.

You are not in the least likely to find that word or many other words that are in common use in a book written long before the words came into use. Do not make a fetish of the Bible. It is the most precious book in the world, teaching us and revealing God to us. It is impossible to over-estimate its value but if you think it teaches us all we need to know, or that anything outside of it is useless, you are greatly mistaken. There is no place for the Jewish Sabbath in the Christian religion. We still keep a certain part of one day in seven for God, but not as a Sabbath, which was rest and inactivity. We spend it in such a way as to do some good in the world, as Christ did. He was continually being nagged at for breaking the Sabbath by sticklers for the Bible law and at last he told them plainly that he was Lord of the Sabbath.

1. For a similar reason to that which causes some countries to be republican and others monarchial. If any form of church government had been clearly and explicitly enjoined in the New Testament, no branch of the church would have dared use any other. Each church, of course, believes that its form of government is authorized by Scripture. Christ, however, insisted on the necessity of divine life in the individual soul, and so far as [illegible] effecting a reconciliation have failed. Desertion is accepted as sufficient ground for divorce. The case, as you state it, seems to be one with special features that cannot be judged of by those not familiar with all the details, especially as, according to your statement, there is no apparent reason for the wife adopting such a course. Any one following such a course must surely have had sufficient provocation. Your other questions are matters for the individual conscience alone.

L. P. D., Eliot, Me. 1. Do the ancient houses of the East have glass windows? 2. Can a person float on the waters of the Dead Sea, and are they poisonous?

1. No; the windows are generally mere apertures in the wall. The use of glass in Oriental cities is confined to a few houses which have borrowed the idea from the West. 2. Its waters are very buoyant, so much so that it is difficult to dive, and there is little danger of sinking while bathing. From the fact that vegetation, save of a very low order, cannot live in the vicinity, and that birds avoid it in their flight, it may be inferred that there is some poisonous or unwholesome quality in the Dead Sea and its surroundings.

Such is the Magnificent Record of the American Sunday School Union, which Celebrates its Diamond Anniversary in Philadelphia this Month A Notable Jubilee

FOUNDERS AND LEADERS OF THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION

HON. WM. STRONG, LL.D. U. S. Supreme Court | ALEXANDER HENRY First President | REV. E. W. RICE, D.D. Chairman Executive Committee | ABRAHAM MARTIN First Recording Secretary | REV. J. M. CROWELL Secretary of Missions

IN this month of anniversaries and in an age of great Christian enterprises, there are few celebrations which can be regarded as more significant of our progress as a civilized Christian nation than that which will take place in Philadelphia on the 24th and 25th of the present month. The occasion will be the seventy-fifth anniversary, or "Diamond Jubilee" of the American Sunday School Union. This veteran religious organization, with whose great missionary work in all parts of our Union the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have long been familiar, has now attained to the dimensions of a very giant in spiritual activities. During its three-quarters of a century of effort, it has organized 100,928 Sunday Schools, in a multitude of different localities, extending a chain of Gospel influence from Maine to California, and from the Lakes to the Mexican Gulf. The great majority of these schools were planted in neighborhoods which had till then been destitute of all religious privileges, and in hundreds of instances the schools so established have blossomed into permanent churches with growing congregations. From the seed planted in faith and watered by prayer and earnest consecrated labor, there has sprung a glorious harvest of over four millions of Sunday School pupils, officered and taught by 578,000 teachers, besides such a showing of churches and congregations as may well bring a thrill of satisfaction to the hearts of all who have been interested in this broad home-missionary work, either as active participants or sympathizers and supporters. To our own readers, who for a number of years have been among its most cordial sustainers, this remarkable record of the American Sunday School Union cannot fail to bring the keenest satisfaction.

In a review of the history of the Union from its earliest efforts until the present time, which Rev. Edwin W. Rice, D.D., the Secretary of the Publication Committee, will lay before the Anniversary convention in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, some exceedingly interesting facts will appear. Dr. Rice writes:

A company of nine Christian philanthropists met in Philadelphia, December 19, 1790, "for the purpose of taking into consideration the establishment of Sunday Schools in this city." A constitution for a society was adopted at an adjourned meeting, December 26, and on January 11, 1791, a "Society for the Institution and Support of First-day or Sunday Schools in Philadelphia" was perfected, and Bishop William White, D.D., chosen President. The schools were open to the children of the poor, and to all young apprentices or tradesmen. The teachers were paid; the instruction was chiefly reading and writing from the Bible, and aimed to secure a reformation of morals and manners and a better observance of the Sabbath. Prominent persons from several different denominations, including the Society of Friends, united in this organization.

About 1810 to 1815, Sabbath Schools began to be generally taught by gratuitous teachers.

In 1791 the Society of Friends memorialized the Legislature of Pennsylvania, urging free schools "at public expense," "as the surest preservative of the virtue, liberty, and happiness of the people." This method was also applied in religious instruction, and schools on Sunday taught by "gratuitous teachers" sprang into existence as early as 1808. Mr. Eleazer Lord, of New York, spent most of 1815 in Philadelphia, and made himself familiar with the "Sunday School system then in successful operation," and "resolved to call the attention of the churches in New York to the subject, and devoted the autumn and winter to this object." This led to the formation of the "Female Union Society for the Promotion of Sabbath Schools," January 31, 1816, and of the "New York [Male] Sunday School Union," February 26, 1816, the two societies uniting nearly all the Sunday Schools in the city and vicinity.

At a meeting in Philadelphia, May 13, 1817, a Union Society was formed, and on May 27 a constitution was adopted, and the organization perfected. The Society was called "The Sunday and Adult School Union," and Alexander Henry was elected the first President and John P. Bankson Corresponding Secretary.

The Society sought to extend the cause in other States, and was soon recognized as the centre of Sunday School influence throughout the country. The first report tells of two schools formed in Charleston, S. C., and the third gives encouraging sketches of schools established in ten States and the District of Columbia. In 1821 the Union employed the Rev. Wm. C. Blair as a Sunday School missionary in "establishing Sunday Schools and tract societies where there are none." He established six tract societies, four adult schools, and sixty-one Sunday Schools in six States. Two years later the Union employed "two missionaries," Rev. Timothy Alden, President of Alleghany College, and a layman, Mr. M. A. Remley, and began to issue a monthly magazine. The first public plea for a "general Sunday School Union in the United States" belongs to the New York [male] Sunday School Union, and appeared in its annual report, May, 1820. A plan for such a society was outlined, and delegates from various societies met in Philadelphia, December 11, 1823, and discussed the plan. Next year prominent ministers and laymen of several different denominations and from fifteen to twenty States, met and organized the "American Sunday School Union," with Alexander Henry, Esq., President. Among those prominent in this movement were the Rev. Gardiner Spring, D. D., and Divie Bethune, of New York; Samuel Bayard, of Delaware; Francis S. Key (author, "The Star Spangled Banner"); Hon. John Brownlee, of South Carolina; the Rev. Wm. L. McCalla, of Kentucky; Ambrose White, Frederick Erringer, Philadelphia, and many others. The American Sunday School Union was thus auspiciously begun, and ever since has been closely identified with the origin and development of juvenile religious literature, education, pioneer missions, and similar great movements in the religious progress of this country.

At the approaching anniversary, the meetings will extend over two days, and addresses will be delivered by a number of eminent speakers, representing the varied interests that are served by the Society's work in many different fields. Among the speakers will be the following: Mr. D. L. Moody, the well-known evangelist; Rev. Dr. A. F. Schauffler, New York; Rev. J. M. Crowell, D.D., Philadelphia; Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, D.D., Plymouth Church, Brooklyn; Rev. Russell H. Conwell, D.D., Philadelphia; Rev. Addison P. Foster, D.D., Boston; Rev. Henry Clay Trumbull, D.D.; Rear-Admiral J. W. Philip, U. S. Navy; F. G. Ensign, Chicago; Gen. Joseph Wheeler, U. S. Army; Morris K. Jesup, of New York, President of the Society, Rev. Theodore Cuyler, D.D., of Brooklyn, and others. A choir of 600 voices, under the leadership of Mr. H. H. McGranahan, will have charge of the music. Many of the addresses dealing with the actual work in the field, will be a revelation of Christian energy and self-denial on the part of the consecrated workers of the Union.

Succinctly stated, this is what the American Sunday School Union has accomplished in its three-quarters of a century of existence:

100,928 Sunday Schools organized, containing 578,680 teachers and 4,070,348 scholars; 224,844 cases of aid to schools, having 13,333,968 members. Nearly four schools a day organized for every day of the last 75 years. Value of publications distributed by sales and gifts, over $9,000,000.

An idea of the vastness of the field in which the Union operates and of its great needs which increase with our steady growth of population, may be gathered from the statement, based upon accurate statistics, that notwithstanding all that has been done by the various religious denominations, there are still no less than 11,000,000 youths between the ages of five and eighteen years, who are not in any Sunday School. This remarkable condition of affairs, which would seem almost incredible in a Christian country, constitutes a leading reason for the American Sunday School Union's appeal to the Lord's people everywhere to support its workers in their efforts to spread the Gospel in the neglected localities, by planting Sunday Schools wherever practicable. There is work for hundreds of additional missionaries in the pioneer sections of the South and Southwest, and the workers are waiting to be sent. The headquarters of the Union are located at number 1122 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. Its members and officers include men who are eminent in Christian work. Morris K. Jesup Esq., of New York, is President, Rev. J. M. Crowell D. D., is Secretary of Missions and Rev. Edwin W. Rice is Editor and Publication Secretary.

. . . Old Times Lived Over. . .

A Sermon by T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Psalm 39: 3, . . .

While I was musing, the fire burned

HERE is David, the Psalmist, with the forefinger of his right hand against his temple, and the door shut against the world, engaged in contemplation. And it would be well for us to take the same posture often, while we sit down in sweet solitude to contemplate.

In a small island off the coast of Nova Scotia I once passed a Sabbath in delightful solitude, for I had resolved that I would have one day of entire quiet before I entered upon autumnal work. I thought to have spent the day in laying out plans for Christian work; but instead of that it became a day of tender reminiscence. I reviewed my pastorate; I shook hands with an old departed friend, whom I shall greet again when the curtains of life are lifted. The days of my boyhood came back, and I was ten years of age, and I was eight, and I was five. There was but one house on the island, and yet from Sabbath daybreak, when the bird-chant woke me, until the evening melted into the Bay of Fundy, from shore to shore there were ten thousand memories, and the groves were ahum with voices that had long ago ceased.

Youth is apt too much to spend all its time in looking forward. Old age is apt too much to spend all its time in looking backward. People in mid-life and on the apex look both ways. It would be well for us, I think, however, to spend more time in reminiscence. By the constitution of our nature we spend most of the time looking forward. And the vast majority of people live not so much in the present as in the future. I find that you mean to make a reputation, you mean to establish yourself, and the advantages that you expect to achieve absorb a great deal of your time. But I see no harm in this, if it does not make you discontented with the present, or disqualify you for existing duties. It is a useful thing sometimes to look back, and to see the dangers we have escaped, and to see the sorrows we have suffered, and the trials and wanderings of our earthly pilgrimage, and to sum up our enjoyments. I mean, so far as God may help me, to stir up your memory of the past, so that in the review you may be encouraged and humbled and urged to pray.

There is a chapel in Florence with a fresco by Guido. It was covered up with two inches of stucco until our American and European artists went there, and after long toil removed the covering and retraced the fresco. And I am aware that the memory of the past, with many of you, is all covered up with obliterations, and I now propose, so far as the Lord may help me, to take away the covering, that the old picture may shine out again. I want to bind in one sheaf all your past advantages, and I want to bind in another sheaf all your past adversities. It is a precious harvest, and I must be cautious how I swing the scythe.

Among the greatest advantages of your past life was an early home and its surroundings. The bad men of the day, for the most part, dip their heated passions out of the boiling spring of an unhappy home. We are not surprised to find that Byron's heart was a concentration of sin, when we hear his mother was abandoned, and that she made sport of his infirmity, and often called him "the lame brat." He who has vicious parents has to fight every inch of his way if he would maintain his integrity, and at last reach the home of the good in heaven. Perhaps your early home was in a city. It may have been when Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, was residential as now it is commercial, and Canal Street, New York, was far up town. That old house in the city may have been demolished or changed into stores, and it seemed like sacrilege to you — for there was more meaning in that small house than there is in a granite mansion or a turreted cathedral. Looking back you see it as though it were yesterday—the sitting-room, where the loved one sat by the plain lamp-light, the mother at the evening stand, the brothers and sisters perhaps long ago gathered into the skies, then plotting mischief on the floor or under the table; your father with firm voice commanding a silence that lasted half a minute.

Oh, those were good days! If you had your foot hurt, your mother always had a soothing salve to heal it. If you were wronged in the street, your father was always ready to protect you. The year was one round of frolic and mirth. Your greatest trouble was an April shower, more sunshine than shower. The heart had not been ransacked by trouble, nor had sickness broken it, and no lamb had a warmer sheepfold than the home in which your childhood nestled.

Perhaps you were brought up in the country. You stand now to-day in memory under the old tree. You clubbed it for fruit that was not quite ripe, because you couldn't wait any longer. You hear the brook rumbling along over the pebbles. You step again into the furrow where your father in his shirt-sleeves shouted to the lazy oxen. You frighten the swallows from the rafters of the barn, and take just one egg, and silence your conscience by saying they will not miss it. You take a drink again out of the very bucket that the old well fetched up. You go for the cows at night, and find them pushing their heads through the bars. Ofttimes in the dusty and busy streets you wish you were home again on that cool grass, or in the rag-carpeted hall of the farmhouse, through which there came the breath of new-mown hay or the blossom of buckwheat.

You may have in your windows now beautiful plants and flowers brought from across the seas, but not one of them stirs in your soul so much charm and memory as the old ivy and the yellow sunflower that stood sentinel along the garden-walk, and the forget-me nots playing hide and seek mid the long grass. The father who used to come in sunburnt from the field, and sit down on the door-sill and wipe the sweat from his brow may have gone to his everlasting rest. The mother, who used to sit at the door a little bent over, cap and spectacles on, her face mellowing with the vicissitudes of many years, may have put down her gray head on the pillow in the valley; but forget that home you never will. Have you thanked God for it? Have you rehearsed all these blessed reminiscences? Oh, thank God for a Christian father; thank God for a Christian mother; thank God for an early Christian altar at which you were taught to kneel; thank God for an early Christian home.

I bring to mind another passage in the history of your life. The day came when you set up your own household. The days passed along in quiet blessedness. You twain sat at the table morning and night, and talked over your plans for the future. The most insignificant affair in your life became the subject of mutual consultation and advisement. You were so happy you felt you never could be any happier. One day a dark cloud hovered over your dwelling, and it got darker and darker; but out of that cloud the shining messenger of God descended to incarnate an immortal spirit. Two little feet started on an eternal journey, and you were to lead them, a gem to flash in heaven's coronet, and you to polish it; [illegible] ing the starting out of a newly created creature. You rejoiced and you trembled at the responsibility that in your possession an immortal treasure was placed. You prayed and rejoiced, and wept and wondered; you were earnest in supplication that you might lead it through life into the kingdom of God. There was a tremor in your earnestness. There was a double interest about that home. There was an additional interest why you should stay there and be faithful, and when in a few months your house was filled with the music of the child's laughter, you were struck through with the fact that you had a stupendous mission.

Have you kept that vow? Have you neglected any of these duties? Is your home as much to you as it used to be? Have those anticipations been gratified? God help you in your solemn reminiscence, and let his mercy fall upon your soul, if your kindness has been ill requited. God have mercy on the parent, on the wrinkles of whose face is written the story of a child's sin. God have mercy on the mother who, in addition to her other pangs, has the pang of a child's iniquity. Oh, there are many, many sad sounds in this sad world, but the saddest sound that is ever heard is the breaking of a mother's heart!

I find another point in your life history. You found one day you were in the wrong road; you could not sleep at night; there was just one word that seemed to sob through your banking-house, or through your office, or your shop, or your bedroom, and that word was "Eternity." You said, "I'm not ready for it. Oh God have mercy." The Lord heard. Peace came to your heart. In the breath of the hill and in the waterfall's dash you heard the voice of God's love; the clouds and the trees hailed you with gladness; you came into the house of God. You remember how your hand trembled as you took up the cup of the communion. You remember the old minister who consecrated it, and you remember the church officials who carried it through the aisle; you remember the old people who at the close of the service took your hand in theirs in congratulating sympathy, as much as to say, "Welcome home, you lost prodigal;" and though those hands be all withered away, that communion Sabbath is resurrected to-day; it is resurrected with all its prayers, and songs, and tears, and sermons, and transfiguration. Have you kept those vows? Have you been a backslider? God help you. This day kneel at the foot of mercy and start again for heaven. Start now as you started then. I rouse your soul by that reminiscence.

But I must not spend any more of my time in going over the advantages of your life. I just put them in one great sheaf, and I call them up in your memory with one loud harvest song, such as the reapers sing. Praise the Lord, ye blood-bought immortals on earth! Praise the Lord ye crowned spirits of heaven!

But some of you have not always had a smooth life. Some of you are now in the shadow. Others had their troubles years ago, you are a mere wreck of what you once were. I must gather up the sorrows of your past life; but how shall I do it? You say that is impossible, as you have had so many troubles and adversities. Then I will just take two, the first trouble and the last trouble. As when you are walking along the street, and there has been music in the distance, you unconsciously find yourselves keeping step to the music, so when you started life your very life was a musical time-beat. The air was full of joy and hilarity; with the bright clear oar you made the boat skip; you went on, and life grew brighter, until, after awhile, suddenly a voice from heaven said, "Halt!" and quick as the sunshine you halted; you grew pale, you confronted your first sorrow. You had no idea that the flush on your child's cheek was an unhealthy flush. You said it cannot be anything serious. Death in slippered feet walked round about the cradle. You did not hear the tread; but after awhile the truth flashed on you. You walked the floor. Oh, if you could, with your strong, stout hand, have wrenched that child from the destroyer! You went to your room, and you said, "God, save my child! God, save my child!" The world seemed going out in darkness. You said, "I can't bear it, I can't bear it." You felt as if [illegible] sparkle. If you could have taken that little one in your arms, and with it leaped the grave, how gladly you would have done it! If you could let your property go, your houses go, your land and your [illegible] allowed them to depart if you could only have kept that one treasure!

But one day there came up a chill blast that swept through the bedroom, and instantly all the lights went out, and there was darkness—thick, murky, impenetrable, shuddering darkness. But God did not leave you there. Mercy spoke. As you took up the bitter cup to put it to your lips, God said: "Let it pass," and forthwith, as by the hand of angels, another cup was put into your hands; it was the cup of God's consolation. And you looked at the empty cradle and at your broken heart, and you looked at the Lord's chastisement, and you said: "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight."

Ah, it was your first trouble. How did you get over it? God comforted you. You have been a better man ever since. You have been a better woman ever since. In the jar of the closing gate of the sepulchre you heard the clanging of the opening gate of heaven, and you felt an irresistible drawing heavenward. You have been spiritually better ever since that night when the little one for the last time put its arms around your neck and said, "Good-night, papa; good-night, mamma. Meet me in heaven."

But I must come to your latest sorrow. What was it? Perhaps it was sickness. The child's tread on the stair or the tick of the watch on the stand disturbed you. Through the long weary days you counted the figures in the carpet or the flowers in the wall-paper. Oh, the weariness of exhaustion! Oh, the burning pangs! Would God it were morning, would God it were night, was your frequent cry. But you are better, or perhaps even well. Have you thanked God that to-day you can come out in the fresh air; that you are in your place to hear God's name, and to sing God's praise, and to implore God's help, and to ask God's forgiveness? Bless the Lord who healeth all our diseases, and redeemeth our lives from destruction!

Perhaps your last sorrow was a financial embarrassment. I congratulate some of you on your lucrative profession or occupation, on ornate apparel, on a commodious residence—everything you put your hands on seems to turn to gold. But there are others of you who are like the ship on which Paul sailed where two seas met, and you are broken by the violence of the waves. By an unadvised indorsement, or by a conjunction of unforeseen events, or by fire or storm, or a senseless panic, you have been flung headlong, and where you once dispensed great charities now you have hard work to win your daily bread. Have you forgotten to thank God for your days of prosperity, and that through your trials some of you have made investments which will continue after the last bank of this world has exploded, and the silver and gold are molten in the fires of a burning world? Have you, amid all your losses and discouragements, forgot that there was bread on your table this morning, and that there shall be a shelter for your head from the storm, and there is air for your lungs, and blood for your heart, and light for your eye, and a glad and glorious and triumphant religion for your soul?

Perhaps your last trouble was a bereavement. That heart which in childhood was your refuge, the parental heart, and which has been a source of the quickest sympathy ever since, has suddenly become silent forever. And now sometimes, whenever in sudden annoyance and without deliberation you say, "I will go and tell mother," the thought flashes on you: "I have no mother." Or the father, with voice less tender, but with heart as loving, watchful of all your ways, exultant over your success without saying much, although the old people do talk it over by themselves his trembling hand on that staff which you now keep as a family relic, his memory embalmed in grateful hearts—is taken away forever. Or there was your companion in life, sharer of your joys and sorrows, taken, leaving the heart an old ruin, where the ill winds blow over a wide wilderness of desolation, the sands of the desert driving across the place which once bloomed like the garden of God. And Abraham mourns for Sarah at the cave of Machpelah. As you were moving along your path in life, suddenly, right before you, was an open grave. People looked down, and they saw it was only a few feet deep and a few feet wide, but to you it was a cavern, down which went all your hopes and all your expectations. But cheer up in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Comforter. He is not going to forsake you. Did the Lord take that child out of your arms? Why, he is going to shelter it better than you could. He is going to array it in a white robe, and palm branch, and have it all ready to greet you at your coming home. Blessed the broken heart that Jesus heals! Blessed the importunate cry that Jesus compassionates! Blessed the weeping eye from which the soft hand of Jesus wipes away the tear!

Some years ago I was sailing down the St. John River, which is the Rhine and the Hudson commingled in beauty and grandeur, and while I was on the deck of the steamer a gentleman pointed out to me the places of interest, and he said: "All this is interval land, and it is the richest land in all the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia." "What," said I, "do you mean by 'interval land?'" "Well," he said, "this land is submerged for a part of the year; spring freshets come down, and all these plains are overflowed with the water, and the water leaves a rich deposit, and when the waters are gone the harvest springs up, and there is a richer harvest than I know of elsewhere." And I instantly thought: "It is not the heights of the Church, and it is not the heights of this world that are the scene of the greatest prosperity, but the soul over which the floods of sorrow have gone; the soul over which the freshets of tribulation have torn their way, that yields the greatest fruits of righteousness and the largest harvest for time, and the richest harvest for eternity." Bless God that your soul is interval land!

There is one more point of absorbing reminiscence, and that is the last hour of life, when we have to look over all our past existence. What a moment that will be! I place Napoleon's dying reminiscence on St. Helena beside Mrs. Judson's dying reminiscence in the harbor of St. Helena, the same island, twenty years after. Napoleon's dying reminiscence was one of delirium—Tete d'armee—"Head of the Army." Mrs. Judson's dying reminiscence, as she came home from her missionary toil and her life of self-sacrifice for God, dying in the cabin of the ship in the harbor of St. Helena, was, "I always did love the Lord Jesus Christ." And then, the historian says, she fell into a sound sleep for an hour, and woke amid the songs of angels. I place the dying reminiscence of Augustus Cæsar against the dying reminiscence of the Apostle Paul. The dying reminiscence of Augustus Cæsar was, addressing his attendants, "Have I played my part well on the stage of life?" and they answered in the affirmative, and he said, "Why, then, don't you applaud me?" The dying reminiscence of Paul the Apostle was, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me in that day, and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing." Augustus Cæsar died amid pomp and great surroundings. Paul uttered his dying reminiscence looking up through the wall of a dungeon. God grant that our dying pillow may be the closing of a useful life, and the opening of a glorious eternity.

Among Japanese Young Men

How the Young Men's Christian Association is Reaching the Young Men of Japan with the Gospel

AN interesting story of native Christian work in Japan is told by Saijiro Niwa, the General Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Tokio, who recently came to the United States for the purpose of investigating the methods employed by that organization in this country.

Mr. Niwa considers the time ripe in Japan for Association work, which he regards as an all-important factor in inculcating the principles of Christianity in the minds of the thinking Japanese and particularly of reaching the young men of the land. Tokio, the seat of the Government and the centre of education with its student population of 50,000 is a particularly fertile field. With the branch there Mr. Niwa has been connected as General Secretary since 1890. In a recent interview he said:

MANAGERS OF THE TOKIO Y. M. C. A.

"In Tokio there are two branches of the organization, one the Imperial Association, designed particularly for the students of the capital, the other, the City Association, intended for the use of the ordinary young business men. The building for the former was completed ready for occupation in October, 1898, and is provided with a library, reading-room, dining-hall, dormitory and an observatory, which is used every morning from half past five to half past six for prayer and Bible study.

"The hall for the City Association is modeled after the western style of architecture, and is like those used for similar purposes in American cities. Its equipments correspond to the manifold departments of work taken up under the auspices of the Association. There is a library, reading-room and lunch-room; class-rooms for evening school, offices for the directors and other officials, and an auditorium with a seating capacity for one hundred people.

"The site of this commodious and attractive building is Kanda, the very heart of the student town, near the Imperial University of Tokio, the professional institutions, the higher schools, common schools, normal schools, and in the midst of a vast wilderness of boarding-houses. Apart from its service to those connected with the Association, it has become identified with Christian work in general, and with the business community of the city. All the important religious enterprises find in it their headquarters, as for example, the work for the army in the late war with China, done by the native Christians.

"In truth, the Young Men's Christian Association carries on a great variety of good works in its new and attractive home. Every Saturday afternoon the largest religious meetings of the city are conducted in the auditorium, when between three and four hundred young men are attendants. The character of these gatherings is not purely religious. Their principal feature is a lecture by Mr. Matsumura, formerly the principal of a school in Yamagata and one in Niigata, and one of the most popular lecturers in the Sunrise Kingdom. With young men he is especially happy, possessing the qualities requisite for holding their attention while instructing their minds.

TOKIO Y. M. C. A. HEADQUARTERS

"He has been called a born lecturer for young men, and has published many books intended for their edification. His Saturday afternoon addresses under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, give advice pertaining to their physical, mental and spiritual well-being, or review the stimulating biographies of great and good men. After the lecture, questions on the topic relative to Christianity are solicited; a considerable number of the audience remain to avail themselves of the privilege.

"On Sunday afternoons from one hundred and fifty to two hundred hearers meet in the auditorium for evangelistic services, conducted by Rev. H. Kozaki, President of the Doshisha Theological School, and one of the leaders among the Japanese Christians. After the meetings tea is served and Bible classes are held.

"The nightly school is one of the chief attractions, between one and two hundred aspirants after knowledge meet in the pleasant class-rooms to learn English, the only study taught. The acquisition of that tongue the authorities [illegible] as one of the most important results to be achieved by the citizens of Tokio.

"In the library are to be found four thousand volumes, three-fourths of which are English books. These are reserved for the use of members. The privileges of the reading-room, however, are open to all, and afford a large variety of native and foreign periodical literature. Among this may be noticed the monthly forty-paged magazine published by the Association.

"The object of this paper is the dissemination of the principles for which the Young Men's Christian Association stands. With numerous religious faiths and philosophies and anti-religious schools of thought springing up in Japan, the placing before the public of the organization in question in its true light becomes a matter of prime importance. The magazine has a regular subscription list of twelve hundred names and is widely read by many outside the gate of the Christian religion. Besides these advantages, the Association has a self-supporting boarding-house, conducted by a Christian lady which has proved useful.

"Some of Tokio's strongest Christian men comprise our Board of Directors. Of the eight members constituting this body, six have been to America. The president is a naval official—a graduate of West Point, who belongs to the very small number of Christians in our navy. He takes the greatest active interest in the operations of the Association, and stands stanchly for the evangelical principles of Christianity. One of the members of the higher Council of Agriculture is our vice-president. He is a graduate of the University of Chicago, and a professor in the higher Commercial schools at Aoyania College. A third man on our Board is a prominent member of the Imperial Diet; a fourth is well-known as the president of the Temperance Society in Japan, formerly associated in a business way with Mr. Dunn, the American minister to the Empire. Besides the two Associations in the city, there is one in Osaka, another in Nagoya, and others connected with almost every denomination in the city, while thirty-four college associations are connected with our various educational institutions throughout the country. Once a year they meet together in a general conference, and during the warm season they hold a summer school.

"Never has there been a time in the history of the Empire when such work as the Y. M. C. A. is doing was more needed or more effective. Young men are coming to the front in public life, and under the constitution the demand for them is likely to increase. Hence the benefit of instilling Christian principles into their minds, which they in turn are able through their prominent position to have the opportunity of disseminating among the people."

The Difference

A man once said to Mr. Moody: "How do you account for the fact that Mohammed began his work six hundred years after Christ, and yet he has now more disciples than Christ?"

He replied, "A man can be a disciple of Mohammed and not deny himself, nor have any cross. He can live in the darkest, blackest, foulest sin; but if any man will be a disciple of Jesus Christ he must come out from the world, he must take up his cross daily and follow Jesus."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Christ Before the High Priest

S. S. Lesson for May 21. John 18: 15-27

Golden Text, John 1: 11

ALL the disciples had forsaken their Lord and fled (Matt. 26: 56), but there were two among them who could not long remain away from him. One of these was the Peter, whose denial he had foretold (John 13: 38), and the other was the writer of this Gospel, who calls himself "that other disciple," "another disciple," "the disciple whom Jesus loved." These two followed Jesus. Oh how different is God's judgment of his children from that of man! Man would say, What a rank hypocrite Peter must have been to have made himself an exception to the rest of the disciples by following Jesus when they continued to forsake him, although he was just about to deny him with oaths and curses! Man might have thought it would have been more honest to have continued one of those who forsook him than to have returned, and afterwards denied him.

Only God knows a human heart; Jesus knew Peter, and he knew how much there was in his disciple which was divine and which was in the power of an endless life. Jesus never called Peter a hypocrite, although to outward appearance he was so. His heart was conquered, but he had not learned either to distrust himself or fully to trust his God, and thus when everything turned out other than he had expected, he was off his guard, and the enemy had an easy conquest. But the denial was a temporary thing, the following was the true life of Peter, and Jesus knowing that the denial would come, never discounted the following of his disciple even at such a moment. Let us be slow to judge others. "With what judgment we judge, we shall be judged, and with what measure we mete, it shall be measured to us again" (Matthew 7: 2).

The two disciples obtained an entrance into the court of the high priest because John was known to him, and entered the court without meeting with any opposition, and through his interest Peter obtained an entrance also. Little did Peter think that his very following of Jesus, which was in itself at the risk of his life, would lead to his denial of him. Zeal, when it is in the power and energy of the flesh, may place God's children in positions of great danger. And yet a fleshly zeal is better than no zeal at all, and the Lord loved his undisciplined Peter. The maid that kept the door said unto Peter, "Art not thou, also, one of this man's disciples?" He saith, "I am not." He had ventured where only one other disciple had ventured; and he did not know the whole armor of God. Perhaps the enemy suggested. It is as much as your life is worth to own your connection with him, and it can do him no good now; you have no power to rescue him, and you may as well save your own life. Peter had not learned, like his Master, to lead a life regulated from above; he had believed that he could follow Jesus to prison and to death, but, at the critical moment, he failed.

And now he who so soon was to become the one great High Priest, the only Mediator between God and man, stood arraigned before the bar of a fallible child of man, an earthly high priest, who sought his death. The officers who had come to take him, had gone backward and fallen to the ground, but Caiaphas did not tremble; he had become hardened in his awful resistance of the Holy Ghost (Acts 7: 51, 52). He did not hesitate to sit in judgment upon him whose life and works declared him to be the Son of God according to the Scriptures. Oh the awful hardness of persistent sinners! "There are no bands in their death, their strength is firm, they are not in trouble as other men, neither are they plagued like other men." But oh their latter end! "Slippery places," "destruction," "desolation in a moment," "consumed with terrors" (Ps. 73: 4, 5, 17-19)!

It was a mock trial before this ecclesiastical court, the interrogation of the high priest was evidently with the intention of making him commit himself. But it was a kingly answer: "I have spoken openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogues and in the temple, where all the Jews come together, and in secret spake I nothing. Why askest thou me? Ask them that have heard me what I spake unto them: behold, these know the things which I said." The high priest knew how the written Word was the basis and generally the language itself of the discourses of Jesus. If the chief priests could only get him to speak something which they could prove to be against the law, they would have the justification which they sought, that they might condemn him; but they sought in vain.

Never did poor, weak, sinful man undertake a harder task than that of convicting the holy Son of God of sin. It could not be done; there was nothing found that they could lay hold of. "They found no cause of death in him." Foiled in the attempt to catch him in his words, "the chief priests, and the whole council sought false witness against Jesus to put him to death" (Matt. 26: 50). Maddened by their jealousy and hatred of One whose presence and whose power condemned them, these men, whose office it was to teach and to uphold righteousness, lent themselves to the most culpable unrighteousness and lawlessness, and betrayed their high office in hiring men to pervert justice by false witness!

Some men will do anything for money, "many false witnesses came," but among them all the whole of the learned council of Jerusalem could find nothing on which to base their accusation. At last came two who could agree, and who made the statement, "This fellow said (Mark 14: 58), We heard him say I am able to destroy the temple of God and to build it in three days" (Matt. 26: 61), a perversion of his own words about his body when they had asked him for a sign: "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up." (John 2: 19). So eager was the high priest, now that he had this shadow of accusation, that in his excitement he could no longer keep his seat. "The high priest arose, and said unto him: 'Answer thou nothing? What is it which these witness against thee?'"

"PETER THEN DENIED AGAIN: AND IMMEDIATELY THE COCK CREW"

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

Some time had to elapse after Christ was arrested before the members of the supreme court of the Jewish nation could be aroused from their beds and assembled in their place of meeting. It was probably soon after midnight when Jesus was arrested in the garden, and about two o'clock when he was arraigned before Annas, and sent from him to Caiaphas. Doubtless Annas was aware that there would be a difficulty in convicting him. The judges would give condemnation readily, but the forms of law must be observed. Some charge must be brought that was capital, and two witnesses must be found who would testify that the prisoner was guilty of it. Annas was clearly embarrassed and proceeded to cross-examine Jesus, in the hope that he would make a claim, or an admission, on which an indictment could be framed. But Jesus refused to incriminate himself. There were plenty of people who had heard his teaching: let them testify. It was significant that in spite of the hostile public feeling there should be so much difficulty in finding a capital charge. While the examination was taking place within the palace, there was a crowd in the quadrangle, drawn together by curiosity. If the house of Annas resembled the houses of that date, the quadrangle would be open to the sky and persons in it could see into the court through the arches which supported the house. John was in the crowd. Being in some way acquainted with the high priest he had obtained admission. Seeing Peter, who was a stranger in the capital, unable to get in, spoke to the [illegible] who had charge of the gate and induced her to let Peter in. She probably knew John to be one of Christ's disciples and therefore, in a casual way, asked Peter if he too was a disciple. Why the usually bold, impulsive man should have denied it, is not clear. Perhaps, having been the only one to resist Christ's arrest, he may have thought himself in special danger. He declared he was not a disciple, and, passing on, went to the group around the fire that had been made in the quadrangle. There, he was identified, and again he denied. He appears to have then tried to make his escape from a place where there was so much danger, but at the gate, a relative of the man he had wounded in the garden, saw him and pointed him out, and again Peter denied. By this time, between three and four o'clock in the morning, the preliminary examination of Christ was over, and as he was being taken across the quadrangle to the court for trial, a cock crew, and Jesus turned and looked at Peter. The question there would be in that look, and Peter's guilty conscience completed conviction, and the guilty disciple broke down in tears. This appears to have been what took place. The other evangelists differ in some of the minor details, but as John was the only one of the four who could have been an eye-witness, his account is most likely to be correct, especially as he was the last to write a Gospel.

Then went out that other disciple. John evidently thought to do Peter a kindness. He could not foresee that the temptation would be too strong for his fellow-disciple. When the young pretender to the English throne landed in Scotland, the Lochiel of that day was intent on going to him to explain the reasons why he could not join the standard of the descendant of the Stuarts. "Do not go," his brother Cameron said. "If the Prince once sees you and talks with you, he will get you to do what he pleases." Cameron knew his brother and wanted to keep him out of the way of temptation. He failed, for Lochiel, disregarding his advice, went to the camp and there the general enthusiasm and the Prince's cordiality overcame his judgment and he joined in the rebellion, to his ruin. It is not always that people are so wise as Cameron. Like John, they help a brother to enter some scene of temptation that proves fatal to his consistency.

Was known unto the High Priest. How John came to be known to him we are not told. Possibly there was some relationship, or it may be that before John became a follower of Christ, a young man such as we know him to have been, was regarded by the high priest as one of the promising young men of the day who would be a pillar of Judaism. However it may have been, John was known and the question of the girl in which she used the word "also," shows that she knew that John was a disciple. That is always helpful. If a young man lets it be known that he is a Christian, he is not assailed with the temptation that is applied to one whose character is not known. A young man was accustomed to attend the meetings of a debating society where liquor was drunk, but it was known that he was a total abstainer, and the waiter always brought him lemonade, when he brought the liquor in for the others. No one thought of urging him to drink intoxicants. But one night a friend accompanied him who was not pledged but was always abstemious. "You are not an abstainer are you?" was the question asked. "No, but I am not a drinking man," he replied. "Well you will join us then in a friendly glass," and he had not the courage to refuse. Before he left the meeting he had begun a practice which caused him sorrow and shame.

I am not. It is significant that Peter should have failed in courage which was his strongest point. It is an old saying that no man is so likely to die by drowning as he who is proud of his swimming. He will take risks that a man who cannot swim will avoid.

A Noble Christian Work Among Chinese Women — Human Beings Who are Bought and Sold

IF all the foreigners who have come to America probably none are so strangely tenacious of their own ideas and customs as are the Chinese. While a proportion of those Chinamen who habitually associate with Americans of the better class, notably in the Chinese Sunday Schools, may lose some of their Oriental ideas and may adopt Western opinions on vital social matters, yet the fact remains startlingly true that the great majority of the Chinese in America may live here half a century and never change their minds or alter their customs in the least.

This is especially the case in regard to the condition and status of the Chinese women. In China the girl or woman is bought and sold as any piece of personal property, and though she and her father or husband or owner may live in America for decades, she is still bought and sold and re-sold without a thought of its contrariety to American ideas or of its criminality under American laws. The whole attitude of these foreigners in our land may be summed up in their own trite saying: "American way good for American people, but China way more better for China people."

There is no voluntary adoption of American social customs on their part. A few men may put on American clothes and shave off the queue, but they do not put on the American mind with the American hat. So far as the writer's observation goes, all such change of mind must be forced upon them by the American educator, or missionary, or philanthropist, and unless this knowledge is borne in upon them with reiteration and almost violence, their staid, conservative, phlegmatic minds will never receive it. Hence the continuation of slavery, polygamy, foot-binding, and the seclusion of the women, is continued in America exactly as it exists to-day in China.

Does it startle the reader to know that there are sixty Chinese women in New York city, all bought for money, all held at a money value, and not one safe from the possibility of being sold again, perhaps many times? Not that these women are unchaste; far from it. I have never known more modest or pure-minded women in my life, and most of these sixty are to-day legal wives and the mothers of young children. But the marriage tie is no safeguard to the best and truest of these faithful young wives. Any hour their husbands may take them and sell them if they choose, and may do as they will with their children. Any hour a daughter or little slave-girl who is the family servant may be forced to become her master's concubine, or may be sold to legitimate wedlock or to sin, and she has not the right to say a word in her own defense or to oppose whatever may be done with her.

One woman, who was a faithful attendant of my Mission, was bought in Hong Kong when a little girl, was carried to Vancouver and forced to drudgery as a servant until old enough to be married. Then she was sold to a notorious gambler, who brought her to New York. This man owned another woman also, whom he legally married, but whom he afterward re-sold for $1,600. Then he tried to force this poor "second" wife, as she was called, to earn a living for him by a wicked life. But she refused. She was under the influence of free, Christian American women, and she told me with streaming eyes: "Me no want do bad. Me want be all the same like American woman. Me no likee be bad girl." To save herself from this she once took a dose of poison, but her owner discovered it in time to save her life. Then I took a carriage in the early morning and rescued her and placed her under the protection of the American law. To-day she is an educated, intelligent Christian woman, whom all respect involuntarily.

Another little girl was last summer offered for sale in New York's Chinatown, but she had been so long the tool of opium smokers, living in one of the worst "joints" of the city, that no one would buy her. Her owner, who was at death's door from the opium habit, offered her to me in adoption, and to save the child from absolute ruin I took legal control over her. Afterwards a purchaser was found, and the bargain was completed at $375, of which $200 was paid down. Then the owner demanded the child from me, and finally took the matter into court. But my guardianship was sustained, and the little girl remains now in the orphanage where I had placed her.

This child was once stolen from me. My house was watched, and I had to place her in hiding for weeks. My Mission was attacked, and my kindergarten was closed temporarily, but finally was reopened with its full quota of scholars.

Another little slave-girl was forced to become her master's "second wife," and when her little babe was a year old, the child was taken from her and given to the first wife, and the broken-hearted little mother was sold to a new owner and carried to a distant city. Poor, sad-eyed little waif, with her gentle face, and round, clinging arms, I think I can never forget her!

Another little slave-girl was cruelly beaten many times during the past year. She was neglected and dirty, barefoot and half-clad, shrinking at every sound, fearful always of blows and punishments. Many times I interceded on behalf of this child, but no permanent good was accomplished until I finally threatened her owners with arrest and imprisonment. At last they were made to understand the seriousness of the matter and they have now desisted. The child is treated at present with a fair amount of kindness, and is clothed and cared for.

One Chinese girl became a Christian, and when the time for her marriage drew near she refused to be sold. This girl had been born in America, and had grown up with much more freedom than is the lot of the ordinary Chinawoman. She not only saw her bridegroom before her marriage, but she loved him. She also told him that if he paid any money for her she would not marry him. In this she persisted until she gained her point, and she was the first one to defy the old custom and to be married as a free woman.

Idolatry is practiced in nearly all the Chinese families, and the altar, with the idol above it is as much a part of the household furniture as are the bed and table and kitchen utensils. The children are daily taught to join in this idol worship, and to offer rice and incense upon the altars. But we are trying to stem the tide of this idolatry by giving Christian teaching in our little Chinese kindergarten, and here daily we repeat the first commandment and learn that "Jesus is the best God because he is alive."

KINDERGARTEN CLASS IN MISS CLARK'S CHINESE MISSION

Our Mission reaches all the Chinese women and children, and is the only evangelizing agency working among them. They are very reticent and timid and it is most difficult to gain access to them, but when their friendship is won they are delightful and attractive pupils.

The Chinese families dwell in the Mott Street tenements side by side with Italians, Jews and Irish. Our Mission comprises three separate departments: one for the Chinese, one for the Italians from Genoa, and another for Neapolitans. In one year we have preached the Gospel to over 50,000 Italians, and we hold a Sunday School and various week-day classes and religious services. Our work in this Mission, for Chinese as well as Italians, would be greatly benefited by two or three additional workers, especially if the Lord would so order in his providence that we might reside upon the field. At present I alone am the only regular worker, but two earnest Christian women are ready to join me there, trusting the Lord for our support, if the means may be provided to fit up an apartment in which we may live. For this purpose $300 is necessary. Who will take part in the reward of this blessed service for our Master, by helping to meet this need?

The Hirsch Charities

Baroness Hirsch, the story of whose noble life was told in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 19, has left in charitable bequests more than $12,000,000, according to European reports. $1,200,000 of this is, it is said, left to the Baron Hirsch New York Fund for the extension of schools and other institutions; $600,000 is donated to the Home for Working Girls, lately established by the Baroness; the Baron Hirsch Institute in Montreal receives $120,000; the Oriental Israelite Normal School in Paris for the maintenance of colleges in the East, $800,000; pension funds for teachers in the same institution, $600,000; the Committee of Jewish Benevolence, $1,000,000; each of its twenty officers, $5,000; the Maternity Asylum of Paris and the Society of Good Works receive together $200,000; the loan fund of the Jewish Board of Guardians in London, $600,000; there is also a bequest of $600,000 for feeding and clothing the poorer pupils in the schools founded or to be founded by the Universal Israelite Alliance, the Jewish Colonization Society in London gets $5,000,000, the interest of which must be paid over annually, to the Universal Israelitish Alliance of Paris for the maintenance and extension of schools and other institutions: $400,000 goes to the jubilee fund in Austria, started by the Baroness for the support of boys and girls; the Galician primary schools, to which the Baron devoted $600,000, receive $600,000; the new fund for small loans in Austria, especially Galicia, $300,000; Jewish communities in Vienna, Bremen, Budapesth, Paris, Brussels, Mayence, Frankfort-on-the-Main, and Munich are remembered to the extent of $200,000.

This list may be extended and in some points corrected when fuller details of the will follow the formal reading which did not occur in April. By the Baron's will $100,000,000 went to charitable institutions. During her noble and useful life, his wife spent time, money and labor freely in carrying forward his benevolent enterprises; and in establishing others on kindred lines; by her will, it seems, she has most generously continued in death, the work which both began for wandering Israel—"God's chosen people."

Read Appropriate Chapters

ALL the Bible must be studied; but when you find something that you cannot understand, do not dwell upon that particular passage until you are morbid. My advice to all sceptics is: "For the most part for six months chiefly read the Evangelists—Matthew, Mark, Luke and John." "But," you say, "is not all Scripture given by inspiration of God, and profitable?" Oh, yes! So are all the medicines in the apothecary shop good and useful, but they all have different uses, and are to be administered under different circumstances. Here are aloes and arsenic and opium and Peruvian bark, all good in their places; but in one condition of the system this medicine may cure you and in another it may kill you. Now, I say that the ninth chapter of Romans, which is a glorious tonic to a strong Christian, is to you, in your present condition, arsenic, and if you do not stop taking it—at any rate, in such large quantities—it will kill you. If you had been sailing in one direction six months for Liverpool and not found it, you would think it time to take another direction: and now that you have for thirty or forty years tried to find the harbor of peace and have not come in sight of port, any Christian sailor would tell you to let go the jib-sheet and brace around the head-yards, taking another tack. In your present spiritual invalidism you cannot digest strong meat. You can take nothing but sincere milk. How dare you risk yourself just now in the ninth chapter of Romans? You go out to contend in that field where strong Christians of forty years' standing have been confounded. In other words, the first time you take a musket in your hand you try an Austerlitz. The devil has had his way with you long enough. He has robbed you of the peace of a whole lifetime, and is now trying to strangle your immortality. Hold your argumentations in reserve. The infantry go into the fight on the plain; the batteries are on the hill and will in due time be unlimbered. So go into this discussion with your heart. Hold your logic and your argument in reserve for a later period of the conflict. Before you get through your earthly battles you will need not only the Minie's rifle, but all the Columbiads. There is a time in a young man's life when he thrusts his finger in the armhole of his vest and tosses his head and gives a Byronic laugh at Christianity, or asks Tom Paine's question about the Serpent in Eden, or the miraculous conception of Jesus Christ. But it is a good deal easier to get lost in the jungles than to get out of the woods.

Murder of No Sex

WHEN a woman commits murder, she can no longer plead that she is a woman. If a man would deserve the death penalty in her circumstances, she deserves it all the more. This is the logical issue of the reform for woman. She is not less, but more guilty than would be a man. Lady Macbeth is regarded a greater criminal than her husband. Recall her appeal to him:

"I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis, to love the babe that milks me
I would, while it was smiling in my face
Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dashed the brains out, had I sworn as you
Have done to this."

When a woman unsexes herself by crime, she is a greater criminal than man can be. His nature is coarser, his sensibilities less acute. Her fall before the tempter is from a greater height. God has made her timid about injuring the least creature of his. She faints in the presence of bloodshed; of course, unless, she is under the influence of a great enthusiasm. Then, she can out-do a man. But, when she deliberately plans and executes a murder, she exhibits a hardness of nature greater than would the same act, if done by a man. Macbeth said:

"I dare do all that may become a man."

Lady Macbeth had sinews of steel. Even the resemblance which Duncan bore to her father did not prevent her taking back the bloody daggers used by her husband, but brought away in his fright, to the scene of the murder.

"Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there: go carry them and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood."

Macbeth's reply to this is:

"I'll go no more:
I'm afraid to think what I have done;
Look on't again, I dare not."

"Give me the daggers," returns his wife, and sternly places the daggers where they will seem to prove the murder committed by the grooms, that slept in the ante-chamber.

Shakespeare is true to nature when he shows the woman in the play fallen lower than the man. There is no greater desecration can come to woman, than she has already experienced, when she has said to Evil, "be thou my god."

Dull Pulpits Caused by Dull Pews

OUR attention has recently been called, more especially in religious newspapers, to much excellent advice given to the pulpit. Long series of articles in papers and magazines written by the pew for the benefit of the pulpit. The laity are saying many true things in regard to the arousal of ministers. The demand of the pew is for more animation, more snap, more directness and more fire. This demand on the part of the pew all over Christendom has had its good effect, and dry bones have got up and shaken themselves. Now, as the pews have been so successful in waking up the pulpits, and as turn about is fair play, it is time for the pulpits all over the land to wake up the pews. We suspect that much of the former dulness of the pulpits was inherited from the pews. We know not why a religious audience should not look as bright as any other audience; but how often it is that people who at a concert or lecture look animated seem to feel it their duty as soon as they come into a devotional assembly to look stupid. They think the more dull they are the more pious. Some hearers shut their eyes, and so extinguish, as far as the preachers are concerned, the chief light of the face. What is the matter with your eyes? Is it emotion? Oh, no! It is easily [illegible] trying to review your accounts at the store, or calculating the prospects for the opening business season. Open your eyes and look at the preacher, whatever church you attend. Your manner in many of the churches is a wet blanket on the preacher's enthusiasm. If a speaker begin a sentence with power, and happens to see your face about the middle comma, he will, in the last half of the sentence, drop to imbecility. Have you ever seen a preacher, in the midst of his sermon, get bothered and subside from eloquence into inanity? He saw two or three intelligent men looking as indifferent as dolts. The sun rose clear, but a fog rose to the preacher's countenance and beclouded it. It is astonishing how much the manner of listening has to do with the force of preaching. We will take the contract of arousing the dullest minister that ever addressed an audience, if you will give us enough alert and wide-awake hearers placed at proper distances from the pulpit, so that in whatever direction the preacher looks he shall, by clash of eye, strike fire.

The reason ministers are stupid is because religious audiences are stupid. How much spirit would you have in conversation if, in your parlor, your guests should demean themselves as in church? One of your friends in the arm-chair closing his eyes, another lying back on the sofa as if he were sleeping, another putting his head down on the back of a chair in front of him. You would quit talking, and wish they would take their stupidity out of your parlor, and go home. But the stolid and unconcerned manner which some people could not endure from their friends is every Sabbath inflicted on the pastors of the churches. Wake up, or if you are awake, as you probably are, do not let your manner belie your real condition. There are some churches in which the unarousable condition is so chronic, so hereditary, so perpetual, we never want to preach there. If a Methodist should cry out in that assemblage an "amen" or a "hallelujah," it would create a panic, and make the reading of the riot act appropriate. That church is a pond frozen over, smooth and good for skating, but no warm tides of life, no meeting of preacher's earnest eye with hearers' intense gaze in such churches. Every Sunday humdrum, and extract of poppy, and ecclesiastic morphine. Come, come, church pews all over America, you must share with the pulpits in the responsibility of a lethargic service. We will try to fire up at our end of the column, but you must fire up at your end of the column. We will divide the blame and then share the improvement. We will furnish and shovel in the coal, and you can furnish the kindling wood and open the damper. An eager, intent pew always makes a resounding pulpit.

Go to Work

THERE must be a field somewhere. Sea captains are generally sympathetic, and when they are going over the water and see a signal of distress hoisted, they bear down upon the ship and take her passengers from the wreck. But there have been cases when these men have been hard-hearted, and have seen a signal of distress, but paid no attention to it and come into port. How they have been execrated by the sailors and the people of all countries. What do you think will be said of us in eternity if it shall be found out that we voyaged on through life only careful about our own comfort, while all around us there were signals of distress lifted, but we cared not for the suffering, and were not moved by the cry of the morally shipwrecked! Ah, [illegible] some of the regiments of the Lord's army [illegible] you know that God will have no mercy upon you in your death-hour, and no compassion in eternity, if while professing to be a Christian you sit idly by and let the people perish? You shall not dwell [illegible] them that are at ease in Zion! I hear people, while they have their arms folded,

[illegible]
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I [illegible]

Why, it is very easy to have that question decided. If you have no anxiety about the salvation of others you are not a Christian, and you might as well understand it now as ever. Go heartily to work and your doubts will be gone. Sickness will come to your neighbor; be there and pray for him. Death will come into some of the households: before they have time to put crape on the door-bell, be there to talk of Jesus, who is "the resurrection and the life." Here is a young man who wants to become a Christian, but he does not know how to start. His father cannot tell him; his mother cannot tell him. Take him by the arm, walk with him down the street, and before you leave him be sure his feet are on the road to heaven. You are not called to be king over a nation; you are not called to be admiral of a navy; you are not called to be general in an army; but God has given you the highest honor—he has put into your hands the keys of the kingdom. Be thou faithful unto death, and Christ will give thee a crown.

BRIEF NOTES

[illegible] thousand roubles [illegible] the Dukhobortski, [illegible] who have immigrated [illegible] Manitoba.

The Baptist Missionary Union has closed the financial year with a debt [illegible] closing of the books would have materially reduced, if it did not wipe out, the debt.

The late Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, who would have become President of the Baptist Union at the annual Assembly on April 24, had prepared his chairman's address, and the Rev. J. Owen, of Swansea, was asked to read it at the memorial service with which the Assembly opened.

The aggregate attendance at the centenary meetings of the Church Missionary Society in London numbered 120,000 persons, of which a large proportion were clergymen and their relatives from all parts of the country. No demonstration like it has been known in mission history.

A dispatch from Boston, Mass., states that the famous Old South Church in Copley Square, has formally abandoned its old creed, which contained the ultra-Calvinistic articles on election and reprobation. The creed has long been ignored, but was not formally repudiated until last week.

The American Baptist year-book for 1899 shows that the Baptist Churches in the United States are 42,893 in number, an advance of about 500 over the reported number of last year. There are 28,409 ministers, an increase of 1,054. The total membership is 4,141,995, an increase of 86,189.

The Lake Geneva Student Conference will begin its tenth annual session on June 16th. It is held under the direction of the College Department of the Y. M. C. A. at Lake Geneva, Wis. Among the speakers will be Rev. Maltbie D. Babcock, of Baltimore, Md.; Mr. John R. Mott, Mr. R. C Morse, Mr. Robert P. Wilder, and other well-known Christian workers. Full particulars may be obtained by addressing Mr. C. C. Michener, 705 Association Building, Chicago, Ill.

The American Board has undertaken work in the Ladrone Islands which were recently acquired by the United States from Spain. The Board's work in the South Pacific renders it specially adapted for this new field. It is unfortunate however, that just as the Board is thus extending its operations, it should have lost its schooner, the Robert W. Logan which has been wrecked on the Mortlock Islands. The Board is now endeavoring to raise $10,000 for a new vessel and $5,000 to begin the work on the Ladrones.
